A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. What do the figures represent that you have on that exhibit?

A. They represent the cost.

Q. The total cost of the road?

A. The total cost of the road and the amount of stock which was paid up on the road.

Q. And does not show the holdings of the State in the stock of that road?

A. No, sir; the holdings of the State on January 1, 1861, were $2,105,000 par.

Q. Why did you not show on that exhibit the amount expended by the State, to-wit, $2,105,000 for the stock of that road?

A. For the reason expressed in the foot note there, and that no claim was made by us for the consideration of this item in our final exhibit.

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. By us?

A. By West Virginia.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I see no explanation in the foot note to which you refer, such as you have given. The foot note reads as follows, if you call it a foot note, "The road was not operated at that time and no other value than the above was obtainable."

A. And further, "In 1869, the State gave its stock in this road to the Orange & Alexandria Road, forming the Orange, Alexandria & Manassas Gap Road, the condition being that shares of new stock should be issued to all outside holders of old," that is other than the State.

Q. You have not extended then in your summary of charges against Virginia the amount which she expended for stock in that road?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Why did you not do it?

A. For the reason that this road was not sold for anything, and was given away simply on the condition that the stockholders outside of the State should be taken care of, and therefore I did not put it on.

Q. Then you pursued a different method—

Mr. Lilly: I just want to make one statement, that we will have other data and evidence in reference to the value of this road as of the dates relied on.

Mr. Harrison: I would like to be able to pursue my cross-examination without any interruption. I do not intend to be captious, I have been as patient as anybody could be, but I would like to wind up with this witness without any interruptions. If you gentlemen want to put in some statements, just reserve them until I get through.

Q. Then you pursued a different method with respect to this road from other items that you have testified to, did you not?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Why did you do that?

A. For the reasons that I have just stated.

Q. Was there any other reason, than that this interest was given away, that you did not charge it to Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what was it?

A. I will state that in Class G, in the supplemental answer, pages 58, 59, and 60, these were classed as you might say as a special lot of securities of doubtful value, as is shown by the assumption that they were only worth 25 per cent. of their face; and for that reason I did not put in any value for this road or any of the other ones there, excepting the James River and Kanawha.

Q. Why did you except the James River and Kanawha and treat that differently from the rest of the items in Class G when it stood on the same footing?

A. Because it went right to a road where we could trace it thoroughly, and where we could trace its valuation and get some idea as to what it was worth and how much it was worth.

Q. Then you treated the James River and Kanawha—the State's interest in that company—different from the others because you could trace that item and have something to say about its value?

A. Yes, sir; and because it seemed worth while to trace it.

Q. Have you not charged to Virginia, in other instances, as of value on January, 1861, and January, 1863, the cost of her expenditures?

A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Then why did you do that in some cases and yet not charge the item of cost in the Manassas Gap Railroad Company?

A. I have just explained that once, that this being a class by itself in the supplemental answer, I did not do so save in this one case.

Q. Then you pursued a different principle when you ascertained the alleged value of these securities, from that which you pursued in respect to the Manassas Gap Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew what the cost of the State's expenditures in the Manassas Gap Railroad Company was, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was shown on the books, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you did not charge that to Virginia as its value in 1861 or 1863?

A. No sir, I did not.

Q. In other cases you knew no more than you did in respect to the Manassas Gap Railroad, that is, you found on the books what it had cost her to acquire an interest in them, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you charged that to her as cost in January, 1861, and June, 1863, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have no other reason for that than that the Manassas Gap Railroad was included in a class in the supplemental answer which stated that the values were uncertain?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the value of the Manassas Gap Railway any more uncertain than the other items which you charged at cost as representing their value in January, 1861, and June, 1863?

A. That I couldn't say.

Q. You knew the cost in each instance, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you did not know anything more than that the books showed the cost. Then why cannot you say?

A. I can say, but I did not say.

Q. You can say that you cannot say, was that your answer?

A. Let the stenographer read the answer.

(The witness' answer was repeated by the stenographer.)

Q. I have asked you to say.

A. Please repeat the question.

(Question repeated by the stenographer.)

The Witness: I think my answer covers that, your Honor. Does it or not?

Q. I will give you a specific instance. You have charged Virginia with $272,000 as the value of her interest in the Alexandria Canal Company stock as of January 1, 1861, that item representing the cost to Virginia. If it was proper to charge Virginia with $272,000, based upon the cost of her interest in that company, why wasn't it proper to charge her with $2,103,000 as the value of her interest in the Manassas Gap Railroad Company, that item representing the cost to her of her holdings in the latter company?

A. It would have been proper to have charged her with the cost of the Manassas Gap road.

Q. Then why didn't you do it if it was proper to do it?

A. For the reason that I have just stated, which perhaps may not be considered a sufficient one, that it was in this Class C, wherein they were prorated on a basis, and the statement is on page 59, "The evidence of the actual value of this stock as of that date has become so obscure that it was thought best, etc., to place a value thereon at the rate of 25 cents on the dollar," and for that reason I did not make any claim on the securities here outside of the one I have mentioned, the James River and Kanawha.

Q. You now say that it was proper to have charged the cost to the State of her interest in the Manassas Gap as its value in January, 1861, and June, 1863?

A. Yes, sir; to present that matter for consideration, as I have said before.

Q. But you did not do it?

A. I did not do it.

Q. No claim I believe you said being made for it because of its uncertain value?

A. Because of the statement, yes, sir, which I read from G.

Q. Now, if the State's interest should not have been charged to her as cost of her interest in that road, then you were wrong in charging the Alexandria Canal Company stock to her at cost, were you not?

Mr. Lilly: I object to the question, because he said it should have been charged, and now you assume that it should not have been, and you are reasoning from a false hypothesis.

Mr. Harrison: I thought you had a legal objection to make to my question, Mr. Attorney General. I would like to have a chance to have this witness answer my questions unaided.

The Master: Mr. Lilly suggests that your hypothesis is not justified by the facts as they exist.

Mr. Harrison: Absolutely justified.

The Master: Let us see what the question is.

(Question repeated by the stenographer.)

Mr. Lilly: Does the Master get my objection?

The Master: Yes; I am inclined to think that it does include to a certain extent perhaps an erroneous assumption, Mr. Harrison.

Mr. Harrison: If your Honor please, the witness has given at least two or three reasons for not charging to the State the cost value of her interest in the Manassas Gap road.

Mr. Lilly: But he said he should have done it.

Mr. Harrison: His reasons in the beginning were that it was not proper to do it, he could not tell anything about the value of it. The answer itself said the value was uncertain, and he had no means of fixing any value for that charge. Now it turns out that all of the other stock, or substantially all of it, has been charged at cost value, and when pressed on that line he says, to be consistent, that this doubtless should have been charged as the other was charged; it would have been a proper charge. But yet it was not made because—referring to the answer again. Now my question is that if it ought not to have been charged, then the other items similarly situated ought not to have been charged either.

The Master: But the trouble about it is this; he has not conceded on your cross-examination the item of $2,105,000 is as a matter of fact a proper charge. You finally reached that result with him. Now you are trying to measure his previous charge by what he now admits to be the proper basis in respect to this charge, and on the assumption that there is a distinction between the two.

Mr. Harrison: He has testified that he had applied a different principle.

The Master: He has admitted on your cross-examination, Mr. Harrison, that this was equally a proper charge. Now I think perhaps you are assuming.

Mr. Harrison: Haven't I got a right to assume if it is a proper charge—

The Master: Well, and you have asked.

Mr. Harrison: But he has not answered that.

The Master: The final result of your cross-examination of him was that this was a proper charge. He did not make it. He says that the $272,000 was also a proper charge, and you have now succeeded in drawing from him the admission that this item of $2,000,000 is likewise a proper charge. Now the question is if this charge was not made here the other charge should not have been made. That is practically what it comes down to. It is argumentative, but the fact about it is that the witness has admitted your hypothesis out from under you. He says himself now that although he did not make this charge that it was a proper charge. You cannot measure in my judgment the propriety of the two hundred and seventy-two thousand dollar charge on an assumption that in a sense is inconsistent with the admission of the witness. It is a technical objection, to be sure, but of course if they insist on it it seems to me that inadvertently you have asked an improper question.

Mr. Harrison: I do not think it would hurt if we got all the light we could on this subject.

The Master: I do not think it would either.

Mr. Harrison: I am testing his reasons and the accuracy of his knowledge.

The Master: And you have done it very well. But of course if they raise the question of the legal propriety of this question I shall have to pass on it as the rule requires.

Mr. Lilly: We do not care to raise the technical objection, but he says that the $2,105,000—

The Master: Your objection is that the question assumes a fact that is contrary to the admission that the witness has made, and on that assumption proposes to measure the previous charge. I think it tends to include an erroneous assumption, and for that reason I should feel bound, if the technical objection is made, it seems to me that the question is open to the criticism that in a sense in any event it assumes a hypothesis, as the basis of the question, that the witness himself does not admit.

Mr. Lilly: I might say that as to this item of the Manassas Gap, that this is not all the evidence that we rely upon.

The Master: My judgment is that it would not do any harm to have the witness answer the question, but if they raise a legal proposition that requires me to pass as a matter of law upon the form of the question, I feel bound to say that it seems to me that it is open to criticism.

Mr. Harrison: All right, if you do not want the question answered, let it go unanswered.

Q. Now we will take the third item in Class G, page 62 of the printed schedule—

The Master: Before we pass that item, I want to make an inquiry. I would like to know whether West Virginia still insists on this Manassas Gap item.

Mr. Harrison: He has not extended it as part of the claim.

The Master: I get the impression, as the result of Mr. Harrison's cross-examination, that it is not insisted on, and I would like to have a statement, either from Mr. Hillman or the counsel on the other side as to whether or not they do insist on it.

Mr. Lilly: We do insist on it, and we expect to bring in other evidence to show the materiality, and what it was worth as of those dates and simply because it has not been carried out on those dates, it is simply a tentative summary.

Mr. Harrison: My friend says that is only a tentative summary. I would like to know what an exhibit is—when it becomes final. Here are exhibits tendered here by this witness and sworn to, and now we are told on the cross-examination that they are tentative and mean nothing.

The Master: I do not quite so understand it.

Mr. Lilly: He did not say that.

The Master: I do not think he intended to convey that impression. I will say this, if either side gets in on this record a schedule or a statement as to which during the course of this hearing they see fit to change their base and take another attitude, I shall have to allow them to do it. Of course that depends altogether upon what sort of a criticism the schedule is subject to. Any position that is taken on either side here is a position that either side, if they see fit to reverse, they can reverse it. Now I think they are confined to this supplemental answer, but subject to that any schedule that they put in here, until this hearing is closed, they can amend it if they see fit, of course subject to the criticism of the other side. And that suggestion of course would apply to any position you take in relation to any of these questions. If you see fit to reverse your attitude in connection with them, you have the privilege of doing it. Now as to this, I was simply trying to make this matter certain in my own mind. I am frank to say that the result of Mr. Harrison's cross-examination, left upon my mind, was that they did not insist on this item.

Mr. Harrison: That is what the witness said.

The Master: Yes, that is what the witness said, but we understand of course, that the witness cannot conclude the other side; that while he is their expert, in the last analysis it is for them to say.

Mr. Harrison: They can repudiate him altogether if they want to.

The Master: So far as this item goes, I do not care what you call this schedule, whether you call it tentative or otherwise, but so far as I am concerned, the schedules they put in here are going to bind the other side unless they show me why they should not bind them.

Mr. Harrison: You have extended them all the latitude they could ask for.

The Master: Of course all we have now is this particular item, and as I understand now West Virginia does not waive this item but insists upon its receiving such weight as the evidence they have introduced may show it is entitled to.

Mr. Lilly: We have in some cases left the amount blank, because we were not in a position to get all the information. If it is worth a million dollars as of a certain date, if it is worth two hundred thousand, or if it is worth par, that is what it should be. Mr. Hillman may have gotten the idea, or counsel, originally, that because in 1869 it was turned over to the Orange & Alexandria, that we go back to the basic date of 1861 or 1863, and whether or not it was given away later, as both counsel on the other side have said, is not material.

The Master: As far as this item is concerned, you have it to meet.

Mr. Harrison: I have it to meet?

The Master: Yes; that is, they still insist upon it, they claim it.

Mr. Harrison: I do not know whether they do or not. If they do, I wish they would give me an opportunity of examining about it.

The Master: You have the statement of the witness of course as the result of your cross-examination, and I know the impression created on your mind, and you have an idea of the impression created on my mind, but of course I cannot hold that Mr. Hillman can conclude the defendant here.

Mr. Harrison: I do not ask for that, if your Honor please.

The Master: Of course when Mr. Hillman testifies about a fact, that is one thing; but when he undertakes to state what the position is, or what the attitude is, why that does not conclude them. If there are any admissions of that sort to be made, they are going to be made by the counsel for West Virginia, and just so with Virginia; that is, I would not take the statement of a witness on either side as binding upon either party as to such a matter.

Q. Do you know anything about the value of the State's interest in the Manassas Gap Railroad Company other than you have already testified to?

A. No, sir.

Q. The third item in our exhibit, on page 62, under Class G, is the Roanoke Valley Railroad.

By the Master:

Q. Did the Manassas Gap Railroad ever pay any dividends?

Mr. Harrison: He says he knows nothing about it.

Q. I simply ask you that one question, as far as you know.

A. I cannot recall.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. What do you give on your exhibit as the amount of the State's holdings in the Roanoke Valley Railroad?

A. $177,402, the common stock, and $130,000 preferred stock.

Q. That is a total of?

A. $307,402.

Q. You have got those figures stated under the column headed par value or cost to January 1st, 1861, have you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you extend them in your summary as a charge against Virginia?

A. No, sir.

Q. Why didn't you do that?

A. For the same reasons as stated at length under the Manassas Gap Road.

Q. Because of the statement made with reference to them in the answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have written opposite the Roanoke Valley stock "Given away." Where did you get that information from?

A. Act of the General Assembly, February 18, 1866, pages 333 and 334.

Q. Did you see an entry on the Journal about it?

A. Yes, sir; there was an entry which cancelled the stock.

Q. Do you know how the entry read?

A. It is an entry where stocks are written off as sold, abandoned or useless. That is the heading of the account to which they are written off.

Q. Did the journal entry to which you refer with reference to this stock read as follows: "To balance this account under Act passed February 8, 1866, Chapter 212, the road and all the property be sold to satisfy the mortgage and floating indebtedness?"

A. I do not know how the journal entry read.

Q. Were you or not instructed by counsel not to extend those items in your summary against Virginia?

A. That was my understanding, that none of the items outside of the James River and Kanawha should be extended to the summary.

Q. If they were treated however as you have treated the Alexandria Canal Company and other similar companies, they should be extended into the summary, should they not?

A. They should, yes, sir.

Q. In other words, they are just as much a proper charge against Virginia as the Alexandria Canal Company or the Roanoke Navigation Company and others, on the principle which you have charged the latter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, without taking them under inquiry one at a time. I will direct your attention to the fact that there are included in the Class C besides the items that we have just been considering, the Fredericksburg & Gordonsville Railroad, Richmond & York River Railroad, Rappahannock Company, Rivanna River Navigation Company, Smith's River Navigation Company, Slate River Company, Kempsville Canal Company, Hazel River Navigation Company, Goose Creek & Little River Navigation Company, Dragon Swamp Navigation Company and Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company and Potomac Company, all of them shown on your Exhibit No. 7-B, page 62 and page 63 of the printed schedule, with the amounts of the State's holdings in the respective companies opposite, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. None of those are extended in your summary of charges against Virginia?

A. No, sir.

Q. For the same reason that you have given with respect to the Manassas Gap Railroad and the Roanoke Valley Railroad?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what you have had to say with reference to the first two and the principles upon which you have fixed value applies to the latter as well as those two?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. Do you know as much about the value of the $272,000 item as you know about the value of these items you have just been inquired about?

A. No, sir; I have some slight further information on that subject which consisted of the amount for which this was disposed of, that is all.

Q. That relates to the $272,000 item?

A. Yes, sir; for which the $272,000 was disposed of.

Q. And what was that?

A. $754.47.

Q. I notice that you have here on this exhibit, on page 62, this notation, Act of General Assembly, February 18, 1866. I understood Mr. Harrison, a moment ago, to refer to an Act of Assembly dated February 8, 1866, and I inferred from the character of his question that he probably had in mind the same Act. What I want to get is whether they are identical or whether there were two Acts.

Mr. Harrison: I presume they are the same. I read from the Journal F.

The Master: I want to get the right date.

Mr. Harrison: I read from the Journal entry.

The Master: That said February 8?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get your date from, Mr. Hillman?

A. We got that date from looking at the Act itself.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. What do you say is the date?

A. February 18, 1866.

Mr. Harrison: We have it here February 8; he may be right about it. Somebody has made an error in putting down the date.

The Master: If it is the same Act, there is no question about it.

Mr. Harrison: The same Act, and the same pages are given. We have a transcript of the Act here dated February 8, but that may be a mistake. It may be February 18. I do not know that it is, but one or the other has made a mistake in taking down the date of the month.

Q. I observe on this exhibit of yours that you have opposite a great many of those lists of stocks that I have just read off "On hand." Take for example the Fredericksburg & Gordonsville Railroad Company. Do you mean by that statement on your exhibit to say that Virginia has that stock on hand?

A. According to their ledgers, yes, sir, they have.

Q. Did you see the stock.

A. No, sir; If you will look at the foot note on Exhibit 9 you will see "None of these securities representing the total, $1,028,-020.18, have been inspected by us."

Q. What authority have you for saying it is on hand other than that you find the cost item of it on the books?

A. That is the supposition, that if the article had been disposed of it would have been written off the books, the same as other items were.

Q. Were not those books discarded years ago?

A. Those books were rewritten I suppose or restarted later on, but there are no entries on the books where these appear showing that they have been disposed of in any way.

Q. Do you mean to say that those items are carried on in current books of the State of Virginia?

A. I do not know whether they are or not, I only know that they have not yet been written off the old ledgers; they still remain there.

Q. Well, I will take one of them just as an illustration, the Potomac Company, that seems to be one that you have added to that schedule that is not mentioned in the answer, on page 63.

A. I beg your pardon, it is mentioned in the answer in this way, that the Potomac Company—see page 59, supplemental answer—the Potomac Company and the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company are combined in one item on page 59 of the supplemental answer.

Q. Well, that is immaterial. That is included in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company?

A. Yes.

The Master: There is nothing in the supplemental answer that shows that.

Mr. Harrison: No, nothing at all, it is all down as the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company.

By the Master:

Q. How do you get at that fact, that it is included in that item?

A. For the reason that the canals were afterwards made one, but still carried on the books of Virginia as two items, the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal and the Potomac Company.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Have you before you the date of the charge on the books of Virginia of the Potomac Company?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. The original entry?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know when that was made, you are not able to testify now about that?

A. No, sir; we took it as shown on the page there.

Q. You saw nothing but the original entry?

A. We took the entry as shown on Ledger B, page 191, of the Board of Public Works.

Q. You have an exhibit numbered 10, the amount of taxes found—

The Master: As to that, I have just one or two inquiries I want to make.

By the Master:

Q. The only element of differentiation between the item of two hundred thousand odd dollars and the item Mr. Harrison has just been inquiring about, bearing upon the question of value, is this fact, that some time in 1872 the $272,000 par value of securities, was sold for $754, a little over two and a half cents on the dollar, am I right about that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the only element involving value that differentiates that item from these other items?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You find nothing anywhere that gives you any aid in reaching value in connection with these items that Mr. Harrison has been referring to, of any kind?

A. None whatever.

Q. And the only advantage that the $272,000 item has is that you do find something that indicates that at some date that was worth two and a half cents on the dollar?

A. It was sold for three cents per share of $100—I mean 30 cents for each $100, three-tenths of a cent. And from that was deducted the cost of sale.

Q. From the three per cent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was sold at 30 cents a share, or three per cent?

A. Three-tenths of one per cent.

Q. And you do not even find any indication of that sort in connection with any of these other items which have been inquired about?

A. Nothing at all.

Q. I notice that you have here in reference to Richmond and York River Railroad Company, sold by decree of court, just about the same time that this sale took place that we are now referring to. What was the amount of that sale?

A. The Richmond & York River Railroad Company was foreclosed under decree of Chancery Court and the stock wiped out.

Q. Then the stock was not sold?

A. No, sir.

Q. The road was sold, that is what you mean by that?

A. The road was sold and the stock was wiped out.

Q. The road was sold on a foreclosure sale, and the stock was of no value, it did not bring enough to pay the mortgage, I suppose?

A. It was wiped out.

Q. Now, then, Smith River Navigation Company is another item that you have in here that I do not find in the supplemental answer; it seems to have been abandoned. That was for $4,383.12.

Mr. Harrison: It is in the supplemental answer.

Q. What do you mean by abandoned, that is what was abandoned?

A. The whole item, the Smith River Navigation Company was abandoned, it ceased to exist.

Q. Do you mean the enterprise was abandoned?

A. Yes, sir; the enterprise was abandoned.

Q. So that the expenditure was worthless?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the way you understand it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that that item is evidently of no value whatever, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it abandoned, prior to January 1, 1861? That is all I want.

A. No, sir, it was subsequent to that date.

Q. Well, when?

A. It was in the 70's.

Mr. Harrison: September 30, 1873.

Q. What is the fact about this Slate River Company? That seems to have been marked abandoned. When was that abandoned?

A. That was on the same date, your Honor.

Q. How does that appear on the books, that is the fact that it was abandoned? What sort of an entry did you get that from?

A. It is stocks sold, abandoned and useless.

Q. Well, do you mean that this appears under a heading of stocks sold, abandoned and useless?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, what is there to indicate that this was abandoned instead of being either sold or useless, in the entry? I want to get at the detail of it to see just what the significance of it is.

A. Because you could tell from the fact of the journal entry itself that it was abandoned.

Q. What does the journal entry say?

A. The journal entry would show that it was abandoned.

Q. Well, does the journal entry in this particular case show that this enterprise was abandoned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it state any reason?

A. I do not recall that.

Q. What is the date of that journal entry?

A. That journal entry is the same as the other, 1873. I took that because it is upon the same ledger folio.

Q. Now, what do these two items represent that I have just been inquiring about, the Smith River Navigation Company and the Slate River Company, do they represent the amount of stock that the State held in corporations of that name, or do they represent public improvements that the State had originated and paid out that sum of money for?

A. It represents the stock held.

Q. Do you have any idea what the amount of the total stock was in each instance?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or how long the companies had been in existence?

A. I made no investigation of it, none.

Q. Or when it was originally organized?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, you have treated that practically as of no value?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you consider it as of no value, or do you think it has value?

A. I do not think it has any value.

Q. Did it have any value on January 1, 1861, in your judgment?

A. Yes, sir; it might have some value in 1861.

Q. Well, how much?

A. I could not say, sir.

Q. But on what do you predicate your statement that it had value on January 1, 1861? Is that a mere conjecture or have you anything definite on which to base it? What I want is to get some information about it, so as to see what weight to give to it.

A. That is a conjecture, your Honor, that in 1861, owing to the fact that railroads were infrequent, that stocks of navigation and river companies would have a value, from being in operation. That is the sole basis of saying that I thought it had a value on January 1, 1861.

Q. But you have not any data that enables you to make any definite statement about it?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Whether it is worth five cents on the dollar or fifty cents on the dollar?

A. I have not.

Q. Or nothing on the dollar?

A. I have not.

Q. That is simply your impression of the value that may have existed at that time, for the reasons that you give?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that also true of the Slate River Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Here is the Dragon Swamp Navigation Company. That is also abandoned. Does that also appear about the same time?

A. Yes, sir; it is on the same entry, Journal D, page 176.

Q. Have you any information that enables you to express any opinion as to whether that was worth anything on January 1, 1861?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any information that enables you to express any opinion as to the value of any of these stocks that appear on pages 62 and 63, on January 1, 1861?

A. No, sir; I have made no investigation on that line.

Q. And then you cannot give me any opinion on it?

A. No, sir.

The Master: That is all.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I started to inquire about your Exhibit No. 10 on the blue print, under the caption of amount of taxes, fines, etc., paid by West Virginia Counties to the State of Virginia, after June 20th, 1863.

The Master: What is the page number?

Mr. Holt: Page 50.

Q. When did those taxes accrue and become payable? Prior to January, 1861?

A. Some of them prior to January, 1861, and some of them after January 1, 1861.

Q. And they were paid when?

A. In the period between January 20, 1863, and April 1, 1865.

The Master: What page of the supplemental answer sets this up Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: It is in the summary on page 60.

The Witness: In the supplemental answer at the top of page 61.

The Master: Oh, collected from West Virginia counties; yes.

Mr. Lilly: On page 60 is the reading in regard to that, "In addition to the foregoing," etc.

The Master: It not appearing in the recapitulation, I rather supposed it would not be found there.

The Witness: Your Honor, those corrected pages 13 have been finished by my stenographer.

Q. The largest item you have on that list is $189,643.31, said to be general taxes assessed after January 1, 1861. Do I understand that you took that as a charge against Virginia as of January 1, 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir; that should be in there, although the taxes had accrued subsequent to that date. But this is a little different from the former ones, from the other ones; and being a direct collection of taxes from West Virginia, I have entered it on both summaries.

By the Master:

Q. You mean by that the summary of 1861 and the summary of 1863?

A. Yes, sir; 1861 and 1863.

Q. The question now is, whether if this matter is settled and adjusted as of January 1, 1861, whether taxes assessed and collected after that date are a proper charge in that settlement.

The Master: That is what you mean, is it not, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir; that is my question.

The Master: That is the question. If it is adjusted as of January 1, 1861, are the taxes that were assessed and afterwards collected, or assessed and collected after that date, a proper item to take into account in adjustment as of that date. That is your question, is it?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Why?

A. For the reason that when you have made your adjustment of 1861, here comes an item that Virginia simply takes. It has got to be considered somewhere, no matter what the date of the adjustment is, whether it is 1861, 1862 or 1863.

By the Master:

Q. Well, if the statement is of a certain date, how is it that items that occur after that date have got to be considered?. That is what Mr. Harrison would like to know and what I would like to know. If the settlement is as of a particular date, how is it that matters that occur after that date are taken into account in the settlement as of that date?

A. Your Honor, it might not be considered as due on that date or as of that date. Perhaps I do not make myself clear. Having made the settlement of all these items which are due on January 1, 1861, there then occurs an item where Virginia has collected from West Virginia counties a large amount of money, which if the settlement is made as of January 1, 1861, and no mention made of that subesequent collection, it will be immediately lost sight of, and West Virginia will not have its proper credit. In order that it may not be lost sight of, in any event, having made the data for this settlement of January 1, 1861, I have mentioned that matter and put it in toto against West Virginia.

Q. The real question then I take it is this—

The Master: I do not want to take the examination out of your hands, Mr. Harrison, but the real question, I take it, is this—

Mr. Holt: Isn't the real question one of law?

The Master: Certainly.

Q. But the real question I suppose is this, if you were requested to state the debit and credit side of this account up to January 1, 1861, would you include items that accured after that date? That is the substance of Mr. Harrison's question.

A. No, sir, I would not.

The Master: Of course that does not settle the question; it is a question of law; but as a matter of accounting it is reasonably obvious that if you state the account as of a certain date that ends it, and that is what Mr. Harrison is trying to get into the record I take it.

Mr. Harrison: I am not dealing with a question of law but a question of accounting.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You have denominated those various items as taxes assessed by Virginia in West Virginia counties and paid by West Virginia counties to the State of Virginia. Please tell me how it happened that West Virginia counties were assessed for taxes by Virginia and paid money to Virginia in settlement of taxes during the period mentioned.

A. I don't know; they simply did and they were simply assessed and paid.

Q. Have you a list of the counties?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. And the amounts collected from each county?

A. Yes, sir; I have it in detail from each county. I have, your Honor, prepared a list of the counties—

Q. You prepared a list of the counties upon which you predicate this statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Lilly: And the amount paid by each county?

The Witness: I have not it in that form, but I have it in sufficient form to make that statement.

Mr. Harrison: I will not wait for that.

The Master: Do you want that put in later?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, I will see. I will let him check it up with him.

The Master: I am inclined to think I would like to have that in.

Mr. Lilly: I think we would too, your Honor. We will put that in later.

The Master: Because otherwise it is a trifle indefinite; Mr.

Harrison wants the counties upon which you predicate this computation. That detail must be submitted.

The Witness: I will submit that later, your Honor.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You say you cannot give any explanation of how it happened that West Virginia counties were paying taxes to Virginia during the period you mention there from 1861 to 1863 when they were assessed and paid from 1863 to 1865?

A. No explanation further than perhaps to state that these counties perhaps recognized their fealty to the old State of Virginia rather than West Virginia, though they were included, some of them subsequently and some at the time, in West Virginia.

Q. West Virginia did not become a state until June 20th, 1863, did she?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then all of the counties were counties of Virginia, were they not?

A. They were counties of Virginia and have been denominated West Virginia counties. They were then part of the State of Virginia until the new State was created.

By the Master:

Q. June 20, 1863?

A. Yes, sir; but I have noted them as being West Virginia counties to distinguish them from the regular Virginia counties.

Q. You mean that these counties that you have given were counties that afterwards became part of West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these taxes assessed and collected prior to 1863?

A. They were collected after 1863.

Q. Were they assessed prior to 1863?

A. Some of them were and some of them were not.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. But your exhibit shows that they were all assessed prior to 1863?

The Master: No, it does not. He shows a period June 20, 1863, to April 1, 1865.

Mr. Harrison: That is my recollection of his testimony, that they were all assessed prior to 1863, and were paid after that date and by 1865.

The Master: I was not clear about that and that is why I was inquiring.

The Witness: The bulk of them were assessed after January 1, 1861.

By the Master:

Q. Yes, true; but prior to June 20, 1863 were they assessed during that period? Of course it is after January 1st, 1861, now, but what I want to get is to get this a little closer.

A. I don't know the exact amounts. I can give that in my detail though.

Mr. Holt: You do not get the Master's question.

The Witness: Perhaps I do not.

Mr. Holt: Were any of these assessments made after June 20, 1863?

The Witness: Yes, sir; I think they were.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. If you think they were I will be glad if you will be a little more specific and tell us how much.

A. I cannot tell without examining.

By the Master:

Q. You will furnish a statement showing that?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I would like to ask you if these counties that were assessed and taxed by Virginia up to June 20, 1863, or even if you found any of them assessed after that, and which paid taxes to Virginia between 1863 and 1865, if they were not within the jurisdiction of and under the government of the State of Virginia?

Mr. Lilly: Isn't that a matter of law?

Mr. Harrison: It might be a matter of law. I am not asking him for any opinion on a question of law. I would like to know if he knows that fact.

The Master: I suppose he may state the fact.

A. Yes, sir: they were under the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia, I believe, as far as my knowledge of it goes, up to June 20, 1863.

By the Master:

Q. I would like to know upon what source you rely for your answer to that question. How is it possible for you to have original knowledge of the existing condition of things away back in 1863? I have no doubt you have a reason satisfactory to your own mind. I would like to know where you get the source of your opinion.

A. Because the State of West Virginia was not formed until June 20, 1863.

Q. Then it comes down to this, that it is not any information at all, so far as you are concerned, but that you assume that because the State of West Virginia was not organized until June 20, 1863, that the full territory of old Virginia was still within its jurisdiction, and therefore these counties were within its jurisdiction, is that it?

A. That is it.

Q. Then you do not know anything more about it than we do, but I wanted to know exactly what your sources of information were.

Mr. Harrison: He could have found all that information in the original record, where these counties are set forth by name and which were subject to the government of the State of Virginia at Richmond.

Mr. Lilly: We want to have the amount collected after June 20, 1863, that is the purpose of that charge.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. If you were balancing accounts between these counties and the State of Virginia you would have to know how much Virginia spent in maintaining the government in those counties, wouldn't you, to balance that against the contributions that they made in taxes to her treasury?

A. Yes, sir; that would be an important point.

Q. And that you have not ascertained, have you?

A. I have put in no exhibits on that point of the expenses and taxes.

Q. Your examination showed who collected taxes in those days, didn't it? The Sheriffs of the counties collected them?

A. The Sheriffs and County Clerks.

By the Master:

Q. Would it be proper to take your total charge without qualification in the absence of information as to the public expense in the territory, in your judgment as a matter of accounting?

A. Yes, sir, it would.

Q. As covering the period between January 1, 1861, and June 20, 1863.

A. No, sir; not that period, but it would for the period which we have mentioned here, June 20, 1863, to April, 1865.

Q. But the information you have got here does not separate and segregate anything. I cannot tell anything about it, as to when, how or where. With the information you have got before me now you do not think it would be proper to take in account this charge without qualification, without the knowledge of the expense involved in the administration of these counties, as I understand it, between January 1, 1861, and June 20, 1863?

A. No, sir; not from the information which is on file.

Q. That is what I mean.

Mr. Lilly: I want to ask counsel on the other side if it is contended by Virginia that she expended money in the West Virginia counties after June 20, 1863, in administering affairs of government in the West Virginia counties?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, Mr. Lilly. As a historical fact there were a number of counties, some ten or twelve, that were included on paper as part of the territory of West Virginia that remained within the Confederate lines and subject to the government of the old State of Virginia up to the close of the war, and the only government maintained in those counties was the government of the State of Virginia, and whatever there was contributed in taxes was just like any other county in the State. But when the war ended they were then in fact under the jurisdiction of the State of West Virginia.

The Master: Was there not some question about the line at one time and how many counties were included?

Mr. Lilly: Only as to three counties. It is decided in the 11th Wallace.

The Master: As to those things, you must get the facts on the record. Of course as it stands here I am just a little uncertain.

Mr. Harrison: All those facts are in the original record, and in the schedules that were furnished they were set forth, and the assessed values were taken account of with reference to Confederate currency in those counties, West Virginia getting the benefit of the scale of Confederate value. It will all come to your Honor if you will run your eye over it but it is all cold for the present.

Mr. Lilly: The fact that Virginia collected from the West Virginia counties after June 20, 1863, $224,799.63 is not in issue is it?

The Master: You mean here?

Mr. Lilly: Yes.

The Master: I do not understand that they raise any question as to the figures and computations. I am going to put that general question covering all these schedules when we get around to them. The effect of the figures is one thing and the actual expenses is another. Of course it is easy enough to see that taxes that may have been assessed between January 1, 1861, and June 20, 1863, and that were assessed after June 20, 1863, there may have been a very profound distinction as to what the facts were. I suppose that the jurisdiction in which the territory is, is subject to discussion during that period, and of course they are entitled to the benefit of the public expenditures, and if they did not happen to be collected during the period, the State is assumed to have gone on and discharged its public obligation, and it may not have collected revenues necessary to pay the expense of these obligations until a later period, notwithstanding that the taxes assessed during a certain period might perhaps be properly considered applicable to the public expenses during the same period. Of course I do not know how all these things may work out, but what I want is details and facts showing all these things, and then you can reach your conclusion, and your schedules I understand show that?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. I would like to have you say as far as you know when these taxes were assessed.

A. We will have the details in a few minutes and I can county them, put them by counties in a very few minutes more.

The Master: I am going to suspend in five or ten minutes or if it will be more convenient for Mr. Harrison I will suspend now.

Mr. Harrison: No.

The Master: I will go on then until four o'clock

The Witness: I think we can have them in about ten or fifteen minutes.

The Master: It will be better to have them right at this point, and if they want to pursue it on cross-examination it will be right in the place where the subject matter appears in the record.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Bearing upon this question I would like to inquire if you determined through your investigation or inquired into the question of whether Virginia, the old State, expended any money on works of internal improvement in West Virginia after January, 1861. I refer particularly, as that may have come under your notice, to the Covington & Ohio Railroad, and you may confine your answer to that work. I am speaking now of after January 1st, 1861.

The Master: And the territory now within the State of West Virginia?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir; the territory which became a part of the State of West Virginia.

A. No, sir; I made no investigation regarding that point.

Q. Your analysis of the disbursements by the Board of Public Works, January 1st, 1861, and June 20th, 1863, would show the expenditures the State of Virginia had made on that work, would it not?

A. No, sir; it would not.

Q. Do you mean to say you just took the totals?

A. No, sir; I did not take Covington & Ohio at all.

Q. I am talking now about the cash account of the Board of Public Works.

A. I thought you were still on the Covington & Ohio.

Q. I said, would not your analysis of the cash account of the Board of Public Works, January 1st, 1861, and June 20th, 1863, show whether any sum had been expended after January 1st, 1861, on the Covington & Ohio Railroad.

A. I say I do not know. It would not show it.

By the Master:

Q. What is that that does not show it?

A. My analysis would not show it.

The Master: I understand. I did not know but what you referred to the books as not showing it.

Mr. Harrison: No, all I wanted to know was whether he analyzed the cash account of the Board of Public Works as of those dates. If he did not analyze it of course he could not tell.

The Witness: No, sir, I did not.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now will you please state the total amount, according to your schedules, of West Virginia's claim as a set-off against her liability to Virginia as ascertaned by the decree of the Court fixing the principal sum for which she was liable?

Mr. Hogg: As of what date, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Either January 1st, 1861, or June 20th, 1863, or any other date.

A. January 1st, 1861, total offered for consideration is $29,611,784.62; 23 1-2 per cent. of which is $6,958,769.39; to which, if we should add the item which is under discussion, as shown upon Exhibit No. 10, $224,799.63, would make a total of $7,183,569.02. This is the total shown by the summary; it does not include any proportion of the items on pages 61, 62 and 63 of the printed record.

Q. Is the statement you have just rendered us on the basis of the changes you have made since your cross-examination began?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your January, 1861, schedule?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those changes increased the amount of your summary several millions of dollars, didn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you give us the amount, just approximately?

A. I can give it to you exactly in a moment; $3,547,919.08, subject to the application of course of the 23⅓ per cent; that is the total gross charge was increased that much.

Q. The figures you have just given us I do not mean the last figures, but the statements you have just made show that West Virginia's claim against Virginia is $7,183,569.02. Does that mean as of January 1, 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that final? In other words, can we rely upon that now as final?

A. No, sir; I have stated that it does not include any items from pages 61, 62 and 63.

Q. Are we to understand then that you cannot give us a final statement of West Virginia's claim against the State of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir; I can.

Q. You say you can?

A. Yes, sir; I can.

Q. Well, please give it to us.

A. The amount to be prorated on the basis of 23⅓ per cent. is $31,716,784.62, which when prorated, will give as the West Virginia proportion $7,453,443.48; to which, if we add the items on Exhibit No. 10 of the present record, viz., $224,799.63, will give us a total claim of West Virginia of $7,678,243.11.

Q. How have you increased the item since your last answer?

A. By adding the amount of the State's holding in the Manassas Gap Railway Company of $2,105,000, to the totals which have already been mentioned.

Q. Have you added any other items in Class G?

A. None, outside of the James River and Kanawha and the Manassas Gap.

Q. Why didn't you add the rest of them if you added those?

A. Because I was instructed by the attorneys for West Virginia that no claim would be made on account of the other items.

By the Master:

Q. Now what is included in the other items?

A. Page 59—

Q. I would like to have those mentioned right there.

A. Roanoke Valley Railroad Company—

Q. Just make the statement this way: That is correct, I was instructed by the attorneys for West Virginia to state that no claim has been made on account of the following items.

A. I was instructed by the attorneys for West Virginia to say that no claim has been made on account of the following items, pages 62 and 63 of the printed record: Asset No. 3, Roanoke Valley Railroad Company stock—shall I mention the amounts, your honor?

Q. No, you need not bother about that.

A. Asset No. 4, Fredricksburg & Gordonsville Railroad Company stock.

Item No. 5, Richmond & York River Railroad Company, stock.

Item No. 6, Rappahannock Company stock.

Item No. 7, Rivanna River Navigation Company stock.

Item No. 8, Smith's River Navigation Company stock.

Item No. 9, Slate River Company stock.

Item No. 10, Kempsville Canal Company stock.

Item No. 11, Hazel River Navigation Company stock.

Item No. 12, Goose Creek & Little River Navigation Company stock.

Item No. 13, Dragon Swamp Navigation Company stock.

Item No. 14, Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company stock and Potomac Company stock.

Mr. Holt: We may be wrong, your Honor, but we have always looked upon that as a mere junk pile, that part of it.

The Master: You are merely throwing it off the sidewalk now.

Mr. Holt: Well, yes.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Am I correct now in saying that you have stated West Virginia's claim against the State of Virginia as of January 1, 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To be $7,678,243.11?

A. If you will, please make that 244.02?

Q. Then the correct figures are $7,678,244.02?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you say is final and not subject to change? We can rely upon that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now what is the amount of her claim as of June 20, 1863?

The Master: Before you leave that I would like to make this suggestion, the schedule that I have, page 51, does not agree with this aggregate, and I simply suggest that they take this back and revise it, and hand me a schedule that is correct, with the final amount.

The Witness: Page No. 51 is the page we are just coming to.

The Master: I see, I was confusing that for the time being as 1861.

A. While we are computing this, I will just say that I made a slight correction on account of a clerical error in this computation, and if it is all right I will just give the stenographer the corrected figures for that, instead of the other figures which are put in. It should be $7,678,244.02. Now the total to be prorated upon the basis of 23¼ per cent to West Virginia amounts to $23,478,100.77; 23½ per cent. of which is $7,867,353.68; to which if we add the total of Exhibit No. 10, the tax collection exhibit, $224,799.63, we would have a total of West Virginia credits of $8,092,153.31, as shown on page 51 of the blue print.

The Master: That does not agree with mine, so just please revise it and I will put it on my file.

Mr. Harrison: Every time he figures it it gets bigger.

The Master: I guess you are getting the atmosphere so chilly that this snow ball rolls up.

The Witness: Your Honor, may I have ten minutes to get that tax matter straightened out?

The Master: I think perhaps what you had better do is to straighten that out by to-morrow morning. Take your time and straighten it out between now and to-morrow morning. I would rather do that than to delay here, and let them go along with their examination.

Q. You have not amended your figures since you gave $8,092,153.31 as the amount of West Virginia's claim against Virginia for June 20, 1863, have you?

A. No, sir.

Q. And that is final and not subject to change?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you taken any account in your computations of the amount of cash that West Virginia received upon its organization from the State of Virginia?

A. No, sir; I have filed no exhibits on that point.

Q It is all in the original record. You are aware of that fact, are you not, that all of that information is contained in the original record?

A. I am not aware of that. I am aware of the fact that there was some money passed.

Q. You are aware of the fact, however, that there was some money that did pass to West Virginia on the organization?

Mr. Lilly: Can you give us some record of where that appears?

Mr. Harrison: Not now, but I can do so.

Q. You have taken no account of that, you say?

A. I have not taken it into account.

Mr. Harrison: Plaintiff's Exhibit G—1, page 819 of the original record, will show the payments to West Virginia on her organization, by the State of Virginia. Now an exhibit was handed us this morning, if your Honor please, a paper, I do not know whether it is an exhibit or not, undertaking to show some fact in connection with the cash account of one of the railroads, the profits, I have forgotten now how it was described—I think it was the running account of the Farmer's Bank. We have not had an opportunity to examine that, and I reserve the right to cross-examine on that when I have examined it. With that statement, and with the further understanding that if we should find that we have omitted something that we want to inquire about, why I assume we may cross-examine further—

The Master: Yes, anything that occurs to you at any time that you want to examine about, you may do so.

Mr. Holt: Now, your Honor, we are in this situation with respect to the re-direct examination; we have made some notes, and the cross-examination has been quite lengthy, and we would like to have a little opportunity to go over what we have, so that we may press into a small compass any queries we may have to make. I expect we could make some time even by letting it go until morning. I think half a dozen questions will cover what we want if I understood what he said, but of that I am not quite positive.

The Master: You are not in a position to make any progress on other lines?

Mr. Holt: I do not believe I am. Here, by way of illustration, this was the thing that I had in mind; I have not looked at it—

I have looked it over, but I want to think about it a little bit.

The Master: What have you to say as to that suggestion, brother Harrison?

Mr. Holt: I think we could promise to be through with Mr. Hillman in the morning in three-quarters of an hour or an hour's time, and then hurry on to the matters outlined this morning.

The Master: I think both sides ought now, so far as it is possible, to finish the examination of Mr. Hillman, because it does not seem to me that he ought to be kept here under this embarrassment any longer, and of course conditions might develop that would make it absolutely neccessary for Mr. Hillman to leave the hearing at once. Of course we hope that that won't be the case, but in any event if it is feasible I think both sides ought to get through with Mr. Hillman at the earliest possible moment, on his account and also on our account. I do not want to have the hearing postponed again on account of any inability to reach Mr. Hillman. What have you to say about that, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: I have no disposition in the world to make any objection to Judge Holt's request.

Adjourned to September 9, 1914, at 9:30 A. M.

BEFORE THE MASTER,

Richmond, Virginia, September 9th, 1914.

Present: The same counsel as on yesterday.

The Master: Mr. Hillman submits this morning and makes a part of the record his detail schedule in relation to the gross item of $224,000 for taxes collected from West Virginia counties, and I would suggest in relation to that that if there is any cross-examination, if the counsel can in looking it over for a moment or two determine whether there is, if there is any cross-examination in relation to that I will have that take place before Judge Holt goes on with his re-direct examination, so as to have the whole cross-examination together.

The schedule submitted by Mr. Hillman is as follows:

Amounts of Taxes assessed by the State of Virginia and paid by West Virginia Counties to the State of Virginia from June 20, 1863, to April, 1865.

Continuation of the examination of

CONWAY W. HILLMAN.

By The Master:

Q. This schedule, Mr. Hillman, does not separate the assessments unless it be a fact that none of these assessments were made prior to 1863. If that be the fact, the schedule is all right, but if any of these assessments as to which the details are shown were made between 1861 and June 20th, 1863, that ought to appear. Were they, as a matter of fact?

A. No, sir.

Q. All made after June 20th, 1863?

A. Yes, sir, that is the 1863 taxes are payable in September, 1863; I do not know the date of the absolute levy of the taxes.

Mr. Hogg: We will put the statute in on that so that your Honor may have the benefit of the statute as to when they are payable.

Q. These items do not include any taxes that were assessed prior to the assessment for 1863?

A. No, sir. I call your attention, your Honor, to one item, which is the last item, delinquent taxes and forfeited lands, no dates, being judgments on bond of Commissioner of Delinquent and Forfeited Lands. I do not know the dates of those, and therefore I have entered them as a special item, and they are subject to any criticism because they have no dates on them.

Q. When do they appear to have been paid; that is, when were the redemptions made?

A. They were paid in 1864.

Q. The chances are at least even that those taxes were assessed prior to 1863. I do not know what the machinery is.

A. Yes.

The Master: We cannot tell until we get the statutes. Of course they pursued the method of delay, I suppose, and then sold in time to preserve the liens and all that. However, that is a matter for cross-examination. Do you wish to cross-examine in relation to that now, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: I do want to examine him on that, but I do not know whether I will have a chance at this moment. I expect I had better wait, if your Honor please.

The Master: Under those circumstances, if it is agreeable,

Judge Holt, I would like you then to proceed with your re-direct examination.

Mr. Holt: I have nothing to ask on that particular schedule unless they have. If they have any cross-examination, then I will have some examination.

The Master: Take up your re-direct examination, gentlemen, then.

The Master: I want the transcript of the proceedings of yesterday, because when we get on to it I want to refer back to Judge Holt's statement as to the character of proof, etc., so as to follow him along when he gets around to that branch of the case.

Mr. Holt: We have made a memorandum, your Honor, of the outline, which I will hand you by the time I get to it.

The Master: All right.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, upon what theory and for what purpose were your schedules heretofore filed prepared?

A. Book value.

Q. Do you mean by that for the purpose of showing the book value?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the books of a corporation be correctly and truly kept, what should the book value represent?

A. The actual value of the security in question.

Q. That is bound to be so, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you understand by market value?

A. That is what the stock has been selling for.

Q. And market quotations then represent the sales, do they, or the prices at which sales were made?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In making up your schedules for the purpose of ascertaining book values, did you take into consideration dividends declared and paid?

A. No, sir, I did not. I made an entry, however, of amounts of dividends declared and paid, on the sheets whereon I showed book value.

By The Master:

Q. That is, you have a statement of the dividends independently of the statement showing book value?

A. Yes.

The Master: That is what you meant, Judge, is it not?

Mr. Holt: Yes, they did not enter into the book value computation; they were put there for any purpose it was decided that we might want to use them for.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Suppose that a stock should be considered at par that pays a six per cent. dividend, what premium would it bear upon a seven per cent. dividend?

A. 16 2-3 per cent., or the stock would be worth $116.66 for every hundred dollars worth.

Q. Upon a 7½ per cent. dividend?

A. Each $100 share of stock would be worth $125.

Q. A share of the par value of $100?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What an eight per cent. dividend paying stock?

A. A share at par value of $100 would be worth $133.33.

Q. May the market value be the same as the—

The Master: Judge, do I understand from him that that in his judgment would be a demonstration of its selling price, or what would be the price computed upon that basis?

The Witness: The price computed upon that basis.

The Master: That is what I supposed you had in mind.

Mr. Holt: Yes.

Q. May the market value be the same as the book value of the stock?

A. It may; yes, sir.

Q. Is it necessarily the same?

A. No, sir.

Q. It may be above it or below it, as I understand it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Upon what does the market value of stock depend as distinguished from its book value?

A. It depends upon the demand and supply of the stock, and the conditions of the money market at that time.

Q. What do you mean by market quotations on stock?

A. I mean quotations which are made from day to day on stocks which are actively dealt in and are, you might say, on the market for continuous sale and purchase.

Q. Are they or are they not subject to certain fluctuations, market values?

A. They are, yes, sir.

Q. May those fluctuations take place without any change in the real value of the property?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. May not, by way of illustration, Northern Pacific be 100 in the forenoon and only 40 in the afternoon, without any change in the plant or earnings of the property or company?

A. Yes, that could be.

The Master: I suppose those are matters of common knowledge, when we come right down to it.

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

The Master: That is, at least I am situated where I hear more or less of that; and I happen to be the assignee of a bankrupt brokerage concern.

Q. Upon cross-examination yesterday, Mr. Hillman, with reference to your schedules upon the subject of banks your attention was called to a report of one of the banks accompanying the balance sheet that had been utilized by you, wherein the statement was made that there were $100,000, as I recall it, of bad debts and $50,000 of doubtful debts. Do I get the amount correct?

The Master: I do not think you get the amount correct. I suppose your question is general. I think the doubtful debts was the largest item and the bad debts the smallest; but, however, that is near enough I suppose for the purposes of your question.

Q. Well, take the Farmers' Bank of Virginia, the bad debts seem to have been reported at $70,000 and the doubtful at $40,000. Now, was there anything in the bank balance utilized by you to show whether those debts were included in the asset column?

A. Nothing.

Q. There was no item in the balance sheet designated then either as bad or as doubtful debts?

A. No, sir.

Q. What would be the natural presumption if an officer would accompany his balance sheet with a report showing bad debts, as to what had been done with the bad debts, in banking?

A. The presumption would be that they had been charged off from his assets.

Q. How about the doubtful debts?

A. They would be probably allowed to remain.

Q. For what reason?

A. For the reason that they are a possible asset, and until they become worthless it is not probable that they would be charged off.

Q. In other words, the very next year they might become good?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they would not be charged off until they had been determined to be bad?

A. That is the presumption, yes, sir.

Q. Now, in your schedules upon these same banks, in the balance sheet utilized by you, or balance sheets, there is an item, profits of institution or profits of the institution. What is the exact language used?

A. Profits of the institution.

Q. And you stated on yesterday upon cross-examination, as I recall, that if the sum of money set down under that heading represented the whole of the profits of the institution for that year, that then the dividends declared were in excess of the profits named. Was that true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you since examined that account or balance sheet and analyzed the item profits of the institution with a view of determining whether or not it was a running account?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. What conclusion did you reach upon that subject?

A. That the account headed profits of the institution is a running account.

Q. Have you prepared a schedule at the request of the Master in an effort to demonstrate that position?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

The Master: That schedule is already in.

Mr. Holt: It was not marked in any way. I want to have him explain it now, if he can.

The Master: If it is in the record, I would not duplicate it, if it is in the record already.

Mr. Holt: That is true.

The Master: Unless the stenographers have failed to follow my directions.

Mr. Holt: I want to get it marked in some way; I do not want to duplicate it at all.

The Master: I have no objection to your marking the schedule, but I would not duplicate it in the record.

Mr. Holt: That was not my purpose.

Q. Was that schedule filed by you on yesterday?

A. Yes, sir, it was.

Q. Do you recall whether or not it was marked as any particular exhibit?

A. I do not think it was marked, I do not recall any such marking.

The Master: It was not marked. You may have it marked, it you want to.

Q. This exhibit covered how many of these banks?

A. Two of them.

Q. What were they?

A. The Farmers' Bank of Virginia and the Exchange Bank of Virginia.

Q. Will you mark this exhibit Defendant's Exhibit No. 13?

A. I file this and mark it Defendant's Exhibit No. 13, 1861.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 13, 1861. September 9th, 1914, C. B.

Q. What do you mean now by a running account, Mr. Hillman?

A. An account to which the profits of the institution would be credited from time to time, and to which there would be made charges on account of dividends paid or on account of bad debts charged off, or doubtful debts charged off, if any such would be charged in the course of their business.

Q. And it is debited with charges from time to time?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: He does not go quite so far as to say that, he infers the existence of an account of that sort.

Mr. Holt: I am speaking now of a running account generally. I am going to take up the running account as applied to this bank directly.

The Master: I understand that as a result of his computation he assumes there must have been a running account; he never has seen a running account; but on that assumption he assumes also that the running account contains these items back and forth. Am I not correct about that? He stated on his examination the other day that he had never seen any such account; he now assumes that it existed; and if it existed it had these features.

Mr. Lilly: The Judge was asking him about a running account generally.

Mr. Holt: And then I wanted to fit this to his description of a running account.

Q. Mr. Hillman, will you take Exhibit No. 13 and in a brief manner, and according to your own ideas, explain how this exhibit demonstrates the profits of the institution to have been a running account.

A. Yes, sir. Farmers' Bank of Virginia, January 1st, 1859, as shown on page 24 of document 14, the report which we have been considering in the banks, it shows that this bank had a surplus and dividend fund of $343,477.53, and had profits of the institution $166,695.72, a total available for the declaration of dividends or applicable to the declaration of dividends of $510,173.25. It has also been shown, according to our bank exhibit, page ——.

The Master: If there is nothing in this, Judge, except mere repetition of what is in the schedule, why doesn't it cover your whole ground to have him state that the schedule accurately gives his computations, unless you desire some elaboration of the schedule? If he is simply reading it, we have got it all in the record now. It does not help me any to have him repeat it, unless you have something in addition to what he has already explained.

Mr. Holt: I thought perhaps his going over it would suggest something to me and suggest some question that you might want to ask in connection with it.

The Master: I have already gone over it as far as I am concerned. I think I understand fully his modus operandi; but still I do not want you to limit your examination, except it does not seem to me that it will help any by simply having him read the schedule. If he has something in addition to what he has on the schedule, that might be important, but so far as reading is concerned, I have already read it and his re-reading it does not do me any good.

Mr. Holt: My object was to take only one bank. I did not intend to prolong it by going into the Exchange Bank, which is the same thing.

The Master: I do not object to your proceeding, Judge, in your own way, except I was simply making that suggestion in the interests of saving time. Why won't this examination do, Judge—excuse me if I have disturbed your train of thought—I was going to say why would not this cover it? Of course he has this and I have it, and if there is anything by way of explanation that it is important to add in addition to what he has stated, why does not that cover your whole ground? Still, if you prefer to have him go over it, I shall not object.

Mr. Holt: I do not, if the Master is satisfied.

Q. I will ask you whether or not this Exhibit No. 13 explains itself?

A. Yes, sir, it does.

By The Master:

Q. Is there anything that should be stated in addition to what you have already put in the record, in order to make it intelligible, and if there is, we shall be very glad to have you state it; but if you have covered the whole ground, that exhausts the subject.

A. Yes, sir, one little item, if they will please correct my subtraction under the Exchange Bank of Virginia of $274,000 and $359,000, and leaving $285,000 instead of $85,000.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Correct your exhibit then according to the fact.

A. That is all.

Q. Now, are the figures on that exhibit correct?

A. Yes, sir, they are.

Q. With that correction?

A. Yes, sir.

By The Master:

Q. You want to change the $285,000 to $85,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is obvious enough, but I did not notice it, though.

A. I did not until I happened to hit it this moment.

The Master: It is a clerical error, obviously, but still it ought to be corrected. You are right about that.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Also, in your cross-examination relative to these banks, or upon the subject of these banks, Mr. Hillman, you were asked several questions concerning the designation of an item as profit and loss account, and also criticised, we might say, for putting the word contingent into the profit and loss account. Will you explain that and tell the Master why you did that, where you got it from and whether or not the bank did it, and if so, in what year it began to do it?

A. Yes, sir. On pages 8 and 9 of the Second Auditor's report, January, 1860, we have the general state of the Bank of Virginia wherein there is an item denominated profit and loss showed for 1859 and 1860, January 1st of each year, which item of January 1st, 1860, is $337,455.84, which, when it is carried over into the next year on pages 6 and 7 of the Document No. 14 of the next year, is called surplus and contingent fund; the same amount, $337,455.84, and carried in that same column for 1861, is the $322,549.39, which I had denominated profit and loss and for which I was criticised. The reason that I did not make that change in the notation was that I have set these three years up in consecutive columns, putting the notation right down on the first column and then followed it with 1859, 1860 and 1861, and of course I had not changed profiit and loss, seeing that the same amount was carried through.

By The Master:

Q. Your suggestion is that the designation of this column as profit and loss did not originate with you, but it did originate in the report of this bank in 1860?

A. Exactly so.

Q. And that the modification of items in 1859, and that the change in description followed along on that same item?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your suggestion is that you followed the first description and did not make the modification that appeared in the reports; that covers that, doesn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what you mean by that?

A. Yes, sir. The same can be followed, if necessary, with the Exchange Bank of Virginia.

Q. You say the same facts appear?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. I believe you stated that you got these figures that you have just now been discussing from the Second Auditor's report of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir, Document No. 14.

Q. Is that the source of all the matters you have set down in your schedule concerning these banks?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: I believe they may ask him again.

The Master: You are through with your re-direct examination?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: Most of his testimony relates to matters that have been already fully covered by the cross-examination, and we will not ask more than one or two questions.

RE-CROSS EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Referring to your Exhibit No. 13, as I understand you, you have assumed that the balance sheet of the Farmers' Bank of Virginia shows that the profit account was a running account?

The Master: Profits of the institution.

Q. The profits of the institution was a running account. If that is true, why don't your figures on your exhibit $273,855.75 and $331,040 agree?

A. That is just the reason, that we show that it is a running account; because they do not agree proves that it is a running account.

Q. Do you know why they do not agree?

A. I do not know that, but I can probably state the reason, that the dividends are payable semi-annually.

Q. If you do not know, how can you say?

A. I cannot say.

Mr. Holt: He suggests a reason, however, which we think he is entitled to do. Of course you will take it for what it is worth.

The Master: Well, I understand it to be his opinion; I do not understand he has any basis for stating that he knows it to be a fact, but it is his conclusion from the conditions which he believes.

Mr. Lilly: It was not his opinion that the dividends were paid semi-annually; he states that as a fact.

The Master: I understand that, but I am speaking now with reference to the running account.

Mr. Harrison: That is all we want to ask him.

By The Master:

Q. Is it your idea that this running account, which you assume undoubtedly existed in order that this result may appear in the trial balance, had credited to it from time to time profits as they accrue? I understood that to be your statement.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am not quite certain that I understand it. How do you understand the profits were ascertained from time to time, that they would take an individual transaction and reckon the profits upon that transaction and credit the profits upon that transaction to this running account; is that the way you understand the books were kept?

A. Yes, sir; they would be kept through what they would call their interest and discounts, and exchange accounts. Those are the principal items of profits in banks.

Q. Well, your idea is that the individual items, as they developed and occurred in connection with the business, would be transferred to this account?

A. Not individually; no sir. They would be first transferred through the medium of the interest account, discount account and premiums on exchange, and then the total every six months of those taken and transferred to profit.

Q. Well, then, would the profits be transferred from time to time, or only at the expiration of a period of six months, which do you mean?

A. At the expiration of periods.

Q. Well, what periods?

A. I should say every six months; it might possibly be quarterly.

Q. What gives rise to the assumption that it might be done quarterly? I want to get your idea of the method of book-keeping that produces this account.

A. In the bank statement which we have examined there is a notation on document No. 14, page 8 of the 1861 reports, wherein certain items are marked with a star, and below it says, "The acts of the legislature passed in 1856, March 17th, extending the jurisdiction of most of the banks in the state, require that each quarterly statement shall give amounts on the first day of each month in the quarter under the heads marked star." I assumed from that, that quarterly statements were compelled, and that therefore these profits would be entered quarterly.

Q. Then when you say in your statement that from time to time these profits would be credited, you mean there were stated times, either provided by law or by the practice of the bank, when these items would be summarized in one account and the result carried to this account you have in your mind—am I right about that?

A. That is right.

Q. I got the other impression from your statement, that there was a sort of a running arrangement, you calling it a running account and then stating that the credits were made from time to time. But your opinion is that there was probably an account of the character that I have just now described?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you do not see any way in which this balance could have been carried along without the existence of an account of that sort; is not that what it comes to?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, do I understand you this morning to say that in your judgment the book value which you have shown is the equivalent of actual value?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean by actual value liquidating value?

A. I beg your pardon, the book value which I have shown. You will recall that on several of my exhibits where I establish the book value I was without the data for the book value and had to estimate the earnings which had accrued. With that exception, yes, sir.

Q. I am only calling attention to this now as a general proposition. I understand it is subject to such exceptions as may appear in the book, that do not come within your general proposition. Now do I understand it to be your opinion that the book values that you have given, except in these cases to which you now refer, is the equivalent to the actual value of the stock?

A. It is the equivalent to the actual value of the stock.

Q. Now, I want the actual cash value—I want to know what you mean by actual value. Somebody has got to pay for this, that is, if the contention is sound, and there is nothing of any use to me here unless it tends to show to me what this is worth, and what somebody must be charged for it. Do I understand you to take a ground that the book value is the equivalent of the actual cash value that Virginia should account for? That is the point with me.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, that is the liquidating value, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your book value is a mathematical computation upon these figures given here of what that stock would produce mathematically?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without any allowance for bad debts or failure to realize on the assets, or anything of that sort?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, take for instance—I want to get your idea of this—in the first place I will take the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company; that is Exhibit No. 4—

Mr. Holt: Will your Honor permit me to interrupt at that point just a moment?

The Master: Yes.

Mr. Holt: You say without taking into account bad debts or anything of that kind? You will notice that my question was predicated upon this theory, that where the books are correctly kept the book value is the actual value. If they have not charged off bad debts, why the books have not been correctly kept, that is all.

The Master: I noticed your question and had it in mind, but that does not go far enough to help me. I want to go farther.

Q. Now, in the first place, I will take the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company, your book value is predicated on the assumption that those assets on liquidation would produce precisely the sums they are mentioned at in the aggregate, is not that right?

A. Yes, sir, that is right.

Q. Do you think that is a safe rule for me to take in determining the value of that stock and what Virginia should be charged for it; is that your judgment, on the basis of its actual value?

A. In case of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac?

Q. Yes, it applies to all of them.

A. Yes.

Q. In the first place, that involves actual liquidation at the precise sum fixed on the assets. Is there any cost involved in liquidation, or does not that enter into it?

A. Yes, sir, there is a cost involved in liquidation, undoubtedly.

Q. What would that be in connection with the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad; what would be the cost of a liquidation of a road like that, with $2,566,331.71?

A. I should say it would cost five per cent.

Q. Well, ought that to be taken out or ought it to be considered a part of the assets in determining the actual value that you ought to charge to Virginia?

A. I would take that out.

Q. Then your book value is not the actual value, is it, as to that item?

Mr. Holt: Well, I would submit this, your Honor, if you will pardon me again. In the case of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac it would not make one particle of difference, for this reason, that the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac stock is still owned by the State of Virginia, and its income and dividends are enjoyed by her. It is not going through a process of liquidation. Its value as of a certain date, 23½ per cent. thereof must be taken. If you were to go and liquidate it to-day you will find it is worth $200 a share, or maybe $350. It is a pretty live asset, that road is.

The Master: I am simply using this as an illustration.

Mr. Holt: I am simply trying to help, and I know that your Honor is trying to help everybody.

The Master: I want to get the basis of this conclusion that the book value is the actual cash market value.

Q. You concede then that five per cent. should be deducted from the assets in determining the actual value, or don't you?

A. I think it would cost that amount to liquidate it, yes, sir.

Q. Well, do you concede that it should be deducted? You have conceded it—do you still stand by that concession?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, if that is true, the book value is not the actual cash market value as to that item; that is right, is it not?

A. That is right.

Q. Then your actual cash value proceeds upon the assumption, in connection with the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Company, that in case of liquidation the road could realize $2,002,331.41, which had been put into the construction of that road and property. Now, what have we before us to show that that is worth that sum of money, and what have you on January 1st, 1861?. What I want to get at is what have you got here that satisfies me that in case of the liquidation of that company on January 1st, 1861, that sum could be realized upon that expenditure?

A. The only thing is that that being the cost of the road and the property, that it could not be duplicated for less than that sum.

Q. Well, now, do you assume that to be a fact?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had the road been in existence?

A. The road had been in existence at that time some thirty years.

Q. Well, now, without knowing anything about the manner in which the accounts had been kept, and assuming that they were kept properly, I do not know what that may mean—

Mr. Holt: Is not that the necessary assumption?

The Master: I do not know; I do not know what you put into the word "properly." That is what I have got to find out. "Properly" may cover a vast multitude of things. Of course we do not know whether there was any depreciation charged off on this road.

Q. Don't you think the presumption is that this sum is the exact cost, without reference to depreciation, without any knowledge of what was done? What do you think about that?

A. In case of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac, no, sir, I do not think it was the exact cost.

Q. Now, why don't you think so; what is there in this record that will justify me in assuming that it is not the exact cost, and what do you know about this road that will enable me to safely conclude that this aggregate of $2,002,331.41 is not the total cost of the construction up to date; what have you got to show me that I can predicate an opinion on in saying that that sum of money would be realized upon that asset?

A. There is nothing in the record so far.

Q. Does that mean that your suggestion in that line is pure conjecture?

A. No, sir, it does not.

Q. What have you got outside of the record that you can put in that will enable me to say as a fact that that represents the total expenditure or that it does not represent the total expenditure; what have you that will enable me to make that conclusion?

A. From time to time, as I ran along through these accounts I simply glanced over the cost of road and equipment and noted its increase from year to year, mentally. It increased but a slight amount each year, while in the body of reports there were from time to time noted considerable improvements that had been made to the road, which indicated to my mind that the expenditures on the road and on its equipment were greater than the actual amounts by which they had increased the cost of the road.

Q. I wish you would put into the record details which you think will justify me in concluding that $1,531,238.40 is not the total cost without any allowance for depreciation. I would like to have you look the records over. You need not stop to do it now, but I want you to do that, because I want to know if I can whether that represents what that road is probably worth or whether it represents what it has cost during the period of thirty years; or do you wish to be understood that in your opinion that if the road had been in existence from twenty to thirty years and its total cost during that period was $1,531,238.40, that on liquidation that sum could be realized on that expenditure; is that what you mean?

A. Yes, sir, that is what I mean.

Q. You mean if that was the total cost without any allowance for depreciation, you think the road would be worth that at the end of thirty years?

A. I do, yes, sir.

Q. Is that in accordance with your experience as an expert in railroad matters?

A. It depends entirely upon the individual road. In this case I think it would.

Q. Do you think as a reasonable proposition that if the road cost over a period of thirty years without any allowance for depreciation $1,531,238, that it would sell in the market for its total cost after that period, without any knowledge as to what had been done in relation to renewals or by way of improvements; do you think that its cost could be produced on a sale?

A. I could not say that if I did not look at the amount of money which had been spent in renewals and how the road had been kept up.

Q. You have not look that up, because you have not been able to find it?

Mr. Holt: No, he said he had discovered those things, but they were not in the schedule.

The Master: Not renewals, simply increases in cost.

Mr. Holt: But not charged here in this exhibit.

The Master: I do not know about that; that is what I want to find out. What I am up against, for instance, here, and if it turns on this, I have to find it.

Q. You have given me a mathematical computation predicated upon the book value of certain assets, and there is no other hypothesis upon which that book value can be consistent with actual value. I do not want to be in the position of undertaking to find that the total amount expended in the construction of a road over a period of thirty years is the sum total that it would bring in cash if it was sold at the end of thirty years if no allowance was made for depreciation; I shall not be likely to put that finding in my report, because it does not seem to me to be reasonable. Do you get my point?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you can give me anything that will tend to show to me that as a result of that history of this road this item approximates the real cash value for which it could be sold, that is one thing; you get my point, don't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I do not understand that you contend that if that is the total cost of construction without any allowance for depreciation, that the road after thirty years of wear would sell for just exactly what it originally cost; you do not take that ground, do you?

A. No, sir.

Q. I did not suppose so. That is right where I am. If this really represents the total cost without any allowance for de-

A. Not under the circumstances that you have mentioned, and I think your Honor will be served better by giving you that statement.

Q. Yes, exactly. Upon the state of facts that appears in this record up to date,—I have given you the exact situation—the parties have not given me anything to go and come on other than I have indicated to you in my questions, and so far as your testimony is concerned, it of course was predicated upon what is put in the record, and your testimony was that the book value was the equivalent of the actual cash value. Now, that involves this further consideration—I am only taking this as an illustration—here for instance it proceeds on the assumption that the bills receivable, $63,877.40, is all collectible, doesn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If they do not happen to collect any of them, that throws your calculation out that much, and if they collect only 50 per cent., that throws it out that much?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether they could collect any of it or have you any knowledge about it at all?

A. Not of that specific item.

Q. What is your experience in matters of bills receivable?

A. My experience is that they are either collected or charged off.

Q. Very true.

A. And that from year to year that balance would hold pretty steadily—

Q. We had in connection with one of these banks, we had doubtful debts of something like $40,000, and those you think were included in the trial balance? The bad debts, your judgment is, were charged off? Now then, there does not appear to be anything in connection with these railroad exhibits relative to either bad or doubtful debts. Of course I do not know what presumption that raises, but your statement that the book value is the actual value is predicated on the assumption that the total amount could be collected, isn't that true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you do not know whether it could be or not, and there is no way wherein it can be found out?

A. None.

Q. Except you have this fair presumption, your idea is it is a fair presumption, inasmuch as it is carried out as bills receivable, that they are all, generally spreaking, collectible, that would be your conclusion?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Otherwise, your opinion is that they would be charged off to bad debts?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That same thing is true as to sundries on open account, $84,863.20?

A. I should say, your Honor, that on open accounts those were all collectible, for the reason that there is—

Q. They are the accounts with people with whom they are doing business?

A. Yes, and they have to have an approved standing to do business. I am speaking generally of railroading and other transportation companies, and they are absolutely collectible.

Q. You have here in this trial balance $53,800 as the value of the Potomac Steamboat stock and Potomac Steamboat Company bonds. I do not believe that we have anything in this record indicating the character of that interesting company; but your statement proceeds on the assumption that those are worth par. If they do not happen to turn out to be worth anything, that throws your computation out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got any information about that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think it would be safe for me to assume that that is worth par simply because it is carried in the trial balance, when I am asked to charge, for instance, Virginia with its value, without some investigation as to whether that was an asset of value, particularly in view of the fact that we have run across a great many corporations that seem to be more or less infirm. I do not know a thing about this, but do you think it would be a prudent thing for me to do?

A. No, sir, I think not.

Q. Now, then, taking into account the suggestion which you have made in connection with this trial balance, do you think it would be prudent for me to assume that the book value was the actual cash value that should be charged to Virginia?

A. No, sir, not the actual cash value.

Q. That is what you understand in the end is to be done, do you not? The contemplation is that Virginia must account for its assets at their fair cash value; isn't that your view of it?

Mr. Lilly: What does the decree of reference say in that regard?

The Master: I do not remember.

Mr. Lilly: I think the Master is a little strong on the terms.

The Master: I am not indicating what my conclusion is. I want to get Mr. Hillman's idea. The important thing with me is I want to be able when I make this report to make it on a basis that I can stand upon, and I do not want to get from the record here some fluke conclusion that perhaps Mr. Hillman himself would not stand behind. I want to get an idea of just exactly what weight I ought to give to the various factors involved in this. I doubt a great deal whether any one factor—of course, I cannot tell about that; it may be that there is no one factor which will determine it, and if not, what I want is something that I may get in the record that I can bottom myself on and feel safe on. How do you understand that? I do not know what the decree does read in that respect.

Mr. Lilly: My memory is it says to ascertain the value of the assets.

The Master: That is the value that is to be charged to Virginia.

Mr. Hogg: Our theory is that Virginia acquired this stock in her policy of internal improvement; that she did not buy it necessarily for commercial purposes, but that if she now holds it as her own and it is of value to her, that it need not necessarily be a cash value; and furthermore, the lapse of time is so great under the circumstances of this case that it might be that all we can do is to get the best evidence of which the case is susceptible.

The Master: I do not go so far now as to say what rule I shall adopt, but I shall have to adopt some rule, and I would like to have the parties on either side address themselves to the hypothesis that I may possibly adopt the rule of actual cash value. I would like to have all these hypotheses discussed. Of course I appreciate the difficulty about lapse of time, Professor Hogg, but I feel bound to say that the lapse of time will probably not change the legal rule. I can understand how the parties are embarrassed, and the embarrassment may be on the other side also.

Mr. Holt: Our theory is further this, your Honor, we have no concealment from the other side or the Master, either.

The Master: I understand.

Mr. Holt: The books have considered all these questions. The cases are just as plentiful as blackberries in August, and when we show a balance sheet and the records, if the padding of assets or the shrinking of liabilities is to be resorted to for the purpose of showing us to be taking an incorrect position, impeaching our contention, that is squarely up to the other side. In other words, the books tell us that when we present the books and balance sheets, that we have made a prima facie case.

Mr. Lilly: We have assumed the burden.

Mr. Holt: And the burden shifts. Now, we find hundreds of cases along that line and they show that where you have no better evidence you will compare the assets with the liabilities and add to that perhaps as another factor the activities of the particular corporation.

The Master: A going concern.

Mr. Holt: A going concern; and really we feel, while we want to get in all the facts that we can, that in the light of the authorities your Honor will discover that we have made a pretty strong case.

The Master: I think that may be all true. It is true that the burden is upon the other side, of course, to negative the contentions—I beg your pardon, Judge Holt, I think I may have cut you off.

Mr. Holt: I was only going to call attention to the fact that we have Supreme Court decisions, I mean of the United States, on the subject, as well as State cases, and we may fall down, but in the light of the authorities, I do not think so. There are really cases that go that far, that where it is an ancient situation the presumption must be rebutted that par shall not obtain. Some of the cases would relieve us from going any further than showing the par value of the stock, and then it is up to the other side to show whether or not it is above or below par; but we have not confined ourselves, of course, to that.

Mr. Anderson: Our friends will find cases that will sustain almost any proposition.

The Master: You are both entitled to the benefit that you can get from all those cases, and if you will call the attention of the Master to them you may be certain he will look them all over and read them all.

Mr. Holt: And when we find one in the Supreme Court of the United States, as my friend General Anderson suggests, we cannot consider that a mere vagary, and I know the Master will not.

The Master: When either side can show me a rule that in my judgment controls in this case, which is announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, it will come pretty near being final. But Judge Holt is perfectly right in his suggestion that this may be perfectly proper evidence because of the contentions made by counsel on the other side. Now, that is true, but at the same time of course I am sitting here as Master in this case, and it involves very large considerations of very great importance.

Mr. Holt: Do not understand us as criticizing the inquiry of the Master. I can see that if I was sitting there as Master

I would make the same inquiry. I am not taking that stand.

The Master: I just simply say, of course, that it is not only probable but possible that there are phases of this case that impress me in a manner in which they do not impress counsel on either side, and mine is the mind that must be satisfied in the end, and the only opportunity I have in connection with a matter like this, is to improve it as I go along. Any examination which I make is not to be considered a reflection upon counsel on either side, or a suggestion to counsel on either side. It is simply to clear up the situation that has been created in my mind by the case as it goes along. I think I have covered pretty much this subject. I won't take the time to go over it, but I have simply called your attention to this particular exhibit for the purpose of making an application of the general rules. I doubt very much whether we disagree about that.

Mr. Holt: Your Honor, it may be of course, I thought we would put in all our schedules, but under the examination by the Master of the witness it may be now that we will ask Mr. Hillman to put in an additional exhibit showing the present condition for whatever it may be worth of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad that would reflect something upon it.

The Master: It is pretty late now to fix one up; however, I shall let anything of that kind in that either of you think is material, and as to what weight I give to it will depend upon argument ultimately.

Mr. Lilly: You will use a pruning hook.

The Master: Of course we are all reasonably intelligent men, and it is easy enough to understand that a great many things happen in corporations during a period of time, and just exactly how much weight I might give would depend altogether upon whether there was a condition that made the situation today applicable to some prior time. But, however, anything that either of you might consider to be pertinent and relevant on those lines, I am going to leave the door extremely wide open.

Mr. Holt: Of course I could not say that that would have any value.

The Master: Well, I would not expect counsel to encumber the record with evidence that they did not think had value, of course. But anything that any of you feel—of course we are not trying this case down to the question of hard pan on the question of remoteness—and there is another thing about this, you appreciate, and so do I, that neither of you have any remedy in case I exclude any testimony, except possibly to have this case sent back for another trial before the Master. Now I am going to lean away beyond what in my judgment would probably be the rule, under those circumstances. That is, you have no exceptions to anything that I rule out here, or rule in. If I rule out a piece of testimony and either party think it ought to go in, the only remedy there is, is to argue that proposition before the court, and if they think I have not admitted what ought to come in, it would have to come back to be heard again. I am going away beyond the rule so as not to give anybody any cause for complaint. If we had exceptions here, and we had the ordinary case, I would rule the best I could in accordance with the strict legal rules. But you appreciate my position. Neither of you have any adequate remedy in case I rule incorrectly. Under those circumstances, I am going to let the relevancy of this testimony rest largely upon the judgment and professional conduct of the men engaged in the case, and I am going to leave the door very wide open. I am going to have the record show that, so that there won't either of you have any opportunity to complain when you get before the Supreme Court.

The Witness: I do not recall, your Honor, whether there is a question or not.

The Master: I do not think there is.

The Witness: Do I understand that you want me to bring a statement of that item in?

The Master: I am not stating now what I am going to do, but I am undertaking to provide for every contingency.

Mr. Lilly: You would like to know whether depreciation has been taken care of?

The Master: Yes.

Mr. Lilly: We will look into that.

The Master: If that is the total sum that has been expended, without any allowance whatever during that whole period of thirty years, nobody sitting around this table would expect me to hold that that road had that cash value at the end of that time. It would make me ridiculous if I did.

Mr. Holt: Do you understand what the Master wants on that line?

The Witness: Yes, sir, with reference to the construction account, whether or not depreciation can be determined to have entered into it, and whether or not there have been items expended in the road itself which had not been taken into the cost of it, on both sides.

The Master: What can you find in connection with the accounts of any of these banks that tends to show that the item of cost approximates really what its value is on January 1st, 1861, and is not a statement of the total expenditures, without any deduction therefrom. Of course, you will see right off where I would be on that proposition. You get my point, don't you?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

Mr. Lilly: That is all, Mr. Hillman.

The Master: Subject to that, I suppose Mr. Hillman may be excused by both sides.

Mr. Holt: We have some other schedules.

The Master: He may be excused by the plaintiff, and then the defendant can let him go if they want to.

Mr. Lilly: We have two or three schedules in course of preparation.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Harrison has some questions to ask on what has been developed lately.

Mr. Harrison: I want to call the attention of the witness, as well as the Master, to this exhibit he has furnished here this morning, relating to the taxes.

The Master: Has that been marked heretofore?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Anderson: It is a sub-sheet of Exhibit No. 10.

The Master: Then mark it as a sub-sheet of Exhibit No. 10,

Mr. Lilly: Mark it sub sheet of Defendant's Exhibit No. 10.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's

Exhibit No. 10, sub sheet, September 9th, 1914, C. B.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I would like to know first if this exhibit is to take the place of the other on this subject of taxes?

A. No, sir.

Q. The total you show is different, is it not?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Which one, then, do you rely upon as correct?

A. This one is correct for the collection of taxes accruing subsequent to June 20th, 1863, both assessed and collected after those dates.

Q. Is this the one, then, that the Master is to rely upon?

A. That is for the attorneys in this case to say, Mr. Harrison, and not for me.

Q. I thought you were going to furnish us with a corrected exhibit that would show the result of your investigation in the matter of these taxes that you claim should be charged against Virginia.

The Master: Let us see if we understand it the same. I understood that the witness was to furnish a detailed statement of the taxes that he said were assessed and collected, allocating it to the various counties, which was supplemental. I do not understand this is a correction of the other schedule, but that it is an amplification of the other schedule. As I understood it, Mr. Hillman was to amplify the other schedule, not necessarily to correct it, but to give us more details and show us just exactly the counties that these taxes came from.

Mr. Hogg: I understood it differently yesterday. Yesterday it did not appear from Exhibit 10 whether the tax had been levied prior to June 20th, 1863, and collected afterwards.

The Master: That is one question.

Mr. Hogg: And then it became a question whether we ought not to put in the record whether the taxes were levied after the formation of the State and collected afterwards, and therefore we have put in this one, so that if we are correct, that we have a right to all of the taxes, whether levied before or after 1863; then we could rely on No. 10. That is what I understood the witness was to prepare.

The Master: The discussion covered two questions, one was whether taxes were assessed during the period between January 1st, 1861, and June 20th, 1863, and his original schedule did not show that; and the other was the counties and the amounts collected from the counties, of the taxes involved. Now he has given us in one detailed schedule both of those facts, as I understand it.

Mr. Hogg: Yes, sir.

The Master: So that this schedule is rather an amplification, rather than a correction of the other schedule.

The Witness: Yes, sir. And from this there is also omitted the taxes collected after 1861, which had been assessed prior to 1863.

The Master: Oh, well, then, it is a correction, too. It is both a correction and an amplification.

Mr. Lilly: I do not understand that it is a correction, your Honor.

The Master: Well, it is entirely immaterial as far as that is concerned. It simply eliminates one item. What is the other schedule?

Mr. Harrison: This schedule, if your Honor please, does not answer the purpose that you had in mind, and does not certainly answer the purpose that we had in mind.

The Master: You state that, and we will have it done.

Mr. Harrison: It was pertinent to inquire how much was the total of these taxes and the items constituting them that were assessed prior to June 20th, 1863. It does not show it.

Mr. Lilly: Mr. Harrison, would not that be the difference between the $224,000 in Exhibit 10, and $180,000 in sub sheet No. 10?

Mr. Harrison: No. I understand the totals are different. There is $180,000 shown on this one, and $224,000 on the other. The caption says, "Amount of taxes assessed by the State of Virginia and paid by West Virginia counties to State of Virginia from June 20th, 1863, to April, 1865." And then the sub-heading is, "Law Processes. 1863, and subsequent." Now if that means that the several items appearing there accrued, were assessed in 1863, I would like to know when in 1863. Take the matter of the redemption of lands, 1863, and subsequent; they are small items, they only aggregate $123, but it is altogether indefinite. Now when you come to the general taxes and delinquent taxes and forfeited lands, being judgments on bonds of Commissioner of Delinquent and Foreited Lands, now we all know that you could not get a judgment on a bond over night; that is generally a slow process. If you have got to sue a sheriff in order to recover a judgment against him for the amount that he is liable for for delinquent taxes, it is not a matter that is done in a week or a few months; it is generally a long affair. There are $8,000 of those sort of items that are said to have accrued between January 1st, 1863, and June 20th, 1863. I say that is impossible.

The Master: Suppose you either develop right away on cross-examination the difficulties that you see, or else state to him specifically what you want in addition to what you have.

Mr. Harrison: If I undertook to cross-examine him, I have got this book before me, it would probably take us a half a day. I would take up each one of these items and make him find it here and show me; I think I could correct it, but it would take too long.

The Master: What is the reason that Mr. Hillman cannot take those books and make those comparisons and not take our time?

Mr. Harrison: I suppose he could.

The Master: Suppose you do this, suppose you state to Mr. Hillman what you want in addition.

Mr. Harrison: I would like to have the details upon which those figures in each instance are based, showing the dates of the assessments. That is what I would like to see.

The Master: And the payment.

Mr. Harrison: And the payment. When we get that, we have got something we can rely on.

The Master: It does not show that, Mr. Hillman. Do you want anything in addition to that?

Mr. Harrison: No. Then we will have it before us, and we can see the thing for ourselves.

The Master: It is true, of course, that this schedule does not do that. Your general statement covers it, and they desire that, and of course they are entitled to have it. Now suppose you have some of your assistants take this schedule and elaborate it and give the date of assessments and the date of collection, and the items that aggregate these items here, if there are any such, and before that is submitted have your accountant check it up with Mr. Potter, so that he can check up and save the time—I cannot take time to examine all those items here. The accountants must do this. You can do it while we are not in session; have some one of your men do it; it is not necessary for you to do it personally—you do not insist on Mr. Hillman doing this work personally, do you?

Mr. Harrison: Not at all.

The Master: Now you could get it up and work it out in detail, and before you present it submit it to Mr. Potter, and let Mr. Potter check it up, and then we can tell in five minutes whether you want to spend any time on it or not.

The Witness: Will you allow a moment?

The Master: Yes, certainly.

The Witness: The question between us is entirely as to the date of the assessment and the date on which the taxes were payable.

The Master: Yes.

The Witness: I do not know the date of the assessment.

The Master: Just take out of the books what you rely on as the basis for these statements. Get it up in that shape, and go over it with Mr. Potter. I am not going to delay this hearing to cross-examine on small items.

The Witness: Your Honor, this has been checked with Mr. Potter, and the entire question that comes up is the date of the assessment, whether the date of the assessment of taxes which are denominated 1863 were prior to June 20th. They were assessed at a certain date, possibly September, 1863.

The Master: As I understand it, there is not anything on these books of account that shows the dates of these assessments. What the original assessments would show, if you were able to get at them, is another thing. But the law provides that those assessments should have been made on a certain date.

Mr. Hogg: On the first of February.

The Master: Yes, on the 1st of February; the law provides that the assessments should have been made on the 1st of February, 1863, payable in 1864.

Mr. Hogg: Payable on the 1st of July.

The Master: Of course, these items here—this schedule does not show the taxes that could be allocated to the assessment of 1863, as distinguished from assessments after 1863, if there be any after 1863.

The Witness: There are some, and we have the details.

The Master: Get that detail up and check up that detail with Mr. Potter. I will not delay this hearing.

Mr. Harrison: I do not want to delay it.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Hogg is mistaken.

The Master: I will not spend time discussing that, because there cannot be any controversy about it; that is in the law, and when you hand me the law, if you people disagree, I will decide what it is. It is not worth our while discussing that.

Mr. Hogg: I want to make this suggestion. You have in mind the month in which the assessment was made. For instance, if property was assessable on the 1st of February, 1863, and not payable until July or October following, we could not pay the tax claimed by Virginia because the county would have to account to its own State.

The Master: That is a question of law, and just exactly what the law says—in the first place, we labor under the same infirmity and misfortune in connection with this, and it is going to bother me more than it is you; if I could have here the usual, ordinary indications of value established beyond controversy, I would not have any trouble in deciding this case—but we have the same misfortune here that you have in connection with the other items; the records and books do not show specifically what was done. Now, the next best evidence may be the law itself, and about that there cannot be any controversy; we will have it in here, and then what flows from it will depend upon how the facts are to be applied to it.

Mr. Hogg: No question about that.

The Master: We do not want to spend any time discussing pro and con what the law is, because that is going to be settled without any trouble later on. But we do want in this schedule every fact that bears upon that situation. And I want that stated as fully as you can state it, and I want it compared by Mr. Potter, and I am not going to allow time to be taken—and Mr. Harrison does not want it either—for cross-examination as to items making up these details. There is no need of it.

Mr. Harrison: No, not any at all.

The Master: There are some of these things that must be done. I am not going to delay the hearing for things that these accountants can do.

Mr. Holt: We felt that we had gone far enough when we showed that a tax, whenever it may have been assessed, was in reality collected after June 20th, 1863; that if you could establish that fact it raises then the only point of law that we make. It don't make any difference what the date of it was, just so you can fix the fact that it was collected by Virginia after June 20th, 1863; and according to our theory it makes no difference when it was assessed.

The Master: They have another theory.

Mr. Holt: Yes, they may have another theory.

The Master: I think we have spent enough time on it.

The Witness: I have already checked Mr. Potter's details, we have checked them jointly, and it will take but a short time.

The Master: Then do it at the noon recess, if it won't take but a short time.

The Witness: It can be done in half an hour.

The Master: I am simply taking this out of the hands of the attorneys and putting it in the hands of the accountants.

Mr. Anderson: It is a very unimportant item.

The Master: That is all the more reason why we should not take time on it.

Mr. Harrison: I was just going to illustrate, so that the accountant might know just what we wanted.

The Master: That is right.

Mr. Harrison: Take for example these taxes carried forward here, and said to be judgment on bonds of commissioners for delinquent taxes. Take one item, page 194 of this journal, and we find that there is one item on a judgment against the Sheriff and his sureties for one-quarter share of the land and property and license taxes of the year 1861, $1,600. That was collected on the 23rd of June, 1863. Well, now, there are taxes that had accrued for the year 1861, you see, on which the Sheriff was subsequently sued, and final collection made June 23rd, 1863. Now, if there are items of that sort carried in there, we want that to appear, that is all.

The Master: You get the point, Mr. Hillman?

The Witness: Yes, sir. There are none of that kind in there.

The Master: Well, give all the details that there are, and have that exhibit complete and full. I do not want to have it necessary to have a single question asked in regard to that schedule. I want your work so complete and so accurate, checked up by Mr. Potter, that we can put it right in the record and call it final. Is there any further cross-examination?

Mr. Harrison: No.

The Master: Anything by way of re-direct examination?

Mr. Holt: I think not, your Honor.

The Master: We will suspend for five minutes then.

Mr. Holt: Before we suspend I would like to ask a question of my friends across the table. The other day I asked for a stipulation which they felt that they could not subscribe to. Perhaps I can narrow that to the point where they will agree, and if so it will exclude some lumber from the record, according to our theory. I do not believe I would take this argument down.

(Counsel discussed the subject for twenty-five minutes.)

Mr. Holt: For the purpose of showing that the reports of the banks upon which our exhibits have been based were made to the State of Virginia under compulsion of law, we read into the record sections 25, 26 and 27 of chapter 58 of the Code of Virginia of 1849 as follows—

The Master: You need not stop to read it.

Mr. Holt: I believe, as that is very short, I will read it.

The Master: All right.

Mr. Holt: (Reading): C. 25. The board shall annually in January, and quarterly thereafter, transmit to the governor a statement of the condition of the bank on the first day of the month, wherein shall be specified the amount of capital stock subscribed, with the amount paid and the amount unpaid thereon, the value of the real estate of the bank, the total amount of debts due to and from it, noting specially the amount of dealings in exchange, and the premium paid thereon, and also bad and doubtful debts; the amount on hand of gold and silver and other coin; amount of money deposited; amount of each denomination of bills in circulation, and the aggregate of the whole; amount of bills on hand of solvent banks incorporated by this state, and also of those incorporated elsewhere; and the rate and amount of the last dividend of profits, with the amount of the surplus or contingent fund; which statement shall be signed by at least a majority of the directors, and verified by the oath of the president or cashier.

26. In addition to the said quarterly statements, the several banks shall report to the governor a comparative statement of their condition for the corresponding quarter of the preceding year, and the governor shall have the same published in at least two newspapers in the City of Richmond.

27. There may at any time be an inspection of the books and examination into the proceedings of any bank, by a joint committee of the two houses of the general assembly, or a committee of either house, or one or more commissioners appointed by the assembly or the governor.

The Master: I have to suggest that there is about a page and a half of the record that could be dispensed with by the statement that it is conceded that the reports of the various banks which have been introduced in this case were filed by authority of law and under the requirements of law. But, however, you need not do that unless you want to. That seems to be the fact. Now what is the reason you cannot put in the record a statement that it is admitted that at the time these reports were filed the law required reports of that character to be filed? Why does not that cover the ground?

Mr. Anderson: I have not any doubt about that being the law of the state.

The Master: Then what sense is there in having that statute go into the record?

Mr. Anderson: But the law did not state what the probative value of that was.

The Master: If you want this report to be full of all these things it will be full of them.

Mr. Anderson: I see no objection to it, but the law nowhere made it evidence.

The Master: Do you want printed two or three sections of this record?

Mr. Conrad: We accept it.

The Master: Then it may be stated that it is admitted that at the time the reports of the banks in question were filed they were filed in accordance with and subject to the requirements of the statutes of Virginia. Does that cover the whole question?

Mr. Holt: And that the law of the State upon the same subject in the year 1860 is identical with the Code of 1849.

The Master: And that such had been the law of Virginia since 1849. That covers it.

Mr. Holt: I am going on, on the theory that I am unable to get any stipulation.

Mr. Conrad: You need not.

The Master: It would save time if we had made that admission in the beginning.

Mr. Conrad: We made a suggestion two or three days ago that if the Judge would specify in detail, we would take it up.

Mr. Holt: I am going to prepare that general admission and hand it to these gentlemen, and they will see how innocent it is.

The Master: Now, what is the next?

Mr. Holt: We now offer and read into the record for the purpose of showing that the laws of Virginia not only required railroads to make reports to the State, but even prescribed the form therefor.

Mr. Hogg: That included other companies in the same Act.

Mr. Holt: Railroads and other different improvement companies. Resolutions in relation to the form of annual reports of railroad and other companies, adopted March 15th, 1856, and found at page 286 of the Acts of Assembly of Virginia of 1855-6.

The Master: Just hand that original Act to the other side, and unless they desire to make a stipulation that will render its extension into the record unnecessary, it may go into the record.

Mr. Conrad: There is nothing more dangerous than to rely upon an Act. Have you looked in the Code of 1860, or subsequent legislation, to see whether that Act has been modified in any way within the period covered by our inquiry? We have a piece of literature known as Matthew's Digest, which is the Code of 1849 and 1850, with annotations showing the modifications by legislation and decisions up to the time—

Mr. Holt: We have done the best we could to find all that was possible on the subject.

The Master: Of course if this goes in and nothing else goes in I will take this to be the law from then on, and it is up to the other side to negative its continued existence. We will not stop to read that, because that is practically a duplication of what we have already had. Submit it to the other side and if they desire to make a stipulation, which will be agreeable to West Virginia, it will not be printed, and if they do not care to make the stipulation, it will be printed.

Mr. Lilly: We have furnished the stenographer a typewritten copy.

The Master: That is right, and if you reach that point, also furnish him the stipulation which will eliminate the Act.

Mr. Conrad: We just feel as if it had been submitted to us.

The Master: I have instructed them to submit it to you, and if after you examine it you desire to make a stipulation that will render unnecessary the extending of that in the record, and they agree to the stipulation, we will not have the Act printed; in other words, if you do not agree on the stipulation, that will go into the record. Now, let us have your next.

Mr. Conrad: We could keep all that mass of matter out of the record and save the cost of printing, if the Judge would just indicate in a little memorandum the different Acts.

The Master: He is going to do that.

Mr. Holt: The memorandum I was going to prepare related to that first effort at a stipulation. These Acts are all very brief, and there are not many of them, and unless they can be stipulated right along, they should go in at this place.

The Master: We are not going to take any more time with these, what may be called desultory Acts of the Legislature relating to various unrelated subjects. Judge Holt can go right along with them, and they will take exactly the same course that I have prescribed in relation to this one. Submit them to the other side, and if the other side are willing to make a stipulation which you agree to, that will eliminate them; if not, the Acts are to be printed.

Mr. Hogg: The same law was in force in 1860.

The Master: That is up to them, Mr. Hogg.

[No stipulation having been subsequently agreed upon, the Act of March 15, 1856, is here inserted.]

ACTS OF ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA—1855-56.

The following resolution will be found on pages 286-289:

No. 1.—Resolutions in relation to the form of annual reports of railroad and other companies.

Adopted March 15, 1856.

1. Resolved, That every railroad corporation in which the Commonwealth is interested as a stockholder or creditor, or whose road is wholly within the State, shall make an annual report to the board of public works of its condition and the state of its affairs on the thirtieth day of September, and of the operation of its road during the year ending on that day; which report shall be verified by the oaths of its treasurer or president and acting superintendent of operations, and be filed in the office of the said board by the fifteenth day of November in each year—and shall contain full information upon the several items hereinafter enumerated to-wit:

First. As regards its capital stock: The amount as by charter; the amount subscribed by the State, and amount subscribed by others; the amount paid in by the State, and amount paid in by others; the amount of further subscriptions on the part of the State authorized contingently. The information under this head to be so given as to show the several amounts as per last report, and the additions thereto or deductions therefrom, as the case may be, within the year.

Second. As regards its funded debt: The total amount; the time or times it will fall due; the rate or rates of interest thereon; the portion thereof due to the State. The information under this head to be so given as to show the several amounts as per last report, and the additions thereto or deductions therefrom, as the case may be, within the year.

Third. As regards its floating debt: The total amount, stating when and for what general objects it was incurred; the amount for each of those objects; and the rate or rates of interest thereon. The information under this head to be so given as to show the several amounts as per last report, and the additions thereto or deductions therefrom, as the case may be, within the year.

Fourth. As regards interest, the loss, if any, from the sale or disposition of bonds or other obligations at less than par, and all other expenses incurred in raising money: The total amount, stating what portion was for each of the above objects. The information under this head to be so given as to show the several amounts as per last report, and the additions thereto within the year.

Fifth. As regards the cost of the road and its equipments, also of buildings of all kinds, land, land damages and fencing, viz: For gradation and masonry; for superstructure of wooden bridges, for superstructure of iron bridges for superstructure of the road, including iron; for water stations, including the cost of procuring water and conducting it to them; for passenger and freight stations, buildings and fixtures; for engine and car-houses; for machine shops, machinery and fixtures; for all other buildings; for land, for land damages and fencing; for locomotives and fixtures and snow ploughs; for passenger and baggage cars; for freight cars; for cars used on the repairs of the road and on construction; for engineering and agencies; for all work and property not enumerated above; the total cost of the road and equipment, as above. The information under this head to be given as to show the several amounts as per last report, and the additions thereto within the year.

Sixth. As regards the characteristics of the road: The length of the road; the track laid, including sidings; the weight of the rail per yard; the total rise and fall; the maximum grade in each direction; the length of the same in each direction; the total curvature; the shortest radius of curvature, with length of line on which it occurs; such other information, in detail, in regard to grades and curves and the location of the road, as the board of public works may require; the number of water stations; the aggregate length of wooden truss bridges between abutments; the aggregate length of iron bridges between abutments; the aggregate length of all other bridges between abutments; the whole length of road unfenced on both sides; the number of public roads crossed at grade; the number of railroads crossed at grade; the length of road, if any, unfinished, and estimated amount required for its completion, also what sum beyond the means already provided is required for that purpose; the length of branches owned by the company, and such information in detail in regard to them as the board of public works may require.

Seventh. As regards the equipment of the road, its depots, shops and other equipment of buildings: The number of locomotives, stating their weight; the number of passenger cars of each class, rated as eight-wheel cars; the number of baggage cars, rated as eight-wheel cars; the number of merchandise cars, rated as eight-wheel cars; the number of gravel and other cars used on repairs on construction, rated as eight-wheel cars; the number of depots of each class; the number of engine-houses; the number of machine shops; the number and character of other buildings. The information under this head to be so given as to show the several numbers as per last report, and the additions thereto within the year.

Eighth. As regards the doings of the year in transportation, and total miles run; the miles run by passenger trains; the miles run by freight trains; the miles run by gravel trains and other trains, employed on construction or repairs of the road; The rate of fare charged each class of passengers per mile; the number of passengers of each class carried in cars; the aggregate number of miles traveled by each class of passengers, or number of passengers of each class carried one mile; the rate charged per ton (of two thousand pounds) for each class of freight carried in cars; the number of tons of each class of freight carried in cars; the number of miles carried or total movement of each class of freight in miles; the average rate of speed adopted by ordinary passenger trains, including stops; the average rate of speed adopted by passenger trains when in motion; the average rate of speed adopted by express trains, including stops; the average rate of speed adopted by express trains when in motion; the average rate of speed adopted by freight trains, including stops; the average rate of speed adopted by freight trains when in motion; the estimated aggregate weight in tons (of two thousand pounds) of passenger trains, exclusive of passengers and baggage, carried one mile; the estimated aggregate weight in tons (of two thousand pounds) of freight trains, exclusive of freight, carried one mile; the estimated aggregate weight in tons (of two thousand pounds) of gravel and other trains employed upon construction and repairs and their loads carried one mile, stating separately the aggregate weight of the trains and of their loads; the average weight in tons of passenger trains, inclusive of passengers and baggage; the average weight in tons of passenger trains, exclusive of passengers and baggage; the average weight in tons of freight trains, exclusive of freight; the average gross, also average net weight ordinarily drawn by the different classes of locomotives when worked to their full capacity, stating the weights respectively of the locomotives and of their tenders, and the ruling grades over which they pass when thus worked; the total amount of freight in tons, viz: The product of the forest; the product of animals; vegetable food; other agricultural products; manufactures; merchandise; other articles.

Ninth. As regards the expenses for the year of maintaining the road, showing separately the portions chargeable to passenger transportation and to freight transportation; the cost of the repairs of roadbed and railway (excepting the cost of the renewal of track and the repairs of the superstructure of wooden and iron bridges), viz: The cost of labor and materials, also the cost and expenses attending and consequent upon the use of engines and trains employed upon the repairs and maintenance of the road, also the repairs of such engines and trains and all items of cost connected with keeping the road in order; the length in feet of iron used in the renewal of track, with weight and cost thereof, also the weight and cost of all other iron used in the renewal of track; the cost of labor employed upon the renewal of track; the cost of the repairs of the superstructure of wooden bridges; the repairs of buildings; the repairs of fences and gates; the taxes on real estate; the totals of the above expenses of maintaining the road. The whole of the information under this head to be so given as to show separately the cost of materials and the cost of labor.

Tenth. As regards the expenses for the year of repairing machinery: Repairs of engines and tenders; the repairs of passenger and baggage cars; the repairs of tools and machinery in shops; the incidental expenses, including fuel, oil, clerks and watchmen about shop. The whole of the information under this head to be so given as to show separately the cost of materials and the cost of labor.

Eleventh. As regards the expenses for the year of operating the road, showing separately the portions chargeable to passenger transportation and to freight transportation: Office expenses, stationery, etc.; agents and clerks; labor, loading and unloading freight; porters, watchmen and switch tenders; wood and water station attendance; conductors, baggage and brakemen, enginemen and firemen; fuel (quantity, first cost and labor of preparing for use), showing separately the quantity, etc., of coal and the quantity, etc., of wood; oil and waste for engines and tenders; oil and waste for freight cars; oil and waste for passenger and baggage cars; loss and damage of goods and baggage; damages for injury to persons; damages to property, including damages by fire and cattle killed on road; general superintendence; contingencies; the totals of the above expenses of operating the road.

Twelfth. As regards the gross earnings, cash receipts and payments other than for constructions within the year: First, gross earnings from passengers; from freight; from carriage of the United States mail; from other sources. Second, cash receipts from passengers; from freight; from carriage of the United States mail; from other sources. Third, payments other than for construction—for transportation expenses, viz: Expenses of maintaining and operating the road and of repairs of machinery; for interest; for dividends (stating the rate per centum and when declared) to surplus fund; total amount of surplus fund.

Thirteenth. As regards accidents: The number of persons injured in life and limb, and the cause of the injury, and whether passengers or persons in the employ of the company, also whether caused from carelessness or negligence of any person in the employment of the company, and whether such person is retained in employ.

Fourteenth. Statements, etc., to accompany the report, viz.: A statement of the name, makers' name, dimensions and weight of each engine, together with the cost of repairs and number of miles run, and the condition of each for the year; a statement of the number of tons of freight transported, and of the number of passengers carried in each month of the year in each direction, showing separately the through freight and the through passengers in each direction, also of the aggregate amounts charged for the transportation of freight and carriage of passengers in each month of year in each direction, showing separately the amounts charged for through freight and through passengers in each direction, and the amounts charged for way freight and way passengers in each direction; a statement of the tonnage sent from, and of that received at each depot of the road in each month of the year, and also of the passengers leaving and of those arriving at each of said depots; a statement of the amount charged to construction during the year, with a distribution thereof among the several objects to which it was applied; a statement exhibiting in parallel columns: First, the gross earnings of the road during the year; second, the total expenses of maintaining and operating the road and of the repairs of machinery, and of all other expenses chargeable to the business of the year; and third, the net revenue of the year, so distributed as to show what portion of the said "gross earnings," "total expenses," etc., and "net revenue" should be credited to or charged against each class of tonnage transported, and each class of passengers carried in the year, or any other services that may have been performed by the company in said year, to be followed by a brief statement of the profit or loss, as the case may be, per ton of each class of freight transported, and per passenger of each class of passengers carried in the year, and of the profit or loss, as the case may be, for any other services performed by the company in said year.

2. Resolved, That the board of public works be and are hereby authorized and directed to prescribe the form or forms to be used by the several companies referred to in the preceding resolution, in making the annual reports required of them by the said resolution; and in preparing the said form or forms, the said board are hereby authorized and directed to call for any additional information that in their opinion would be necessary or useful in showing the true condition of the said companies, and the cost of transportation on their respective roads.

3. Resolved, That the several canal and navigation companies in this State shall also, on or before the fifteenth of November in each year, make a report to the board of public works of their condition, and the state of their affairs on the thirtieth of September, and of their operations in the year ending on that day, in such form as the board of public works shall prescribe; and that in preparing such form or forms the board of public works are hereby authorized and directed to require that the reports from the said companies respectively shall contain as full and minute information in regard to their condition, affairs and operations as is required by the preceding resolutions in regard to the condition, affairs and operations of the railroad companies referred to in said resolutions.

4. Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the board of public works to cause to be arranged, in tabular form, the information contained in the reports called for by the preceding resolutions, omitting only such details in the statements accompanying the said reports as may not be of general interest, and prepared together with the said reports, in a single document; and have the same printed by the fifteenth day of December of the year in which the said reports are made.

5. Resolved, That any railroad, canal or navigation company referred to in the preceding resolutions, which shall neglect to make the report required by the said resolutions, and as prescribed therein, shall be liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars, and that it shall be the duty of the board of public works to sue for the said penalty in the name of the Commonwealth.

6. Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the board of public works to furnish each of the railroad and canal and navigation companies aforesaid, on or before the first day of September in each and every year, with at least two copies of the form or forms aforesaid.

Mr. Holt: For the purpose of showing the establishment of the sinking fund and the object thereof created by the State of Virginia, we now read into the record Sections 28, 29 and 30 of Article 4 of the Constitution of Virginia of 1851. These Sections will be found at page 47 of the Code of Virginia of 1860.

For the same purpose, we read into the record an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, entitled An Act establishing a sinking fund and providing for the payment of the semi-annual interest on and redemption of the public debt, passed March 26th, 1853, and beginning at page 29 of the Acts of Assembly of Virginia of 1852-3.

The Master: The same course will be pursued in connection with that as has already been suggested in connection with legislation relating to railroad and navigation companies.

CODE OF VIRGINIA, 1860.

Article IV, Constitution of Virginia, Sections 28, 29, and 30, page 47.

28. The liability to the State of any incorporated company or institution to redeem the principal and pay the interest of any loan heretofore made, or which may hereafter be made by the State to such company or institution, shall not be released; and the General Assembly shall not pledge the faith of the State, or bind it in any form, for the debts or obligations of any company or corporation.

29. There shall be set apart annually, from the accruing revenues, a sum equal to seven per cent. of the State debt existing on the first day of January in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two. The fund thus set apart shall be called the Sinking Fund, and shall be applied to the payment of the interest of the State debt, and the principal of such part as may be redeemable. If no part be redeemable, then the residue of the Sinking Fund, after the payment of such interest, shall be invested in the bonds or certificates of debt of this Commonwealth, or of the United States, or of some of the States of this Union, and applied to the payment of the State debt as it shall become redeemable. Whenever, after the said first day of January, a debt shall be contracted by the Commonwealth, there shall be set apart in like manner, annually, for thirty-four years, a sum exceeding by one per cent. the aggregate amount of the annual interest agreed to be paid thereon at the time of its contraction; which sum shall be part of the Sinking Fund, and shall be applied in the manner before directed. The General Assembly shall not otherwise appropriate any part of the Sinking Fund or its accruing interest, except in time of war, insurrection or invasion.

30. The General Assembly may, at any time, direct a sale of the stocks held by the Commonwealth in internal improvement and other companies; but the proceeds of such sale, if made before the payment of the public debt, shall constitute a part of the Sinking Fund, and be applied in like manner.

ACTS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA—1852.

Chapter 17.—AN ACT establishing a sinking fund and providing for the payment of the semi-annual interest on and redemption of the public debt.

Passed March 26, 1853.

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly, That there shall be and is hereby appropriated annually from the public treasury, commencing with the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, out of the accruing revenues of the Commonwealth, the sum of eight hundred and thirty-eight thousand and twenty-eight dollars and sixty-eight cents, that sum being seven per centum on eleven million nine hundred and seventy-one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight dollars and thirty cents, the ascertained debt of the Commonwealth on the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two. The sum so set apart shall be called the "Sinking Fund," and shall be applied to the payment of the interest on the State debt, and the principal of such part as may be redeemable; and if no part of said debt be redeemable, then the residue of the sinking fund, after the payment of such interest, shall be invested in the bonds or certificates of the Commonwealth, or of the United States, or of some of the States of the Union, and applied to the payment of said debt as it shall become redeemable.

2. Whenever after the said first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty two, a debt shall be contracted by the Commonwealth, there shall be set apart, in like manner, annually for thirty-four years, a sum exceeding by one per cent the aggregate amount of the annual interest agreed to be paid thereon at the time of its contraction, which sum shall be part of the sinking fund, and shall be applied in the manner hereinbefore directed.

3. If at any time the legislature shall direct a sale of the stocks held by the Commonwealth in internal improvement and other companies, the proceeds of such sale, if made before the payment of the public debt, shall constitute a part of the sinking fund, and be applied in like manner. The sinking fund, and its accruing interest, shall not be otherwise appropriated than is herein directed, except in time of war, insurrection and invasion.

4. It shall be the duty of the auditor of public accounts, upon the receipt of statements of the amount of the public debt hereinafter required to be furnished him by the second auditor, to pay into the treasury of the Commonwealth, on or before the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and annually thereafter, out of the accruing revenues, such portion of the sum set apart for the sinking fund provided by this act, as shall be applied to the redemption of the State debt existing on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-two. He shall, in like manner, pay into the treasury, to the credit of said fund, on or before the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and on the same days of each successive year, the amount of the semi-annual interest on said debt which shall be due and payable at each respective date.

5. It shall also be his duty, in like manner, to pay into the treasury, on or before the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and annually for thirty-three years thereafter, out of the accruing revenues of the State, to the credit of the sinking fund, one per centum of the aggregate amount of the debt contracted by the State between the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and said day; and also to pay, in like manner, one per centum annually for thirty-four years on the aggregate amount of the debt which shall be contracted in each or any subsequent year. He shall pay, in like manner, into the treasury, to the credit of the sinking fund, on or before the first day of January and first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and on the same days in each successive year thereafter, the amount of the semi-annual interest which shall be due and payable on the aggregate amount of such additional debts at those days respectively: provided, however, that the amount of interest payable on that part of the debt created by the issue of coupon bonds, shall be set apart and paid into the treasury to the credit of said fund, thirty days in advance of the respective semi-annual periods on which it shall become due.

6. For the purpose of managing, preserving and applying the sinking fund created by this act, the auditor of public accounts, register and secretary of the Commonwealth, for the time being, are hereby constituted a corporate body under the style of "The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund."

7. It shall be their duty to apply the moneys appropriated out of the sinking fund to the payment of the interest and redemption of the principal of the State debt at the respective periods prescribed in the fourth and fifth sections of this act for the payment of the sinking fund into the treasury by the auditor of public accounts, and to invest any part of the appropriations for the latter purpose, which cannot be so applied to the purchase of public stock, agreeably to the provisions of the second and third sections of this act.

8. The said commissioners, at their discretion, may apply that part of the sinking fund set apart for the redemption of the principal of the debt, to the payment in the first place of such bonds and certificates as the State is bound to redeem at fixed periods, provided such bonds and certificates shall be redeemable by the State before the arrival of such fixed periods.

9. All the certificates of debt which shall be redeemable under this act, shall be canceled by the second auditor, and delivered by him to the treasurer of the Commonwealth at the time of payment therefor, who shall carefully preserve the same in his office.

10. At each period for the payment of the installment of interest and the redemption of any part of the principal of the debt, the said commissioners shall, by a special order entered on the minutes of their proceedings, authorize the second auditor to issue his warrants on the treasury, from time to time, to the persons entitled thereto, in the same manner as they have heretofore been paid in his office.

11. They shall cause to be published in the Enquirer and Whig of the city of Richmond, and in the Union and National Intelligencer of Washington city, a list of the bonds or certificates intended to be redeemed from time to time, at least three months previous to the time fixed upon by them for that purpose, showing the date, number and amount of each, and calling for the surrender thereof on or before a specified day, and stating that the interest thereon will cease on and after that day.

12. Any two of said commissioners may form a board for the transaction of business. They may appoint a secretary, and shall keep a correct journal of their proceedings, of which they shall make a report to each regular session of the legislature. They shall hold their meetings in the second auditor's office, in which their books and papers shall be deposited for safe keeping.

13. It shall be the duty of the second auditor to prepare the necessary statements, showing the amount of semi-annual interest payable on the public debt at each successive period, and the amount of the principal of the debt proposed to be redeemed at each or either of them, and to furnish the same to the commissioners of the sinking fund, by whom they shall, if approved, be certified to the auditor of public accounts for his government. He shall also prepare and deliver to the commissioners of the sinking fund, lists in detail of such bonds or certificates of State debt as they shall from time to time designate, for redemption, and furnish them with such other statements and information as they may at any time require of him. He shall keep the accounts of the sinking fund with the treasury in such manner as to show distinctly at all times the amount of the transactions on account of each appropriate head of receipts and expenditures, and shall report the same to each session of the legislature.

14. All moneys belonging to the sinking fund shall be paid into the treasury on the warrant of the second auditor, and shall be paid out in like manner when authorized by the commissioners of said fund.

15. The treasurer shall receive and pay the moneys belonging to the sinking fund as herein required. He shall keep a distinct account of the same, and report to each session of the legislature the aggregate receipts and disbursements on account thereof up to the first of October or first of January, as the case may be, preceding each session of the legislature, and the balance remaining unexpended at such time.

16. In order to collect in one office the accounts of the debt of the Commonwealth and the transaction of all business connected therewith, it is hereby provided that the existing certificates of debt of the State, registered in the office of the auditor of public accounts, and amounting to four hundred and fifty thousand one hundred and seven dollars, being part and remainder of the debt created by authority of an act to provide for the further subscriptions on the part of the State to the Exchange Bank and Northwestern Bank of Virginia, passed March nineteenth eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, shall, on and after the twentieth of December next, be registered and transferred to the second auditor's office, and the semi-annual interest accruing thereon shall be paid at the treasury out of the sinking fund, on his warrants, on and after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, until the said certificates shall be redeemed. The new certificates issued on transfers of said stock shall be countersigned by him; and all other duties which are imposed on auditor of public accounts, as well as any rights conferred in relation to said certificates of debt, shall, on and after the above day, be transferred to and devolve upon the second auditor, in whose office all the books and papers connected with said stock, which shall be necessary for the proper performance of said duties, shall be delivered to said second auditor; provided, that the amount of the semi-annual installment of interest of the first of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and the unclaimed interest on said debt, which shall remain due and unpaid on the first of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, shall be set apart and paid to the persons entitled thereto by the auditor of public accounts, in the manner, and out of the appropriations made by the laws now existing, and not out of the sinking fund herein provided.

17. The accruing interest on the six per cent. revolutionary debt of twenty-four thousand and thirty-nine dollars and seventeen cents, and the seven per cent. war debt of eighteen hundred and fourteen, of three hundred and nineteen thousand dollars, belonging to the Literary Fund, shall continue to be paid, when it becomes due, as heretofore, out of the public revenue, upon the warrant of the auditor of public accounts.

18. The semi-annual installment of interest, payable the first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, on the aggregate internal improvement debt, registered at that date in the second auditor's office, shall be provided for and paid, as heretofore directed by law, on the warrant of the second auditor, and should that be insufficient, the deficiency to be paid out of the public treasury; and any portion of the said installment or previous installments which shall remain unclaimed and unpaid on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, shall be paid in the same manner, from time to time, as it shall be applied for.

19. The semi-annual interest becoming due at the same time, on that part of the State debt of eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, registered in the office of the auditor of public accounts, shall, together with the unclaimed interest due thereon, be paid out of the public treasury on the warrant of said auditor; provided, that no part of the interest on the stock of either description above referred to shall be paid out of the sinking fund.

20. It shall be the duty of the board of public works to cause to be paid into the treasury, to the credit of the Commonwealth, on the first day of January and the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, or within thirty days after such dates, and semi-annually thereafter, the net surplus revenue of the fund for internal improvement during each half year preceding those days respectively, after deducting the fixed and incidental charges and special appropriations made by law on the revenue of said fund; provided, however, that nothing in this act is intended to discharge the said board from the obligation to pay the future semi-annual installments of the interest on the certificates of the internal improvement debt owned and held by the Literary Fund, as they shall hereafter become payable on and after the said first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three; but said interest shall be duly paid or set apart as a charge on said revenue before such surplus shall be ascertained and paid over as herein directed.

21. This act shall be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. Holt: and for the same purpose we read into the record an Act of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, entitled An Act to consolidate, re-establish and regulate the sinking fund of the State of Virginia, approved March 31st, 1875, and found beginning at page 420 of the Acts of Assembly of Virginia, 1874-5, page 420.

The Master: You will pursue the same course in connection with that.

ACTS OF ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA—1874-5.

Chapter 331—AN ACT to Consolidate, Re-establish and Regulate the Sinking Fund of the State of Virginia.

Approved March 31, 1875.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, that the bonds of the State of Virginia, heretofore purchased by the commissioners of the Sinking Fund, which was established under the act of Assembly passed March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, known as the funding act, all bonds which have been received by the State on account of debts due to her, or on account of the disposition of her interest in any of the railroad or other internal improvement companies, since the thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, the bonds received from the following sources being included: From the Richmond and Danville Railroad Company, eight hundred and twelve thousand four hundred and seventeen dollars and forty-four cents; from the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad Company, five hundred and thirty-one thousand two hundred and fifty-seven dollars and seventy cents; from the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company, eight hundred and seventy-four thousand six hundred and fifty-seven dollars and thirty-one cents; from the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad Company, one hundred and forty-four thousand twenty-four dollars and forty-nine cents; from the sale of the Desert tract of land, sixteen thousand dollars; from the Dismal Swamp Canal Company, twenty-four thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine dollars and ninety-eight cents; from the board of public works, on account of claims against Selden, Withers and Company, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, one hundred and forty thousand eight hundred and fifty-three dollars. Also the bonds of the State now in the hands of the auditor of public accounts, which were received by him in settlement of claims due to the State, amounting to forty-six thousand four hundred and thirteen dollars and five cents; and the principal and accumulated interest of the bonds held by the commissioners of the Sinking Fund, which was established by the Act of Assembly, passed March twenty-six, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, shall constitute the Sinking Fund of the State of Virginia, and the interest upon the bonds thereof shall be applied, from time to time, as the same shall accrue, to the purchase of other bonds of the State; which shall, when so purchased, continue to bear interest and constitute a part of the Sinking Fund.

2. Whatever sums may be realized from the claims of the State against Selden, Withers and Company, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, from the interest on the debt due to the State by the Richmond and Danville Railroad Company; and from the principal of the said debt when paid; from dividends and interest paid by any and all railroad or other internal improvement companies; upon stock or bonds owned by the State or debts due to the State; from the sale or disposition of such stocks, bonds, or debts; and all sums which may be realized from the claims of the State against the United States, and from the sales, or rents, or profits of any real estate now belonging to the Commonwealth, and from damages which may be recovered by the State against defaulting revenue officers, shall be paid into the treasury of the State to the credit of the Sinking Fund, hereby authorized and established.

3. The commissioners of the Sinking Fund are directed to calculate the interest on the bonds of the old Sinking Fund, established by the act of March twenty-six, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, up to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-five; and to fund the principal and interest thereof in registered bonds, in their name; and all bonds now belonging to the said fund, or assigned thereto by this act, and all bonds hereafter purchased with the funds thereof shall be so converted or transferred.

4. The commissioners of the Sinking Fund shall keep regular and sufficient set of books, wherein shall be recorded all of their proceedings, showing their receipts and disbursements, and shall report the condition of the fund, and their proceedings with reference thereto, at each regular session of the General Assembly. The books and papers of the commissioners shall be kept in the office of the second auditor; the bonds shall be kept in the office of the treasurer.

5. Before the payment of interest on any portion of the public debt the auditor of public accounts shall pay into the treasury, to the credit of the Sinking Fund, the sum of one hundred and fifty-four thousand three hundred and twenty-four dollars, for arrearages of interest at four per centum per annum, due to that fund, as established by the act of March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one. And upon the Sinking Fund, as established by this act, he shall pay into the treasury, on the first day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-five, and the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, and on the first day of July, and the first day of January, every year thereafter, a sum equal to two per centum upon the whole amount of bonds held by the said fund, and the residue of State revenue in excess of the amount appropriated for the payment of interest on the public debt and the necessary expenses of government, which sums, when authorized by the commissioners of the Sinking Fund, shall be drawn from the treasury, on the warrant of the second auditor, from time to time, as may be ordered by the said commissioners, and shall be by them invested in the purchase of bonds of the State of Virginia; which shall, when so purchased by them and registered in their names, become a part of Sinking Fund, and continue to bear interest, in like manner with the other bonds of the said fund. In making their purchases under this act, the said commissioners shall be guided by the state of the market, giving the preference to that class of bonds which can be bought at the lowest rates.

6. In all cases in which bonds shall be funded under this act, West Virginia certificates shall be issued for one-third of the amount, in the name of the said commissioners, and shall be held by them as an offset against any claim which the State of West Virginia may hereafter set up against this State upon final settlement of the respective liabilities of the two States for the public debt.

7. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. Holt: I introduce an Act of the Legislature of Virginia of February 11th, 1832, prescribing general conditions on which future subscriptions to joint stock companies are to be made, found at page 71 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia of 1832. Also in the same connection I introduce an Act of the Legislature of Virginia providing for the negotiation of loans for the purpose of internal improvement, passed April 9th, 1838, found in the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia of 1838, at page 24.

Chap. LXXXI.—AN ACT prescribing certain general conditions on which future subscriptions to the capital of joint stock companies shall be made on behalf of the Commonwealth.

(Passed February 11th, 1832.)

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That all subscriptions which are now authorized by law, and have not been made by the Board of Public Works, or which may hereafter be so authorized, shall be subject to the following conditions previous to subscription, to-wit: In every case the Board of Public Works shall be furnished with a certificate, under the seal of the company, signed by their treasurer, and countersigned by their president, stating that at least one-fourth of the private subscriptions of not less than three-fifths of the capital stock, has been actually paid up into the hands of the said treasurer, and that the remainder of said subscription is either so paid, or is made by solvent persons fully able to pay; and these facts shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Board of Public Works. They shall also be furnished with a list of the stockholders, showing the number of shares standing in each name. If any private improvement shall have been commenced previously to the subscription there to being authorized or made, the Board of Public Works shall be furnished with a statement, showing the amount of money received up to the date of such statement, and on what account received, and of the amount expended in the work, together with the balance of money on hand, the contracts entered into for the construction of the improvement, the exact progress made therein, as near as may be, its dimensions, its mode of construction, and a correct map of its location.

proportion to the amount payable by the Board of Public Works. But should the fund for internal improvement be inadequate, in the opinion of the said board, to the payment of the full amount of the instalments aforesaid, after providing for the subscriptions previously made, then their subscription shall be payable in such proportions, and at such periods, as the said board may deem expedient.

3. Whenever it shall happen in any year that the funds of the board, applicable to the purpose, shall prove insufficient to discharge when due the full amount of the instalments of subscriptions actually made, then and in that case, it shall be the duty of the said board to expend the funds so applicable, as far as they will go, in the payment of the instalments of such subscriptions as shall stand first in point of order, according to the date of resolutions of the Board of Public Works making the said subscriptions: and the fund for internal improvement shall not be chargeable with any interest, in consequence of such suspension in the payment of the whole, or any part of said instalments.

4. Whenever the Board of Public Works, having made any subscription to the stock of any company, shall have good cause to believe that the private subscriptions are improperly withheld, or that the funds of the company are misapplied, or will probably be misapplied, it shall be the duty of the said board to withhold payment of their subscription until proper legal measures can be taken to secure the faithful payment of private subscriptions and the faithful application of the funds of the company.

5. The Board of Public Works shall have the right to appoint such a number of the directors in all companies hereafter incorporated, to whose stock the Board of Public Works may subscribe, as will be in proportion to the stock so subscribed; and the fund for internal improvement shall participate in all dividends declared by said companies, in the proportion which the amount actually paid on behalf of the State, bears to the amount of private subscriptions actually paid up at the time of declaring such dividends; and in all general meetings of the stockholders of such company, the proxy or proxies representing the interest of the fund for internal improvement, shall have the right to vote on all questions, and in the election of all officers except directors, in the manner, and under the limitations contained in the twentieth section of the act, entitled, "an act prescribing certain general regulations for the incorporation of turnpike companies," passed the seventh day of February, eighteen hundred and seventeen.

6. It shall be the duty of the president and directors of every such company, to the stock of which the Board of Public Works shall subscribe as aforesaid, annually, on or before the seventh day of December, to furnish to the secretary of the Board of Public Works a report of the income and expenditure of every such company, for the next preceding year, including payments made by the stockholders, as well as tolls, together with a statement of the progress and condition of their works, a list of the stockholders at the time of making said report, with the number of shares standing in each name, and such other information respecting the affairs of said company, as the Board of Public Works may require. It shall also be the duty of the president and directors of such company, within sixty days after any dividend shall have been declared by them, to give information thereof to the second auditor, and to pay into the public treasury, to the credit of the fund for internal improvement, within the said period, any such dividend to which the Board of Public Works may be entitled: and in case of failure, either on the part of the president and directors of such company, in furnishing such report and information, or of the treasurer of such company in paying such dividends as aforesaid the president and directors or the treasurer, as the case may be, of each company so failing, shall individually forfeit and pay to the Board of Public Works a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars; which said dividends and penalty may be recovered by motion in the general court, on ten days' previous notice.

7. All acts and parts of acts coming within the purview of this act shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

8. This act shall be in force from and after passing thereof.

ACTS OF ASSEMBLY, 1838.

Chapter 12.—An ACT providing for the negotiation of loans for purposes of internal improvement.
(Passed April 9, 1838.)

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, that all loans hereafter authorized by law for the payment of subscriptions on behalf of the Commonwealth to the capital of joint stock companies incorporated for purposes of internal improvement, or for defraying the expense of any work of internal improvement in which the State is or may be interested, as well as all such loans heretofore authorized, shall be negotiated according to the provisions of this act, except so far as may be otherwise specially provided by the acts authorizing the loans.

2. The board of public works, in effecting such loans, shall borrow upon the credit of the Commonwealth, at the lowest rate of interest at which the necessary amount can be obtained, not exceeding in any case five per centum per annum. Upon the payment of the money so borrowed into the treasury, which shall be done upon the warrant of the second auditor, the treasurer shall issue a certificate or certificates of loan for the amount thereof, purporting that the Commonwealth of Virginia owes to the lender, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, the principal sum so borrowed, together with the interest at the rate agreed on, that the interest is payable semi-annually at the treasury of the Commonwealth, and that such certificate or certificates were issued under authority of the special act authorizing such loans. Each certificate shall be signed by the treasurer, and countersigned by the second auditor, and be registered in a book to be kept for that purpose by the second auditor, and shall be transferable on the books of his office in person or by attorney. The semi-annual interest on such certificate shall be paid on his warrant, and upon the transfer of the whole or any part thereof, shall be delivered up and cancelled, and a new certificate or certificates equal to its whole amount, shall be issued and registered in manner aforesaid. All loans negotiated in conformity to this act shall be irredeemable for twenty years, but shall afterwards be redeemable at the pleasure of the General Assembly.

3. For the payment of the interest, and the final redemption of the principal of any sum to be borrowed in conformity to this act, the stock of any joint stock company subscribed for or purchased with the money so borrowed, together with the dividends and other net income which may accrue therefrom to the Commonwealth, or to the fund for internal improvement, shall be, and the same are hereby appropriated and pledged; and in like manner the net income and other profits which may so accrue from works in which the State is interested, other than those of joint stock companies, and on which the money borrowed is to be expended, shall be and the same are likewise hereby appropriated and pledged for the payment of the interest and redemption of the principal of the money so borrowed; and if the stock aforesaid, and the said dividends, net profits and other income shall be inadequate to the payment of the said semi-annual interest, and the final redemption of the principal of the respective loans, the General Assembly pledges itself to provide other and sufficient funds, and for that purpose to levy, if necessary, an adequate tax upon any or all subjects liable to taxation under the constitution. Until such other sufficient funds shall be provided, so much of the income of the fund for internal improvement, not otherwise specially appropriated, as may be necessary to supply the deficiency, is hereby pledged for such purpose; and if at any time the dividends and other income arising from the stock or work as aforesaid, together with the income of the fund for internal improvement, shall be insufficient to pay the interest due upon the loan when demanded, the auditor of public accounts shall, upon the application of the Board of Public Works, issue his warrant upon the treasury, directing the payment of such interest out of any moneys therein not otherwise appropriated. And in case of the inability of the treasury at any time to discharge such warrants, the Board of Public Works shall be and they are hereby authorized to borrow the necessary amount from the banks of this State, at a rate of interest not exceeding six per centum per annum, on the credit of the Commonwealth, to be repaid in such manner as the General Assembly may by law direct.

ment of such stock or such work, and the interest accruing therefrom shall also from time to time be invested and held in like manner; and the said certificates of debt so purchased, together with the stock pledged, shall be disposed of in such manner as the General Assembly may direct: Provided, That the certificates so purchased on account of any particular loan, or such part thereof as may be necessary, shall from time to time be sold by the Board of Public Works to reimburse the fund for internal improvement for all payments of interest made out of the income for that fund on account of such loan, by virtue of this act.

5. The Board of Public Works shall be and they are hereby fully authorized and empowered to procure any or all of the loans authorized by law, either in the United States or in Europe, as they may deem most advantageous to the public interest, and for that purpose to appoint, if they see fit, one or more agents, with the necessary powers and to allow him or them such compensation as they may deem reasonable. In the event of a loan or loans being effected in Europe, the said Board may provide for the payment of the interest on the same semi-annually, in London or elsewhere, and may stipulate for the payment by the lenders of the amount of such loans in England or elsewhere, conforming the certificates to be issued to the terms of the loans. They shall also be empowered generally to do and execute all such acts and writings as may be necessary to complete the said loans, and to cause the prompt payment of the amount thereof into the public treasury.

6. Be it further enacted, That the person or persons, body or bodies politic or corporate, in whose names any of the certificates of the public debt of this Commonwealth shall be issued, in conformity to the provisions of this act, shall be deemed as to the Commonwealth the owner of the said stock until a transfer shall be duly made on the books of the second auditor, or other proper officer, to some other person or body politic or corporate. And if the person or body politic or corporate, in whose name the said certificate shall stand, shall for valuable consideration, and bona fide, sell and deliver the said stock to any other person, body politic or corporate accompanied by a power of attorney duly executed and authenticated, such sale and delivery shall vest in the transferree all the title of the transferrer, either in law or equity, to the said certificate; and upon the application of the attorney, and delivery of the certificate of debt therein assigned to the second auditor, or other proper officer of the Commonwealth, it shall be his duty to transfer the same, and issue a new certificate or certificates therefor in the name of the transferree: Provided, however, that all payments made by the Commonwealth prior to such transfer, on account of the interest on such certificate, shall discharge the Commonwealth from all claim on account of the interest so paid.

7. If any person, in whose name the said stock shall stand on the books of the Commonwealth, shall die without having made a sale or transfer thereof, and his executor or administrator shall produce to the second auditor, or other proper officer, the original certificate or certificates of the said stock, and duly authenticated evidence that he is, by the laws of the country in which such holder may have died, the lawful executor or administrator of such holder, the second auditor shall, on his application in person, or by power of attorney duly authenticated, transfer the said stock to the said executor or administrator, or to such person as he may direct.

8. Whenever any certificate of stock created in pursuance of the provisions of this act, or by authority of any previous act, for purposes of internal improvement, shall have been lost by the holder or holders thereof, it shall and may be lawful for the second auditor and treasurer to renew the same in the manner mentioned in this act: Provided, however, that such certificate shall not be renewed until the party applying for the same shall produce satisfactory proof of his having advertised the same for at least three months previously to his application; shall execute a bond with sufficient security, to the treasurer and his successors, conditioned to indemnify the Commonwealth against any loss in consequence of the renewal of such certificate, and shall moreover file an affidavit setting forth the time, place and circumstances of the loss aforesaid.

9. It shall be lawful for any bank incorporated in this Commonwealth, through its proper officers, and by the authority, and under the direction of the said board, to act as the agent of the Board of Public Works in negotiating, obtaining or contracting for any loan which may be so authorized, and to do all necessary acts for the transfer of the proceeds of such loan into the public treasury, in specie or other satisfactory funds, by bills of exchange or otherwise, and to make on behalf of the said board the necessary arrangements for the punctual and regular payment of the interest on such loan, according to the terms of the contract therefor.

10. And whereas, should large sums be borrowed, of which a considerable part would necessarily lie idle until required for the purposes for which the loans may be respectively designed, whereby a great loss of interest would be incurred, the Board of Public Works may deposit the same with the banks of this Commonwealth, at such rate of interest as may be agreed upon by the board and said banks. The said board may also lend such part thereof to joint stock companies, as the said companies may be entitled by law to receive from them at subsequent periods, on such conditions and security as the board may deem expedient.

11. This act shall be in force from its passage.

The Master: I will say, so far as counsel for Virginia are concerned, they do not have to button right down to this thing now. Any time before we suspend this hearing this record may be modified to suit the judgment or the agreement of both parties concerned. That means, of course, they do not have to take it up during the intermission and take their time and work on it.

Mr. Lilly: The greater expense is in the stenographic work rather than the printing.

The Master: If the stenographers get the Acts out and later on they are stipulated, they will of course have to be paid for it.

Mr. Holt: We now offer and read into the record for the purpose of showing an official admission on the part of the State of Virginia made on the 7th day of September, 1863, that the assets then on hand were sufficient to practically discharge the total indebtedness of the State of Virginia, the message of John Letcher, then Governor of said State, to the Senate and House of Delegates of Virginia.

The Master: Found in what volume?

Mr. Holt: Found in volume entitled Journal, House of Delegates, 1863-64, Virginia.

The Master: That I presume you would want printed in full, because if a construction like that is predicated upon it I would want the whole document.

Mr. Holt: I said we offered the message, but I should have said a part of the message which I will indicate. The portion of the message to be read into the record begins with the last paragraph found on page 16, and continues through page 17 to the signature of the Governor.

JOURNAL HOUSE OF DELEGATES—CONFEDERATE VIRGINIA, 1863-64.

On pages XVI-XVII, Doc. No. 1, of said volume will be found certain paragraphs from Governor Letcher's message of date of September 7, 1863, pertaining to the indebtedness of the State of Virginia.

"I suggest whether it would not be wise to dispose of the interest which the State holds in our various internal improvement companies, under such restrictions as may be deemed proper, and apply the proceeds arising therefrom to the payment of the State debt. We could at this time dispose of these stocks to great advantage; and such an application of the proceeds would reduce the debt to a comparatively small sum. It is the part of wisdom to extinguish our debt as rapidly as possible, and any measure which will produce this result, will greatly increase public confidence.

This statement has been prepared with great care, and after consultation with our auditors, and will, I believe, be found accurate and reliable.

I have thus brought to your attention such matters as are deserving of consideration at this session of the General Assembly. I have only to add, in conclusion, that I hope harmony and unity will attend your deliberations; that wisdom will dictate your measures, and that they will promote the honor, interests and prosperity of the Commonwealth and the Confederacy.

Respectfully,

JOHN LETCHER."

In conjunction with the message of Governor Letcher, we now introduce, and for the same purpose, the message to the Legislature of the State of Virginia of Governor Gilbert C. Walker, dated the 8th day of March, and found in Journal of the House of Delegates, 1869-70, Document No. 6.

The Master: That will be printed in full.

Mr. Lilly: So far as it refers to the debt.

The Master: Certainly, so much of it as relates to the debt.

Unsettled claims against the State of West Virginia.

Of these various stocks, bonds and claims, some are worth about par, some are much below par, but constantly improving in value, while others are worthless.

Considering them in the order above named, it is probably safe to say that the bonds of the Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire Railroad Company are good, and that the full amount, $50,862.40, will be paid. These bonds were given by the company in payment for stock held by the State, and sold to the company at $5 per share, and are secured by mortgage upon its franchise and real and personal property. There are three bonds of $16,954.13 each, and due, respectively, on the 7th day of April, in the years 1872, 1874 and 1877; and the terms of sale of the stock by the State, as well as the prosperous condition of the company, justify the confident expectation that they will be promptly paid at maturity.

The Blue Ridge Railroad was built by the State at a cost of $1,744,723.23. By an act of the General Assembly, passed March 1, 1867, the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company was authorized to purchase the interest of the State in this work, "by the surrender of State bonds to an amount equal to the value of said road at the time of purchase under the contract with the Virginia Central Railroad Company, said amount to be ascertained by the commissioners of the Covington and Ohio Railroad." The Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company have not yet completed the purchase of this interest, nor is it authoritatively known by the Board of Public Works that said commissioners have ascertained the amount which is to be paid by the same, although it is believed that the amount will be from one-third to one-half of the amount of said interest.

The Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company was formed by the consolidation of the Virginia Central and the Covington and Ohio Railroad Companies, under the law above mentioned, and succeeds to all the rights and liabilities of each of those companies. By the terms of said law, said company has "the right, at any time within two years after its organization to purchase the stock paid by the State in said company at the date of the purchase, by transferring to the Board of Public Works bonds of the State for an amount equal to the stock proposed to be purchased, and also to pay any debt which it may owe the State at the date of the payment, on account of loans made to any of the companies which may have consolidated, by surrendering to the Board of Public Works State bonds for an amount equal to the debt proposed to be paid." The consolidation above referred to was perfected August 15, 1868, and by the terms of the above quoted law, the right of said company to purchase the stock or pay the debts which the State holds in and against the same, will expire on the 15th day of August, 1870. The debt due the State by this company for loans and interest on the same, and for the use of the Blue Ridge Railroad, amounting to $460,147.24, is perfectly good, and will be paid. It is also hoped that this company will redeem the stock owned by the State therein, amounting to $2,013,987.50, as provided by the law above quoted. This company has been recently reorganized, and now numbers in its board of directors some of the ablest and wealthiest financiers, as well as some of the most experienced, energetic and competent railroad men in the country. The unfinished portion of the road is being put under contract, and the whole work, it is said, will be rapidly pushed to an early completion to the Ohio River. When completed it will indoubtedly prove to be one of the most profitable and valuable public improvements of the country, and of immense commercial and pecuniary advantage to our State. It must soon become one of the greatest arteries through which will be poured the vast and increasing commerce of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys and the Northwest to our own cities and seaboard, as well as to cities and communities to the north of us. The interest of the State in this company, if not purchased by it, will, it is confidently believed, at no distant day rise to par in value; provided, always, that the undertakings and representations of those now controlling this improvement are fully and promptly executed.

The Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad Company's bonds, held by the State and secured by a first mortgage upon its property, are worth nearly par. No dividends have been paid upon either the preferred or common stock since the war, but if the road continues to prosper and increase in its business and capabilities as it has for the past four years, the stock will soon be as valuable as any railroad stock in the State.

The bonds of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company are also secured by first mortgage on the company's property, and rate much higher in the market than our State bonds. The Manassas Gap Railroad has been transferred to this company, under an act of the General Assembly, passed February 14, 1867, and the corporate name of the company changed to the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Railroad Company; and in that transfer the State surrendered or donated to this company its interest in the original Manassas Gap Railroad. The road from Manassas Junction has been rebuilt and extended to Harrisonburg, so that it now commands the business of a very large, wealthy and growing section of the State. No dividends have been paid upon either the preferred or common stock since the war, nor is it safe to anticipate a resumption of payment of dividends for some years to come, although the business of the company is constantly improving and the stock daily increasing in value.

The Richmond and Danville Railroad Company's loans, amounting, with interest, to $658,987.02, are well secured, and may be reckoned among the solvent and best assets held by the State. This road has rapidly recuperated since the war, and with its large increasing business, ought to be able, in a few years, to resume the payment of dividends upon its common stock.

In the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad Company, the interest of the State consists only of common stock, not now dividend paying, but with the general increase of prosperity and business, it ought in a few years to be nearly or quite at par.

The stock of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad Company rates higher than any other railroad stock in the State, and will doubtless soon become dividend paying.

The Richmond and York River Railroad Company's preferred and common stock, held by the State, will not, for some time to come, prove a source of revenue to the State.

The State owns $800,000 of the 7 per cent. mortgage bonds of the Southside Railroad Company, and on the 1st of January, 1870, the accrued and unpaid interest thereon amounted to $280,000. These bonds were originally secured by a first mortgage upon the property of the company, but the legislature, by an act passed January 18, 1866, authorized the company to issue and dispose of its bonds to an amount equal to an amount not exceeding the balance due upon a loan made to the company by the State under an act of the General Assembly passed February, 1853 (the same loan above mentioned), to be secured by a mortgage upon the property of the company, "the full force and effect of such mortgage to the State (first above mentioned) being hereby suspended, and the claims thereof are hereby postponed until the bonds issued under the mortgage herein authorized to be given in its place and stead, as aforesaid, shall have been paid." (See Acts of Assembly, 1865-6, pages 337-8.) The company mortgaged its property to secure about $700,000 of its bonds, issued by authority of this act, but notwithstanding the subrogation of this mortgage to the lien of the State, the claim of the State, amounting, with interest, January 1, 1870, to $1,080,000, is considered a solvent asset, and it is believed the company will soon be able to resume the payment of interest thereon. The common stock, under the impulse of prosperity, and the increasing business of the company, is constantly appreciating, and if the wise policy which now controls the management of this road shall continue, it will one day, not many years in the future, become a dividend paying stock.

The stock held by the State of the Virginia and Kentucky Railroad Company, amounting to $103,438.69, is at present valueless. Work upon this road will probably be soon resumed, and when completed this stock may become valuable.

The Virginia and Tennessee Railroad is one of the most valuable and important public improvements in the State. The volume of business has annually increased since the war, and if its success in the future shall continue to increase in the same ratio as it has during the past four years, within the next five years it will be able to pay a dividend upon its common stock. Its preferred, and even common stock, will, in four or five years, rate at or near par. A loan made by the State to this company of $1,000,000 is claimed by the company to have been paid during the war, but this claim is disputed by the State, and can only be settled by the courts. As soon as our courts are organized a statement of the facts can probably be agreed upon by the State and the company, and the case be submitted to and decided by the proper tribunal. If judgment shall be given in favor of the State it will be paid by the company. The claim and interest amounted, on the 1st of January, 1870, to $1,455,000.

The stock of the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad Company was obtained by the State by Selden, Withers & Co. It is improving in value, but not worth par.

The interest on the James River and Kanawha Canal Company owned by the State, amounting to $10,400,000, is of no considerable marketable value. The State and private stockholders in this company could well afford, if authorized, to surrender gratuitously all its and their interests to any persons or corporation who would undertake, under suitable guarantees, to complete that important improvement. The interest of the "other navigation companies" is of no particular value.

The interest of the State in the various plank-road and turnpike companies, amounting to $2,182,318.72, is comparatively worthless.

The claim of the State against the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, being for interest paid on account of the bonds of that company guaranteed by the State, is in process of settlement; and the agents of the State who have the matter in charge are confident that the State will soon realize therefrom, less expenses, nearly or quite the sum of $600,000.

From the claim against Selden, Withers & Co., it is believed the State will realize about the sum of $150,000.

Relative to the claims against the State of West Virginia, for her proportion of the public debt, three commissioners have been appointed by this State, and provision has been made for the appointment of a like number by West Virginia, to adjust the same. It is hoped that an early settlement will be reached. Any discussion of the merits or amount of this claim would be out of place in this paper. It may not be improper to remark, however, that it would seem from the language of the act of March 21, 1867, that our General Assembly were of the opinion that West Virginia ought to assume and pay one-third of the public debt.

From this brief review of the assets and securities held by the State it will be observed that $2,612,776.37 are considered of equal or greater value than State bonds at present quotations, consisting of the following items—viz.:

Bonds Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire Railroad Company	$ 50,862 49
Bonds Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, with interest, and including use of Blue Ridge Railroad	460,147 24
Bonds of Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad, with interest	141,371 82
Bonds Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Railroad Company, with interest	276,207 89
Bonds Richmond and Danville Railroad Company, with interest	658,987 02
Stock Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad Company	275,200 00
Amount to be realized from claim vs. Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, less expenses, and claim vs. Selden, Withers & Co.	750,000 00
	$2,612,776 37

(The balance in the treasury is not included among these items, for the reason that a portion of it will, necessarily be used to meet the current expenses of the government, and the disposition of the remainder is at the discretion of the General Assembly.) It will also be observed that of the assets, $10,048,267.91, it is hoped in a few years will be equal in value to State bonds, and will be available for the redemption of the State debt, as follows:

Stock Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company	$ 2,013,987 50
Stock Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad Company	1,199,970 00
Stock Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Railroad Company	874,000 00
Stock Richmond and Danville Railroad Company	1,188,598 50
Stock Richmond and Petersburg Railroad Company	385,600 00
Stock Southside Railroad Company	303,500 00
Stock Virginia and Tennessee Railroad Company	2,300,000 00
Stock Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad Company	202,611 91
Bonds Southside Railroad Company, including interest	1,080,000 00
	$10,048,267 91

Deducting the amount of solvent assets which are immediately available for the redemption of the State debt, viz: $2,612,776.37, together with those which it is hoped and believed will become available for that purpose in a few years, viz: $10,048,267.91, from the gross amount of assets first above mentioned, leaves a balance of $21,302,233.62, which is not now, and probably never will become, of much value to the State. But, in addition to this large amount, the State has lost, abandoned or surrendered and released the following large sums, viz:

Subscription paid to Covington and Ohio Railroad Company	$3,206,461 83
Subscription paid to Fredericksburg and Gordonsville Railroad Company	163,299 00
Subscription paid to City Point Railroad Company	110,000 00
Subscription paid to Blue Ridge Railroad Company, say	1,100,000 00
Subscription paid to Manassas Gap Railroad Company	2,280,000 00
Subscription paid to Portsmouth and Roanoke Railroad Company	406,650 00
Subscription to Roanoke Valley Railroad Company	207,402 00
Subscription to Winchester and Potomac Railroad Company	270,000 00
Subscription to Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire Railroad Company	1,017,248 00
Subscription to navigation and other companies	293,032 05
Loss by Selden, Withers & Co., and Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company	580,000 00
	$9,789,092 88

Which, added to the amount above stated as comparatively valueless, makes the enormous sum of $31,041,326.50, or nearly the amount of the old State debt.

Mr. Holt: In conjunction with the sinking fund, we introduce into the record Section 27 of the Constitution of Virginia, adopted in 1864, and found in the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, 1861-5, page 15.

ACTS OF ASSEMBLY, VIRGINIA, 1861 to 1865.

Sections 27, 28 and 29, Constitution of the State of Virginia, 1864.

27. The General Assembly shall provide by law for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of Virginia, proper to be borne by the State of Virginia and West Virginia respectively; and may authorize, in conjunction with the State of West Virginia, the sale of all lands and property of every description, including all stocks and other interests owned and held by the State of Virginia in banks, works of internal improvement, and other companies at the time of the formation of the State of West Virginia, and no ordinance passed by the convention which assembled at Wheeling on the eleventh day of June, eighteen hundred and sixty-one adjusting the public debt between Virginia and West Virginia, shall be binding upon this State.

It shall not provide for the payment of any debt or obligation created in the name of the State of Virginia by the usurped and pretended State authorities at Richmond. And it shall not allow any county, city or corporation, to levy or collect any tax for the payment of any debt created for the purpose of aiding any rebellion against the State or the United States.

The Legislature shall not provide for the payment of any bonds now held by rebels in arms against the State or United States government.

28. The General Assembly may at any time direct the sale of the stocks held by the Commonwealth in internal improvements, and other companies located within the limits of this Commonwealth, but the proceeds of such sale, if made before the payment of the public debt, shall be appropriated to the payment thereof.

29. No debt shall be contracted by this State except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State or to suppress insurrection, repel invasion or defend the State in time of war. If the State becomes a stockholder in any association or corporation for purposes of internal improvements, such stock shall be paid for at the time of subscription, or a tax shall be levied for the ensuing year sufficient to pay the subscription in full.

Mr. Holt:

Now, upon the subject of interest, in the event that question should be involved before the Master, we read into the record the report of the case of Virginia against West Virginia, found in 11th Wallace, Supreme Court Reports, at page ——, showing when this suit was instituted and when it was terminated.

(A stipulation was subsequently entered into covering the report referred to.)

Mr. Holt:

Likewise as bearing contingently upon the subject of interest, and I might add for any other purpose found useful, we read into the record an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved March 30th, 1871, providing for the funding and payment of the public debt, found in Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, 1870-1871, Chapter 282.

The Master: The same understanding applies to that as to the railroad and navigation companies' legislation.

ACTS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA, 1870-71.

Chap. 282.—AN ACT to Provide for the Funding and Payment of the Public Debt.

Approved March 30, 1871.

Whereas, in the formation of the State of West Virginia, there were included within its boundaries about one-third of the territory and population of the State of Virginia; and whereas, in the ordinance authorizing the organization of said State, it was provided that the said State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, which provision has not yet been fulfilled, although repeated and earnest efforts in that behalf have been made by this State, and will continue to be made as long as may be necessary; and, whereas, the people of this Commonwealth are anxious for the prompt liquidation of her portion of said debt, which is estimated to be two-thirds of the same; and, whereas, it has been suggested that the authorities of West Virginia may prefer to pay that State's portion of said debt to the holders thereof and not to this State, as the Constitution of this State provides; now, therefore, to enable the State of West Virginia to settle her proportion of said debt with the holders thereof, and to prevent any complications or difficulties which might be interposed to any other manner of settlement, and for the purpose of promptly restoring the credit of Virginia by providing for the prompt and certain payment of the interest upon her proportion of said debt as the same shall become due; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That from and after the passage of this act, no bond, certificate, or other evidence of indebtedness, shall be issued for any portion of the debt of this State; nor shall any interest be paid upon any part or portion of said debt, except as hereinafter provided.

2. The owners of any of the bonds, stocks, or interest certificates heretofore issued by this State, which are recognized by its Constitution and laws as legal, except the five per centum dollar bonds, and what are known as sterling bonds, but including the stock of the old James River Company, and the bonds of the James River and Kanawha Company guaranteed by this State, may fund two-thirds of the amount of the same, together with two-thirds of the interest due or to become due thereon, to the first day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, in six per centum coupons or registered bonds of this State of the denominations of one hundred, and the multiples thereof, dated that day, and to become due and payable in thirty-four years after that date, but redeemable at the pleasure of the State after ten years, the interest to be payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year. The bonds shall be made payable to order of bearer, and the coupons to bearer, at the treasury of the State, and bonds payable to order may be exchangeable for bonds payable to bearer, and registered bonds may be exchanged for coupon bonds, or vice versa, at the option of the holder. The coupons shall be payable semi-annually, and be receivable at and after maturity for all taxes, debts, dues and demends due the State, which shall be so expressed on their face; and the bonds shall bear on their face a declaration to the effect that the redemption thereof is secured by a sinking fund provided for by law under which they are issued. The holders of the five per centum dollar bonds may in like manner fund the same in like bonds, bearing, however, five instead of six per centum interest. In the funding herein authorized, for any fractional sums less than one hundred dollars, certificates shall be issued bearing the same date and rate of interest, and payable at the same time as the bonds issued under this section; which certificates, in sums of one hundred dollars, or any multiple thereof, shall be exchangeable for bonds of the character herein authorized to be issued for any fractional sums less than one hundred dollars, which may remain in making such exchange.

interest accruing on the principal of said bonds, after July first, eighteen hundred and seventy-one; and for the interest accrued to said date certificates dated on that day shall be issued, drawing the same rate of interest as the bonds, two-thirds of which shall be paid as provided to be paid on the bonds. The remaining one-third of unpaid interest, both on the bonds and certificates, shall be payable in money, and the principal of said certificates in new sterling bonds of the same character as the old, in accordance with such final settlement as shall be made with West Virginia.

4. The treasurer is hereby authorized and directed to forthwith cause to be prepared, engraved or litographed, registered bonds and bonds with coupons and certificates of the character mentioned in the second and third sections of this act; and when prepared, shall commence the issuance of same as herein provided. The bonds and certificates shall be signed by the treasurer, and countersigned by the second auditor; the coupons shall be signed by the treasurer, or a fac simile of his signature shall be stamped or engraved thereon. Each denomination of bonds herein authorized to be issued, both registered and coupon, shall constitute a series, and the bonds of each series shall be numbered from one upwards, as they are issued; and the coupons in addition to the number of the bond to which they are attached, shall be numbered from one to sixty-seven. Each class of certificates authorized to be issued by this act shall be numbered, respectively, from one upwards, and in addition thereto, each certificate shall contain the number and date of the bond or certificate on account of which it is issued. Each bond, certificate of stock, and interest certificate, to be funded as herein provided, shall first be delivered to the second auditor, who shall calculate and determine the amount for which a bond shall be issued, and the amount for which certificates shall be issued, under the second and third sections of this act; which calculations shall be endorsed, dated and signed by him on the back of such bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate, and he shall cause a proper registry thereof, together with the date and number of the bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate, to be made and kept in his office. After such endorsement and registration, the second auditor shall deliver the bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate to the treasurer, who shall thereupon deliver to him a bond or bonds and certificates of the character named in the second and third sections of this act, duly signed and numbered, for the several amounts, respectively, according to said endorsement. The second auditor, after making a proper registry of said bond or bonds, and certificates to be kept in his office, shall deliver the same to the person entitled to them. The treasurer shall, by proper endorsement, written or stamped, upon each bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate so surrendered and delivered to him, cancel the same, and endorse thereon the date of such cancellation, and shall preserve the same in his office until otherwise directed by law. The treasurer shall also have made and preserve in his office a proper registry of every bond and certificate delivered by him to the second auditor, and whenever a coupon bond shall be issued payable to the order of any person or firm, he shall secure and preserve the signature of such person or firm as a part of such registry whenever practicable.

5. Whatever sum may be realized from the claims of this State against Selden, Withers and Company, and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, and from the sale or disposition of the stocks and bonds, and debts owned by the State in and against any and all railway and other improvement companies, and all sums which may be realized from the claims of this State against the United States, and from any sales of any real estate now belonging to the Commonwealth, shall be paid into the treasury of the State to the credit of the sinking fund hereby authorized and created. In the year eighteen hundred and eighty, and annually thereafter, until all the bonds issued under and by authority of this act shall have been paid, there shall be levied and collected, the same as other taxes, a tax of two cents on the one hundred dollars of the assessed valuation of all the property, personal, real and mixed, in the State, which shall be paid into the treasury of the State to the credit of the sinking fund. The treasurer, the auditor of public accounts, and second auditor are hereby appointed commissioners of the sinking fund, and shall have (a majority acting) the control and management thereof, and shall annually, or oftener, apply whatever sum or sums may be to the credit of the sinking fund to the purchase and redemption of bonds issued by authority of this act.

6. All necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this act shall be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the certificate of the correctness of the same, signed by the treasurer and second auditor, and approved by the Governor.

7. This act shall be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. Holt: Also an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved March 28th, 1879, relating to the funding of the Virginia debt and providing a plan of settlement of the same, found in the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, 1878-9, Chapter 24, page 264.

The Master: That is subject to the same condition.

ACTS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA, 1878-79.

Chap. 24—AN ACT to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt.

Approved March 28, 1879.

Whereas, it is believed by the General Assembly that the rate of interest heretofore agreed to be paid by the State on the public debt is greater than can be borne without destroying the industrial interests of the State; and whereas, the counsel of foreign bondholders of London, England, and the funding association of the United States of America, Limited, have, in view of this belief, expressed their willingness to jointly endeavor to obtain the consent of the creditors to an abatement in the rate of interest; and whereas, it is highly expedient, in the best interest of the State, to secure an amicable settlement with the creditors by which the credit of the State may be restored and enhanced, and the aggregate amount of interest payable by the State reduced within the limits which will not be too onerous to the population; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That to provide for funding the debt of the State, the Governor is hereby authorized to create bonds of the State, registered and coupon, dated the first day of January, 1879, the principal payable forty years thereafter, bearing interest at the rate of three per centum per annum for ten years, and at the rate of four per centum per annum for twenty years, and at the rate of five per centum per annum for ten years, payable in the cities of Richmond, New York or London, as hereinafter provided, on the first days of July and January of each year, until the principal is redeemed. The State shall have the option of redeeming any or all of said bonds by the payment of principal and accrued interest at any time after the expiration of ten years from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, on public notice to the holders of its purpose to make such redemption. The coupons of said bonds shall be receivable at and after maturity for all taxes, debts, dues and demands due the State, and this shall be expressed on the face of the registered bonds and on the face of such certificate. All obligations created under this act shall be forever exempt from all taxation, direct or indirect, by the State, or by any county or corporation therein, and this shall be expressed on the face of the bonds. The said bonds shall be of the denominations of one hundred dollars, five hundred dollars and one thousand dollars, at the option of the creditors, respectively, and the bonds, as well as their coupons, shall be payable at Richmond and New York, or, if desired, may be made payable in sterling at London, at the fixed rate of exchange of one pound sterling for five dollars. The bonds hereby authorized shall be issued only in exchange for the outstanding debt of the State, as hereinafter provided.

2. For the purpose of designation, the outstanding indebtedness of the State is divided into two classes, as follows, to-wit:

Class I, which shall be taken to include all tax-receivable coupon bonds, and all registered bonds and fractional certificates which are convertible under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one into such tax-receivable coupon bonds.

Class II, which shall be taken to include all bonds funded under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, as amended by the act approved March seventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-two; and also two-thirds of the face value with two-thirds of the unpaid accrued interest up to the first of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, on all unfunded bonds, including sterling bonds.

3. The outstanding indebtedness of the State shall be funded in the new bonds, to be issued under this act, as follows: Bonds shall be presented for exchange with all coupons attached maturing after the date of presentation, and shall be exchanged at the face value of said bonds, dollar for dollar, for the new bonds, with all coupons attached maturing after the date of such presentation; provided, that the proportion of Class II, refunded, shall never exceed in amount one-third (1-3) of the total amount refunded, until eighteen million dollars of Class I have been retired. The new bonds to be issued may be coupon or registered, at the option of the holders, and at the like option coupon bonds may at any time be converted into registered bonds.

4. All due and unpaid interest may be funded under the provisions of this act at the rate of fifty cents on the dollar, and shall be fundable at that rate under the third section of this act, and taken, under the provisions of said section, in lieu of bonds of Class II.

5. If on or before the first day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, the council of foreign bondholders and the funding association of the United States of America aforesaid, shall file with the Governor their assent to and acceptance of the terms of this act, the same shall be taken to be a contract between the State and the said corporations and the Governor shall forthwith provide for the preparation of the bonds provided for by this act. The said corporations may present for funding, and in the proportions hereinbefore provided, at least eight millions of dollars of the outstanding obligations of the State prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty; and during each period of six months, from and after the thirty-first December, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, they may present an additional amount of at least five million of dollars, until the whole debt is funded; but any excess over said amounts, which may be presented during any of said periods may be estimated in requirement for the succeeding six months. So long as the said corporations shall present for funding the obligations aforesaid, in the amounts and in the periods aforesaid, they shall have the exclusive privilege of funding the outstanding debt under the provisions of this act; provided, that the said corporations shall arrange to receive the outstanding bonds at the city of Richmond, when the holders thereof shall so desire. But if the said corporations shall fail to file with the Governor their assent and agreement as aforesaid by the first day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, or shall fail to present for funding the outstanding bonds in the proportions and amounts and during the periods hereinbefore specified, then the Governor may, in his discretion, make a like contract with responsible parties for the funding of the debt of the State under this act.

6. The rules prescribed under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, in respect to preparing, signing and issuing the new bonds and coupons, regulating the same, and in taking in, cancelling and registering the old bonds, shall be observed by the officers of the treasury in the execution of this act; provided, that all bonds and certificates which may be necessary to be printed shall be printed from a plate which shall be the property of the Commonwealth, and shall remain in the keeping or under the control of the Second Auditor. Whenever an obligation of the State shall be presented to the Second Auditor to be funded under this act, he shall note the fact and date on the proper register in his office, shall punch a hole through the name of the Second Auditor signed or countersigned thereto, and shall issue his warrants upon the Treasurer for the new obligations required. There shall be endorsed upon the said warrants a description of the old obligations, and the calculation of the principal and interest for which the new obligations are to be issued. The said old obligations and warrant shall be carried by the Second Auditor to the Treasurer, who shall note the fact and date of funding on the proper register in his office, and if he shall find the warrant correctly drawn, shall sign the proper obligations to be issued, register the same in his office, clip therefrom the past due coupons and punch the same, and deliver the said obligations to the Second Auditor, taking his receipt therefor upon his warrant. The Second Auditor shall countersign the obligations so delivered to him, register the same in his office, and deliver the same to the proper person, taking his receipt therefor. The Treasurer shall jacket and file in his office the warrant upon which the new obligations were issued, with the surrendered obligations attached to said warrant, and shall number and date the jacket so as to make it easy for reference. But in cancelling and registering the bonds as above directed, in every bond and coupon surrendered under this act holes shall be punched in one or more places, and in such a manner as to render a new funding of the same impossible, and every bond and coupon so cancelled shall be filed for reference.

7. The owners of all classes of bonds mentioned in this act, who shall exchange their securities for the bonds created under this act, and who shall not have yet received certificates representing the remaining one-third of their principal and interest, due and payable by the State of West Virginia, shall receive certificates of a like character to those issued under the act of March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, when they make such exchange; and the State of Virginia will negotiate or aid such creditors holding all such certificates issued under this act, or previous acts, in negotiating with the State of West Virginia for an amicable settlement of the claims of such creditors against the State of West Virginia. The acceptance of the said certificates for West Virginia's one-third, issued under this act, shall be taken and held as a full and absolute release of the State of Virginia from all liability on account of the said certificates.

8. The General Assembly will, by necessary and appropriate legislation, provide for the prompt payment of the interest on the bonds issued under this act.

9. In the year eighteen hundred and eighty-five, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under and by authority of this act are paid, there shall be levied and collected the same as, and together with other taxes, a tax of two cents on the one hundred dollars of the assessed valuation of all the property, personal, real and mixed, in the State, which shall be paid into the treasury of the State to the credit of the sinking fund. The Treasurer, the Auditor of Public Accounts and Second Auditor are hereby appointed commissioners of the sinking fund, and shall have (a majority acting) the control and management thereof, and shall annually or oftener, apply whatever sum or sums may be to the credit of the sinking fund to the purchase and redemption of bonds issued under this act. All the certificates of debt which shall be funded, redeemed or purchased under this act shall be cancelled by the Second Auditor and delivered by him to the Treasurer of the Commonwealth at the time of payment therefor, who shall carefully preserve the same in his office. All certificates of debt acquired under the operation of the sinking fund, created by the act of March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, shall also be cancelled and delivered.

10. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries, may invest in the bonds issued under this act, and the same shall be considered a lawful investment.

11. The Treasurer shall, upon the first days of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and January, eighteen hundred and eighty, and upon the same days in each year, pay or cause to be paid to the holders thereof the half-yearly interest then due upon each of the bonds of the Commonwealth issued under this act.

12. Whenever there shall not be a sufficient amount of money in the treasury of the State to meet the accruing interest on the said bonds promptly, the Auditor is hereby authorized and directed, by and with the advice of the Governor of Virginia, to raise by temporary loan, to be returned out of the accruing revenues of the State, a sum sufficient to enable him to meet promptly the said interest as it accrues. And in case the Auditor shall not be able to raise a sufficient sum for the said purpose by loans, he is hereby authorized and directed to issue non-interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness of this State, to be signed by himself and countersigned by the Treasurer, and properly registered in the office of the Auditor and Treasurer, for the sum of one dollar and multiples thereof, the same to be printed from plates, which shall be the property of the State, and to sell the same at not less than a minimum price to be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund, which shall not be less than seventy-five cents upon the dollar. The said certificates shall be receivable for all taxes, debts, dues and demands due the State, and this shall be expressed on their face. The amount of such certificates which may be issue at any time shall be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund, and the proceeds of the sale thereof shall be devoted exclusively to the payment of interest as aforesaid. The Auditor shall report regularly to the General Assembly the amount and character of certificates issued under this act, and the net proceeds thereof. In case the Auditor shall not be able to borrow the sums needed as aforesaid without security, he shall be and is hereby authorized to hypothecate such amounts of the said certificates as may be fixed on by the commissioners of the sinking fund, at a value to be fixed as aforesaid, but in no case to be at a less value than seventy-five cents upon the dollar; and in case of a sale of said certificates, wheter they may have been so hypothecated or not, they shall be offered for sale in suitable and proportionate amounts in the different counties, towns and cities of this State, so far as practicable, under regulations to be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund. The said certificates shall be received by the Treasurer of the State, and be cancelled on receipt thereof, under the same regulations and prohibitions now existing in relation to coupons for interest on the public debt, except that no tax shall be deducted therefrom, and the fact of their cancellation shall be noted on the said registers.

13. The act approved March fourteenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, and all acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

14. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. Holt: Likewise an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved February 14th, 1882, regarding Virginia's equitable share of the State debt, found in the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, 1881-2, pages 88-98, Chapter 84.

ACTS GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA, 1881-2.

Chap. 84—AN ACT to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering same, and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon.

Approved February 14, 1882.

Whereas, to the end which this act comprehends, a full statement of the debt is essential; and whereas, the following has been carefully made up from the records of the second auditor's office of the State, it is confidently submitted as presenting a true state of the accounts between the State and her creditors—the account is as follows:

A STATEMENT OF THE PUBLIC DEBT OF THE STATE OF VIRGINIA.

Principal outstanding at this date:
1861, January 1st, sterling debt bearing 5 per cent. interest..	$ 1,973,000 00
Dollar debt bearing 6 per cent. interest.....	29,533,582 90

Total interest	$ 1,045,183 01

1863, July 1st. The State of West Virginia was formally admitted into the Union June 20, 1863. The property and resources of Virginia, upon which the above debt has been founded, were, by this partition of the old State, reduced, one-third of her territory and one-fifth of her population going to form West Virginia. This and the consequences of war to her and her people made a loss of full $500,000,000 of property, and her taxable values were reduced from $723,000,000 to $336,000,000, and her annual revenues from over $4,000,000 to $2,500,000.

Total debt to July 1, 1882:
Principal, as above	16,843,034 17
Interest, as above	4,192,342 98
Total	$21,035,377 15

Including bonds held by the Literary Fund to the amount of $1,428,245.25, and interest on the same in arrears July 1, 1881, $516,322.19, and interest added from that date to July 1, 1882, $85,694.71, making $602,016.90 included in the above sumof $4,192,342.98.

Total debt	$21,035,377 15

And whereas, by this account it appears that Virginia owes her creditors, as af the first of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, including the bonds held by the Literary Fund and arrears of interest thereon twenty-one million thirty-five thousand three hundred and seventy-seven dollars and fifteen cents; and that she may cause to be issued her own bonds for the same, and provide for the certain payment of interest thereon, that is for her equitable share of the bonds known as consols, and here designated as Class A, and whereof there are outstanding fourteen million three hundred and sixty-nine thousand nine hundred and seventy-four dollars and eighty-one cents; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as ten-forties, and here designated as Class B, and whereof there are outstanding eight million five hundred and seventeen thousand six hundred dollars; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as peeler, and here designated as Class C, and whereof there are outstanding two million three hundred and ninety-four thousand three hundred and five dollars and twelve cents; and for her equitable share of the interest thereon, designated as Class D, and whereof there is now in arrears nine hundred and twenty-eight thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven dollars and forty-five cents, and counted to the first of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, makes the amount of such interest then to be in arrears one million seventy-two thousand five hundred and forty-five dollars and seventy-five cents; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as unfunded bonds—dollar and sterling here designated as Class E, and whereof there are now outstanding, computed at two-thirds, three million seven hundred and seventy-three thousand four hundred and ninety-three dollars and sixty-eight cents; and for her equitable share of the interest thereon now in arrears, two million six hundred and thirty-six thousand four hundred and forty-four dollars and thirty-four cents, and counted to the first of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, making as of that date (two hundred and twenty-six thousand four hundred and nine dollars and sixty-two cents more), the sum of two million eight hundred and sixty-two thousand eight hundred and fifty-three dollars and ninety-six cents, and here designated as Class F; and for her equitable share of the bonds held by the Commissioners of the Literary Fund, whereof there are one million four hundred and twenty-eight thousand two hundred and forty-five dollars and twenty-five cents; and whereas, the rate of interest which any people can safely undertake to pay must be determined by the measure of their productive resources; and whereas, these have long been burdened by a rate of taxation which is conceded to be as high as can be endured; and whereas, the means of prompt and certain payment should be apparent to the creditor, while the people have assurance for the support of government and the maintenance of their schools, as required by the Constitution; and whereas, the net revenues of the State, remaining and so derived, after providing for the proper and gradual liquidation of the balance of the moneys heretofore diverted from the public free school fund, after liquidating gradually the arrearages to the Literary Fund, and leaving some small margin for the immediate and subsequent exigencies, which are, and are likely to be demanded by the public welfare—notably in respect of the humane institutions now inadequate to the proper accommodation of that unfortunate class of every population—do not warrant the assumption of a larger rate of interest than three per centum upon the full amount of Virginia's equitable share of the debt of the old and entire State, as the same is ascertained and now formally declared by the foregoing account; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the State, be, and they are hereby, empowered and directed to create bonds, registered and coupon, and to such extent as may be necessary to comply with the provisions of this act.

2. The said bonds shall be dated July first, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and be payable at the office of the treasurer of the State on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and thirty-two; provided, that the State may, at any time from time to time, after July first, nineteen hundred redeem any part of the same, principal and interest at par. In case of such redemption before maturity, the bonds to be paid shall be determined by lot by said board of commissioners, and notice of the bonds so selected to be paid shall be given in a newspaper published at Richmond, New York, London, England, when interest from and after ninety days from the date of such publication in London, shall cease upon the bonds so designated to be paid.

3. The form of the bond shall be as follows, to-wit:

The Commonwealth of Virginia acknowledges herself indebted to..... .....(in the case of a coupon bond to the bearer, and in the case of a registered bond, inserting the name of the person or corporation), in the sum of.....dollars, which she promises to pay in lawful money of the United States at the office of the treasurer of the State, Richmond, Virginia, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and thirty-two, with the option of payment at par, principal, and interest, before maturity, at any time after July first, nineteen hundred; and interest at the office of the treasurer of the State, in such lawful money, on the first days of January and July, at the rate of three per centum per annum, until paid (according to the tenor of the annexed coupons, in the case of coupon bonds).

In testimony whereof, witness the signature of the treasurer and the counter-signature of the second auditor, hereto affixed according to law.

.....Treasurer.

.....Second Auditor.

4. The form of coupon for coupon bonds shall be as follows, to-wit:

No.....(of bonds).

The Commonwealth of Virginia will pay to bearer..... dollars, in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer, Richmond, Virginia, on the first days of January and July, alternately—the first coupon to be payable January first, eighteen hundred and eighty-three.

.....Treasurer.

$$$———

Each coupon to be impressed on the back with its number in the order of maturity, from one forward.

5. The said board of commissioners are authorized to issue such bonds, in denominations of five hundred and one thousand dollars, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, each denomination to be of different time; provided that registered bonds may be issued of any denominations, multiple of one hundred; all registered bonds to be of the same time; and they are authorized to issue such bonds, registered or coupon, in exchange for the outstanding evidences of debt hereinbefore enumerated, including the bonds held by the literary fund, as follows, that is to say:

(A) For her equitable share of Class A, at the rate of fifty-three per centum; that is to say, fifty-three dollars of the bonds authorized under this act (principal and accrued interest, at par, from the preceding date of maturity to the date of exchange) are to be given for every hundred dollars, face, principal and accrued interest from the preceding semi-annual period of maturity to the date of exchange of such evidences of debt, and for any interest which may be past due and unpaid upon the same, funded bonds issued under this act may be given, dollar for dollar.

(B) For her equitable share of Class B, at the rate of sixty per centum, reckoning and accounting for any interest, as provided in the case of Class A.

(C) For her equitable share of Class C, at the rate of sixty-nine per centum, as in the cases of Classes A and B, and accounting for the same as provided in Class D.

(E) For her equitable share of Class E, at the rate of sixty-nine per centum, reckoning any current interest, at the date of exchange, as in the cases of Classes A, B and C, and accounting for the same as provided in Class F.

(G) For her equitable share of the bonds of the literary fund, as in the case of Class C; her equitable share of the arrearages of interest—three hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and seventy dollars—to be paid in money.

6. For all balances of such indebtedness, constituting West Virginia's share of the old debt, principal and interest, in the settlement of Virginia's equitable share as aforesaid, the said board of sinking fund commissioners shall issue a certificate as follows:

No.....

The Commonwealth of Virginia has this day discharged her equitable share of the (registered or coupon, as the case may be) bond for ..... dollars, held by ....., dated the ..... day of

....., and numbered ....., leaving a balance of ..... dollars, with interest from ....., to be accounted for by the State of West Virginia, without recourse upon this Commonwealth.

Done at the Capitol of the State of Virginia, this ..... day of ....., eighteen .....

.....Second Auditor.

.....Treasurer.

7. The said board of commissioners are empowered to issue for any fractional part of one hundred dollars of the indebtedness funded under this act, the following certificate:

FRACTIONAL CERTIFICATE.

Register No. ..... Transaction No. .....

This certificate entitles the holder thereof to the sum of ..... dollars, fundable at its face in the bonds of the Commonwealth of Virginia, authorized by an act approved ..... day of ..... eighteen hundred and eighty-two, when presented with certificates of like tenor or in conjunction with other evidences of debt fundable under said act in amounts of one hundred dollars, and multiples thereof.

Done at the Capitol of Virginia, this ..... day of ....., eighteen hundred and eight.....

.....Second Auditor.

.....Treasurer.

The certificates so issued shall be registered by the second auditor in a register kept for that specific purpose, giving the date and number of the transaction to which it relates, the amount of the same, and the name of the person or corporation to whom it was issued; and as such certificates are refunded, the same shall be cancelled and preserved as herein provided in respect to the evidences of debt refunded.

8. All the bonds and certificates of debt and evidences of past-due and unpaid interest taken in under the provisions of this act, shall be cancelled by the treasurer in the presence of the board of commissioners of the sinking fund as the same are acquired, and by the treasurer the same shall be carefully preserved until such time as the General Assembly may otherwise direct. A schedule of the bonds, certificates and other evidences of debt so cancelled, from time to time, shall be certified by said board and filed with the treasurer for preservation.

9. All the coupons and registered bonds and fractional certificates issued under this act, shall be separately registered by the second auditor in books kept for this specific purpose, and in each case giving the date, number and amount of the obligations issued, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued, and the date, number and amount and description of the bond, bonds or indebtedness surrendered.

10. The plates from which the bonds and fractional certificates authorized by this act are printed, shall be the property of the said board of commissioners of the sinking fund.

11. In the year eighteen hundred and ninety, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under and by authority of this act are paid, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the State each year two and one-quarter per centum upon the bonds at the time outstanding, which shall be paid into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund; and the commissioners of the said sinking fund shall, annually or oftener, apply the same to the redemption or purchase (at a rate not above par) of the bonds issued under this act, and the bonds so redeemed shall be cancelled by the said board, and the same registered by the second auditor in a book to be kept for that purpose, giving the number, the date of issue, the character, the amount, and the owner at the time of purchase of the bonds so redeemed and cancelled; and in case no such purchase of bonds can be made, then the amount which can be redeemed shall be called in by lot, as provided in section two of this act.

12. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries may exchange any State bonds held by them as provided, for bonds issued under this act, when so authorized by the court having jurisdiction in the premises, and the same, when so made, shall be considered a lawful investment.

13. The treasurer of the Commonwealth is authorized and directed to pay the interest on the bonds issued under this act, as the same shall become due and payable, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

14. All necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this act shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the warrants of the auditor of public accounts drawn upon the treasurer, on the order of the board of sinking fund commissioners.

15. That from and after the passage of this act, no bonds, certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness, shall be issued for any portion of the debt of this State, nor shall any interest be paid upon any part or portion of said debt, except as hereinbefore provided.

16. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. Holt:

I also introduce an Act of the Legislature of Virginia, approved February 20th, 1892, providing for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the Act of 1882, found in the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, 1891-2, page 533, and an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved January 31st, 1894, relating to the settlement and the funding of the public debt of Virginia, 1893-4, Chapter 110.

ACTS OF ASSEMBLY, VIRGINIA, 1891-'92.

Chapter 325—An Act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February 14, 1882.

Approved February 20, 1892.

Whereas, by a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, adopted on the third day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety, a commission was appointed on the part of Virginia to receive propositions for funding the debt of the State not funded under the act known as the "Riddleberger Bill," approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, from a properly constituted representative of her creditors; and

Whereas, said Virginia debt commission has submitted a report to the General Assembly, wherein it appears that under a certain agreement, dated May twelfth, eighteen hundred and ninety, lodged with the Central Trust Company of New York, Frederick P. Olcott, William L. Bull, Henry Budge, Charles D. Dickey, Jr., Hugh R. Garden, and John Gill, constituting a committee for certain of the creditors of Virginia, called the "Bondholders' Committee," have proposed to said commission to surrender to the State in bulk not less than twenty-three million of dollars of the public debt, unfunded under said act, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, in exchange for an issue of new bonds, as hereinafter specified, the same to be apportioned between the several classes of creditors by a tribunal which the said creditors have themselves appointed; and that, in pursuance of said proposal, an agreement has been entered into unanimously between the said commission and the said Bondholders' Committee, subject to approval by the General Assembly, whereby in exchange for the said unsettled obligations of the State held by the public, which were issued prior to February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two (exclusive of evidences of debt held by the public institutions of the Commonwealth pursuant to law and by the United States), together with the interest thereon to July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, inclusive, aggregating about twenty-eight million of dollars, there shall be issued nineteen million of dollars of new bonds, dated July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and maturing one hundred years from said date, with interest thereon at the rate of two per centum per annum for ten years from said first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and three per centum per annum for ninety years thereafter to the date of maturity, said interest to be payable semi-annually; of which aggregate debt of about twenty-eight million of dollars, the said Bondholders' Committee represent that they now hold and agree to surrender not less than twenty-three million of dollars; and

Whereas, said report and agreement contemplate the surrender of the obligations held by the Bondholders' Committee as an entirety, and do not contemplate an apportionment by the General Assembly between the various classes of creditors so represented by said bondholders committee, the same having been committed to a distributing tribunal, as hereinbefore recited; and

Whereas it is the desire and intention of the general assembly that a settlement of all the other outstanding obligations of the State (except those issued under the act of February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, the evidences of debt held by the public institutions of the State in pursuance of law and by the United States) as well as those controlled by the bondholders' committee, as aforesaid, shall be made under the provisions of this act; therefore,

1. Be in enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That the commissioners of the sinking fund, a majority of whom may act, be, and they are hereby, empowered and directed to create "listable" engraved bonds, registered and coupon, to such an extent as may be necessary to issue nineteen million of dollars of bonds in lieu of the twenty-eight million of dollars of outstanding obligations, not funded under the act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, hereinbefore recited.

2. The said bonds shall be dated July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and be payable at the office of the treasurer of the State, or at such agency in the city of New York as may be designated by the State, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and ninety-one, and shall bear interest from date, payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year, at the rate of two per centum per annum for the first ten years and three per centum per annum for the remaining ninety years; the said interest may be payable in Richmond, New York and London, or at either place, as may be designated by the State; provided that the State may at any time, and from time to time, after July first, nineteen hundred and six, redeem at par any part of the principal with accrued interest. In case of such redemption before maturity, the bonds to be paid shall be determined by lot by said commissioners of the sinking fund, and notice of the bonds so selected to be paid shall be given by publication beginning at least ninety days prior to an interest-due date, in a newspaper published in Richmond, Virginia, one in New York city, and one in London, England; and the interest from and after the next succeeding interest-due date shall cease upon the bonds so designated to be paid: provided that no registered bonds shall be so redeemed while there are any coupon bonds outstanding.

3. The form of the bonds shall be substantially as follows, to-wit:

Issued under act of assembly, approved ..... day of ....., eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

The Commonwealth of Virginia acknowledges herself to be indebted to ..... (in case of a coupon bond to the bearer, and in case of a registered bond inserting the name of a person or corporation, or assigns), in the sum of ..... dollars, which she promises to pay in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer of the State, or at such agency in the city of New York as may be designated by the State, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and ninety-one, with the option of payment at par with accrued interest, before maturity at any time after July first, nineteen hundred and six, and interest, at the office of the treasurer of the State, or at the agencies of the State in New York city and London, England, or at either place as may from time to time be designated by the State, in such lawful money aforesaid, at the rate of two per centum per annum for ten years from the first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and at the rate of three per centum per annum thereafter until paid, payable semi-annually on January first and July first in each year (according to the tenor of the annexed coupon bearing the engraved signature of the treasurer of the Commonwealth in case of coupon bonds). And this obligation is hereby made exempt from any taxation by the said Commonwealth of Virginia, or any county or municipal corporation thereof.

In testimony whereof, witness the signature of the treasurer and the countersignature of the second auditor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, hereto affixed according to law.

(Seal)

....., Treasurer,

....., Second Auditor.

4. The form of coupon for coupon bonds shall be substantially as follows, to-wit:

COUPON NO. .....

On the first day of ..... the Commonwealth of Virginia will pay to bearer ..... dollars in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer of the State, or at the agencies of the State in New York city and London, England, or at either place, as may be designated by the State; the same being six months' interest on bond number ....., ... dollars.

....., Treasurer.

Each coupon to be impressed on the back with its number, in order of maturity, from number one consecutively.

5. Said commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized to issue coupon bonds in denominations of five hundred and one thousand dollars each, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: provided that registered bonds may be issued of the denominations of one hundred dollars, five hundred dollars, one thousand dollars, five thousand dollars, ten thousand dollars; and they are authorized and directed to issue said bonds, registered or coupon, in exchange for the said outstanding obligations up to and including July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one (exclusive of evidence of debt held by public institutions of the Commonwealth as aforesaid and by the United States) as follows:

A. Said bondholders' committee may at any time on or before the thirteenth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present to said commissioners for verification bonds and other evidences of debt, and coupons or other evidences of interest thereon, obligations of the State of Virginia, held by said committee, for exchange as aforesaid; and said commissioners shall determine whether the obligations so presented are genuine obligations of the State and whether the coupons or other evidences of interest represent interest accrued on such obligations (exclusive of evidences of debt held by public institutions of the Commonwealth as aforesaid and by the United States).

B. Such of the obligations so presented for verification as may be determined by said commissioners to conform to the requirements of paragraph "A" hereof, shall be sealed in convenient packages as the examination proceeds. Each of the packages shall be numbered, and upon each package shall be endorsed the amount and character of the obligations therein contained. Such endorsement on each package shall be signed by said commissioners or a majority thereof, and the package shall then be delivered to said committee or its agent. Said commissioners shall keep in a book to be provided for the purpose a record of the numbers of all such packages and of the amount and character of the obligations contained in each. Such obligations presented by said bondholders' committee as do not conform to the requirements of paragraph "A" hereof shall be returned to said committee; but said commissioners shall keep a record thereof in the book aforesaid.

C. After said bondholders' committee shall have presented to said commissioners for verification bonds and other evidences of debt and coupons, or other evidences of interest thereon accrued on or before July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, obligations of the State of Virginia, all conforming to the requirements of paragraph "A" hereof, as determined by said commissioners, and amounting in the aggregate to not less than twenty-three million of dollars, after deducting one-third of the principal and interest of such obligations as were issued prior to the thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, and also deducting one-third of the principal and interest of such obligations as were issued under the act approved the thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, as do include West Virginia's proportion, said bondholders' committee may at any time on or prior to the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present the same in bulk to said commissioners for surrender and exchange as herein provided. All coupons matured or to mature on coupon bonds after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, or coupons of like class and amount or the face value thereof in cash, shall be surrendered with such bonds, the said cash to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered. And when the said bondholders' committee shall have presented for exchange the obligations aforesaid to an amount of twenty-three million of dollars or more, if the engraved bonds hereinbefore authorized are not ready for exchange, the said commissioners shall, upon application of said bondholders' committee, issue to said bondholders' committee a manuscript registered bond of the State of Virginia, substantially of the form of the bond hereinbefore specified for the aggregate amount to which the said committee may be entitled for the obligations so presented under this act, the said bond to be exchangeable for the engraved bonds aforesaid of character and amount required by said committee, as prescribed in this act, and interest in the meantime on said manuscript bond shall be paid as herein provided for on the engraved bonds.

D. The said new bonds shall be issued to said bondholders' committee by the said commissioners in the following proportion, to-wit: Nineteen thousand dollars of the new bonds to be created under this act shall be issued for every twenty-eight thousand of old outstanding obligations (principal and interest to July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one), as aforesaid, surrendered by said bondholders' committee to the said commissioners, after the deductions provided for in paragraph "C" of this section; and a proportionate amount of said new bonds shall be issued for smaller sums of said outstanding obligations so surrendered: provided that no certificates issued on account of the proportion of West Virginia of the obligations of the State shall be funded under this act. When said bondholders' committee shall have surrendered and exchanged such obligations as aforesaid to the amount of at least twenty-three million dollars, said committee may at any time thereafter up to and including the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present to said commissioners for verification, surrender, and exchange additional obligations, principal and interest, as aforesaid; all coupons matured or to mature on coupon bonds after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, or coupons of like class and amount, or the face value thereof in cash, to be presented with such bonds, the cash, if paid, to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered. After said commissioners shall have determined that said obligations conform to the requirements of paragraph "A" hereof, said commissioners shall accept the obligations so presented for surrender and exchange by said committee, and shall deliver to said committee in exchange therefor new bonds issued under the provisions of this act in the same proportion as is set out in this paragraph of this section, after making the deductions provided for in paragraph "C" of this section.

E. If on making the exchange provided for in this act said committee shall be found entitled to a fractional amount or amounts less than one hundred dollars in addition to the new bonds delivered to it, said commissioners of the sinking fund shall issue to the committee a certificate or certificates for such amount or amounts. Such fractional certificates shall be exchangeable for the bonds authorized by this act to be issued in sums of one hundred dollars, or any multiple thereof, and certificates of like character shall be issued for any fractional amount which may remain in making the exchange.

6. For all balances of the indebtedness, constituting West Virginia's share of the old debt, principal and interest, in the settlement of Virginia's equitable share of the bonds authorized to be exchanged under this act, the said share having been heretofore determined by the Commonwealth of Virginia, the said commissioners shall issue certificates substantially in the following form, viz.:

No. ..... The Commonwealth of Virginia has this day discharged her equitable share of the (registered or coupon, as the case may be), bond for ..... dollars, dated ..... day of ....., and No. ....., leaving a balance of ..... dollars, with interest from ....., to be accounted for to the holder of this certificate by the State of West Virginia, without recourse upon this Commonwealth.

Done at the capitol of the State of Virginia, this ..... day of ....., eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

....., Second Auditor,

....., Treasurer.

The certificates so issued under sections five and six of this act shall be recorded by the second auditor in a book kept for that purpose, giving the date and number of the transaction to which it refers, the amount of certificates, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued and delivered; and as such certificates, authorized by paragraph "E," section five of this act, are exchanged, the same shall be cancelled and preserved as herein provided in respect to the evidences of debt refunded.

7. The commissioners of the sinking fund are hereby authorized and required to receive on deposit for verification, classification and exchange such of the said obligations of the State as may be presented to said commissioners; provided, that said commissioners shall not receive on deposit for the purposes aforesaid any outstanding obligations of the State which have been once deposited with the bondholders' committee, or may be hereafter deposited with them; the said verification and exchange for the new bonds of the obligations so deposited to be conducted in the same manner as hereinbefore provided with respect to the obligations deposited with the said bondholders' committee, and the said commissioners of the sinking fund shall issue to and distribute amongst said depositing creditors after they have fully complied with the terms of this act, in exchange for the obligations so deposited, bonds authorized by this act as follows, namely: to each of the several classes of said depositing creditors the same proportion, as nearly as may be found in their judgment practicable by the commissioners of the sinking fund, as the same class shall receive under the distribution which shall be made by the commission for the creditors represented by the bondholders' committee: provided that no obligations shall be received for such deposit after the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, nor shall any coupon bonds be received which do not have attached thereto all the coupons maturing after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one; but for any such coupons as may be missing, coupons of like class and amount or the face value thereof in cash, may be received; the said cash, if paid, to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered; and each depositor shall, when he receives his distributive share of the said new issue of bonds, pay to the commissioners of the sinking fund three and one-half per centum in cash of the par value of the bonds received by him, or a commission equal in amount to that which may at any time hereafter be fixed by the said committee of bondholders upon any bonds deposited with them, not, however, in any case to exceed three and one-half per centum; and said sinking fund commissioners shall cover the fund thus received into the treasury of the Commonwealth.

8. All the coupons and registered bonds issued under this act shall be separately recorded by the second auditor in books provided for the specific purpose, in each case giving the date, number, amount of obligations issued, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued, and the date, number, amount and description of the obligations surrendered.

9. All the bonds and certificates of debt, and evidences of past due and unpaid interest, taken in under the provisions of this act, shall be cancelled by the treasurer in the presence of the commissioners of the sinking fund, or a majority thereof, as the same are required, and by him carefully preserved, subject to disposition by the general assembly; a schedule of the bonds, certificates, and other evidences of debt so cancelled shall be certified by said commissioners and filed by the treasurer for preservation.

10. In the year nineteen hundred and ten, and annually thereafter, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the State each year up to and including the year nineteen hundred and twenty-nine, one-half of one per cent. upon the bonds issued under this act, as well as upon the outstanding bonds issued under act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and in the year nineteen hundred and thirty, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under this act and the said act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, are paid, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the State each year one per cent. upon the outstanding bonds issued under the aforesaid acts, which shall be paid into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund, and the commissioners of the sinking fund shall annually, or oftener, apply the same to the redemption or purchase (at a rate not above par and accrued interest) of the bonds issued under the aforesaid acts, and the bonds so redeemed shall be cancelled by the said commissioners and the same registered by the second auditor in a book to be kept for that purpose, giving the number and date of issue, the character, the amount, and the owner at the time of purchase, of the bonds so redeemed and cancelled; and in case no such purchase of bonds can be made, then the amount which can be redeemed shall be called in by lot, as provided in section two of this act. All bonds of the State issued under the provisions of the act aforesaid, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and now held by said commissioners of the sinking fund, shall, as soon as at least fifteen million dollars of new bonds shall have been issued and delivered pursuant to the provisions of this act, be cancelled by said commissioners and preserved in the office of the treasurer of the Commonwealth.

11. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries may participate in the settlement of the debt herein specified in the manner hereinbefore provided, and such action shall be deemed a lawful investment of their trust fund. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries may invest in the bonds issued under this act, and the same shall be considered a lawful investment.

12. All coupons heretofore tendered for taxes and held by said taxpayers in pursuance of such tender, shall be received in payment of the taxes for which they were tendered, and upon their delivery to the proper collector or the amount thereof in money, the judgments obtained against the said tax-payers for such taxes shall be marked satisfied; provided the said tax-payers shall have paid in money and not in coupons the costs of said judgments. All coupons heretofore tendered for taxes and held by the officers of the Commonwealth for verification, in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, shall be received in payment of the taxes for which they were tendered, and the money collected for such taxes returned to the parties from whom it was received; provided the said tax-payers shall have paid in money, and not in coupons, all costs incurred in legal proceedings to verify said coupons.

13. The treasurer of the Commonwealth is authorized and directed to pay the interest on the bonds issued under this act as the same shall become due and payable out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

14. The plates from which the bonds and fractional certificates authorized by this act are printed shall be the property of the Commonwealth.

All necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this act shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated on the warrants of the auditor of public accounts, drawn upon the treasury on the order of the commissioners of the sinking fund.

16. The act entitled "an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon," approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and the amendments thereto, to-wit: an act entitled "an act to declare the true intent and meaning of, and to amend and re-enact section five of chapter eighty-four of acts eighteen hundred and eighty-one and eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two," approved August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and eighty-four; and the act entitled "an act to amend and re-enact an act approved August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, entitled an act to declare the true intent and meaning of, and to amend and re-enact section five of chapter eighty-four of acts of eighteen hundred and eighty-one and eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two," approved November twenty-ninth, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, are hereby repealed.

17. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized, if it shall seem to them for the best interest of the Commonwealth, to make one extension of the time for the funding of the said twenty-eight million of dollars of outstanding evidences of debt for a period not exceeding six months from the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

18. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized to exchange coupon bonds issued under this act into registered bonds in the denominations hereinbefore provided, and to arrange for the transfer of registered bonds. For every bond so issued in exchange a fee of fifty cents shall be charged by and paid to the second auditor, and shall, upon his order, be covered into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund; and bonds so taken in exchange shall be cancelled in the manner hereinbefore prescribed.

19. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Chap. 110—AN ACT to amend and re-enact sections 7, 17 and 18 of an act approved February 20, 1892, entitled an act "to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon, approved February 14, 1882," and to provide for carrying the same into effect.

Approved January 31, 1894.

Whereas it has come to the knowledge of this General Assembly, through the officers charged with the exchange and funding of outstanding obligations of the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia, and so forth, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, that holders of a portion of the unfunded debt, some of whom are residents of Virginia, and others residents of foreign countries, were barred from accepting the provisions of said act approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, by reason of circumstances beyond their control, and who now desire to accept the terms provided in said act, and it is believed that equitably they should be permitted to do so; and whereas the terms of settlement of the debt of the State having been proposed by her creditors, it is deemed just to adhere to the provisions of the act approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, except as hereinafter provided; and whereas, it is the earnest desire of the General Assembly to finally dispose of the debt question without inflicting any wrong upon the creditors of the State either at home or abroad, but declaring the adherence of the State to the terms of the act of February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, as modified by this act, which should be taken as a final settlement of the State with her creditors; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That sections seven, seventeen and eighteen of an act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled "an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and for the prompt and regular payment of interest thereon," approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, shall be amended and re-enacted to read as follows:

7. The commissioners of the sinking fund are hereby authorized and required to receive on deposit for verification, classification and exchange such of the said obligations of the State as may be presented to the said commissioners; the said verification and exchange for the new bonds of the obligations to be conducted in the same manner as hereinbefore provided, with respect to the obligations deposited with the said bondholders' committee; and the said commissioners of the sinking fund shall issue to and distribute amongst said depositing creditors after they have fully complied with the terms of this act in exchange for the obligations so deposited, bonds authorized by this act as follows, viz.: To each of the several classes of said depositing creditors the same proportion as the same class receives under the distribution made by the commissioner for the creditors represented by the bondholders' committee: provided, that no obligations shall be received for such deposit after the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, nor shall any coupon bonds be received which do not have attached thereto all the coupons maturing after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one; but for any such coupons as may be missing, coupons of like class and amount, or the face value thereof in cash, may be received; the said cash, if paid, to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered; and each depositor shall, when he receives his distributive share of the said new issue of bonds, pay to the commissioners of the sinking fund three and one-half per centum in cash of the par value of the bonds received by him, and said sinking fund commissioners shall cover the fund thus received into the treasury of the Commonwealth.

17. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized, if it shall seem to them for the best interest of the Commonwealth, to make one extension of the time for the funding of the outstanding evidences of debt due by the Commonwealth not heretofore funded under said act of February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, for a period not exceeding six months from the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-four.

18. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized to exchange coupon bonds of the State issued under the act of February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, into registered bonds, and vice versa, and to arrange for the transfer of registered bonds. For every bond so issued in exchange a fee of fifty cents shall be charged by and paid to the second auditor, and shall, upon his order, be covered into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund, and bonds so taken in exchange shall be cancelled in the manner hereinbefore prescribed.

2. The bonds issued hereunder may be the same heretofore engraved under the provisions of said act of February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, and in the same form as prescribed in said act, and the plates for the engraving of said bonds under said act of February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, may be used by the commissioners of the sinking fund in the preparation of bonds to be issued hereunder, and all bonds thus issued shall be in all respects valid.

3. The commissioners of the sinking fund are hereby authorized to advertise for the reception of bonds for exchange under the provisions of this act in such financial centres as they may deem best.

4. This act shall be in force from its passage.

The Master: These last four are subject to the same conditions.

Mr. Holt: In the same connection, that is, upon the funding of the debt and for the same purpose, we introduce a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia, adopted in 1866, relating to the settlement of the Virginia debt, and found in the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, 1865-66, page 453, and also an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia for the adjustment of the public debt with the State of West Virginia approved February 18th, 1870, and found in the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, 1869-70, Chapter 6.

ACTS OF ASSEMBLY, VIRGINIA, 1865-66, Page 453.

No. 7—Joint Resolution on the restoration of the State, and the adjustment of the public debt.

Adopted February 28, 1866.

1. Resolved by the General Assembly of Virginia, that the people of Virginia deeply lament the dismemberment of the "Old State" and are sincerely desirous to establish and perpetuate the reunion of the States of Virginia and West Virginia; and that they do confidently appeal to their brethren of West Virginia to concur with them in the adoption of suitable measures of co-operation in the restoration of the ancient Commonwealth of Virginia, with all her people, and up to her former boundaries.

2. That three Commissioners, resident citizens of this State, shall be appointed by the joint vote of the two houses of the General Assembly, to proceed forthwith to the seat of government of West Virginia, for the purpose of communicating to the Governor and General Assembly of that State a copy of the foregoing resolution, and the report of the committee accompanying the same, with authority to treat on the subject of the restoration of the State of Virginia to its ancient jurisdiction and boundaries provided, that the result of such negotiation, if favorable to such restoration on any terms, shall be subject to the approval or disapproval of the legislatures or conventions of the respective States, as may be hereafter mutually agreed upon.

3. The commissioners appointed under the foregoing resolution, are also empowered and directed to treat with the authorities of West Virginia, upon the subjects of a proper adjustment of the public debt of the State of Virginia, due or incurred previous to the dismemberment of the State, and of a fair division of the public property; subject, however, to the approval or disapproval of this General Assembly.

4. The said commissioners are hereby authorized to treat upon either or both of the subjects mentioned in the two preceding resolutions, as circumstances may demand, with instructions to suspend or forbear any action on the subject of adjusting the debt of the State, or a division of the public property, if in their opinion the probable restoration of the State of Virginia to its ancient boundaries may render an effort at such adjustment unnecessary. The action of said commissioners to be subject to the approval or disapproval of this General Assembly.

Chap 6.—AN ACT for the adjustment of the public debt with the State of West Virginia.

Approved February 18, 1870.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That three commissioners, resident citizens of this State, be appointed by the Governor to treat with the authorities of West Virginia upon the subject of the proper adjustment of the public debt of the State of Virginia, due or incurred previous to the dismemberment of the State, and of a fair division of the public property: provided, however, that the action of the said commissioners shall be subject to the approval or disapproval of this General Assembly.

2. The said commissioners shall enter upon their duties without delay, and shall receive the same pay and mileage as members of the General Assembly while actually engaged in the discharge of them; and they shall, within the next sixty days after their appointment, make a full report of their proceedings to this General Assembly.

3. This act shall be in force from and after the passage thereof.

The Master: These last two are subject to the same conditions.

Mr. Holt: Now, I think, your Honor—

Mr. Conrad: Let us agree to this, it is hereby stipulated and agreed between the parties to this cause by counsel that the foregoing Acts and public documents above recited are regarded as in evidence as if fully set out herein.

The Master: You can arrange that detail later on. We will suspend here until 2 o'clock, with the understanding that you come in with your full list this afternoon, so that we can put it right in.

At this point a recess was taken until 2 P. M.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. Holt: We introduce an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia directing the Board of Public Works to sell the State's interest in the various internal improvement companies, approved March 28th, 1871, and found in Chapter 210 of the Acts of General Assembly of Virginia, 1871-1872.

We also introduce an Act passed by the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, January 17, 1872, and which is Chapter 17 of the Acts of said Assembly of 1871-2.

[Acts inserted two paragraphs below.]

The Master: What is the purpose of these two Acts? That is, do they elaborate any of the other topics to which you refer, or do they relate to a new matter?

Mr. Holt: They might come under the head of the Sinking Fund.

ACTS OF ASSEMBLY, 1870-71, Page 299.

Chap. 210.—AN ACT Directing the Board of Public Works to Sell the State's Interest in the Various Internal Improvement Companies of the Commonwealth.

Approved March 28, 1871.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That the Board of Public Works be and the same is hereby authorized and directed, to sell to each railroad and internal improvement company in this State, the interest of the State in the same, including all bonds, stocks, loans and claims

(for the sale of which provision has not already been made by law), for an equal amount of State bonds, except the stock held by the State in the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad Company, which stock the Board of Public Works is hereby authorized and directed to sell to Henry K. Elyson, Joseph R. Anderson, Isaac Davenport, junior; Fred R. Scott, Franklin Stearns, John B. Davis, James H. Cox, A. F. Harvey and Reuben Ragland, at the rate of one hundred and fifty dollars for each share of said stock, payable in registered or coupon bonds of the State of Virginia, at par, within six months after the passage of this act, according to the provisions of a proposal to purchase said stock, signed and sealed by the parties aforesaid, and dated on the sixth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-one; which proposal is hereby accepted and made a binding contract between the State and the said parties; and the clerk of the House of Delegates, with whom the said contract is now filed, is instructed, on the passage of this act, to deliver it to the Board of Public Works: provided, that before this sale shall be made, the Board of Public Works shall obtain from the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad Company a valid contract, binding said company to allow any connecting work all proper facilities in and for the formation of a physical junction with the railway track of the same, and that it shall make no higher rates of charge on freights and passengers coming from the line of any such connecting work, and destined for the line of any such connecting work, than is made by said company, or the like class of freights and passengers for transportation on its own line for the same distance: provided, such connecting work shall observe the same rule in its charges for the transportation of such freights and passengers, and to permit the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company to build and construct a road track upon its road bed and across its bridges for its own use, upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the said companies; and if they fail to agree, then upon such terms as may be fixed by the Board of Public Works, as an arbiter between them: and provided further, that if the sale provided for in this section shall, for any cause, not be completed within six months from the passage of this act, then the Board of Public Works is hereby empowered and expressly directed to sell the State's interest in the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad, to the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad for one hundred and fifty dollars in State bonds for every share of said stock.

2. Any company desiring to avail itself of the provisions of this act, shall signify to the Board of Public Works its acceptance of the same, within six months from its passage, and thereupon it shall become binding and obligatory upon it.

3. Any company accepting the provisions of this act shall, within twelve months from the passage of the same, deposit with the treasurer of the Commonwealth, State bonds to an amount equal to one-sixth of the whole interest of the State in said company, whether the same consist of stock, bonds, or claims; and the fact of such deposit shall be certified by the treasurer to the Board of Public Works, who shall thereupon surrender to said company an equal amount of the State's interest in such company. And said company shall, every twelve months thereafter, make a like deposit, and the Board of Public Works shall surrender a like interest, until the whole interest of the State shall have been paid for and surrendered; it being the intent and meaning of this act that the interest of the State shall be sold and the same purchased by the company, in six equal instalments, the first to be made within twelve months from the passage of this act, and one instalment every twelve months thereafter, until the whole purchase shall have been completed. But such company may anticipate all or any of said instalments, and receive such interest as it may pay for, from time to time.

4. In any purchase and transfer, under the provisions of this act, that interest which is the least valuable, shall be first purchased and surrendered, and the claims and securities held by the State shall continue to draw interest, and the same shall be paid as now provided by law, so long as the same are held by the State. And upon the transfer, by the Board of Public Works, to any company, of any stock under the provisions of this act, every stockholder shall be entitled to cast one vote for each share of stock held in the company, at all meetings of the stockholders thereafter held. And the stockholders shall determine what disposition shall be made of the stock so transferred and acquired, with power to extinguish, reissue, sell or hypothecate the same, after the whole interest of the State in such company shall have been paid for; but whilst said stock is held by the company it shall not be voted on in any meeting of the stockholders of said company.

5. If any company, after accepting this act, shall make default in the payment of any of the instalments as herein provided, the Board of Public Works is authorized and directed, after sixty days' notice to said company, to take such steps as to it may seem for the best interest of the State to enforce the conditions of the same; and for that purpose may institute a suit or suits for the recovery of the amount due, or if the State prefer, then the defaulting company shall after a lapse of three months from and after such default, return to the State all stocks, bonds, loans and claims acquired by it under this act, and the State shall be as fully reinvested with all its rights over and to the same, as if this act had not been passed; and thereupon the State bonds delivered to the State by said defaulting company shall be returned to said company, but without interest while remaining in the State treasury. And further, upon the happening of such default by said company, the State shall have one vote for each share of stock owned or held by it in the company so defaulting.

6. The privilege of purchasing the interest of the State in any work of internal improvement, under the provisions of this act, shall remain in such company unimpaired for six months after the passage of this act, within which time the stockholders of such company, in general meeting assembled, may waive any exemption from taxation now enjoyed by them, whether such exemption is allowed by its charter or by law, and if the company shall so waive the exemption, this act shall for the future be taken to be a part of such charter, as fully as if specially re-enacted with reference to such company; and should no such meeting of stockholders be called or if called, shall refuse to make such formal waiver of exemption from taxation, then the Board of Public Works shall proceed to sell the interest of the State in such work of internal improvement, in the manner prescribed by section eight of this act.

7. All State bonds and stocks received by the treasurer under the provisions of this act, shall be by him forthwith turned over to the second auditor, who shall hold the same, subject to the future action of the General Assembly.

8. If any internal improvement company of the State shall fail or refuse to accept the provisions of this act within six months after its passage, then the Board of Public Works are hereby authorized and directed to sell the stocks and interest held by the State in said companies, to the highest bidder, at public auction, after sixty days' notice, published in the papers of the city of Richmond, for the best price that can be obtained for them, payable in the bonds of the State at their par value. At any such sale, any company may become a purchaser of the State's interest in said company. But no such sale shall be made under the authority of this act for less than the original cost of said stocks and interest, or for less than the market value thereof.

9. This act shall be in force from its passage.

ACTS OF ASSEMBLY, VIRGINIA, 1871-72.

Chap. 17.—AN ACT to amend and re-enact the eighth section of an act entitled "An act directing the Board of Public Works to sell the State's interest in the various internal improvement companies of the Commonwealth," approved March 28, 1871.

Approved January 17, 1872.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That the eighth section of "an act directing the Board of Public Works to sell the State's interest in the various internal improvement companies of the Commonwealth," approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, be amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"§8. If any internal improvement company of the State shall fail or refuse to accept the provisions of this act within six months after its passage, then the Board of Public Works are hereby authorized and directed to sell the stocks and interest held by the State in said companies to the highest bidder, at public auction, after sixty days' notice, published in the papers of the city of Richmond, for the best price that can be obtained for them, payable in the bonds of the State at their par value. At any such sale, any company may become a purchaser of the State's interest in said company; but no such sale shall be made of any stocks, bonds, loans or claims held by the State in or against the said companies for less than the par value of such stocks, bonds, loans or claims and the interest which may have accrued and is now due thereon, or for less than the market value thereof, where the market value exceeds the par value of said stocks, interest, etc.

2. This act shall be in force from its passage.

It is stipulated of record by counsel for the States of Virginia and West Virginia, as well as by counsel for the Bondholders, that the stocks and loans mentioned in Classes B, C, D, E, F and G of the defendant's supplemental answer filed herein were subscribed for and made the authority of legislative enactment by the State of Virginia, and were paid for and made out of the proceeds of the sale of a part of the bonds representing the debt of Virginia existing prior to January 1st, 1861.

Mr. Holt: That saves us from 61 Acts, as we saw it.

The Master: The counsel for Virginia and the Bondholders need have no feeling of annoyance and disturbance about this stipulation, because, if it should turn out that it was inadvertently made, it will simply be wiped out, and we will start over again.

Mr. Holt: Suppose it should turn out that it misrepresents their view or ours.

The Master: Yes, either side would have the opportunity of having the necessary change made in it. You need not either of you understand that you are bound even by this. Of course if nothing is said about it, it goes. But if either side finds on reflection that it is not adequate, it may be made adequate by further stipulation or by evidence on either side.

Mr. Lilly: This morning there was a stipulation entered into with reference to Acts requiring the banks to make certain reports, Chapter 58, Sections 25, 26 and 27 of the Code of 1849, page 306. That is not a very long act, and after looking it over we have decided we would prefer the full Act extended, that is those three sections.

The Master: I shall let you print it.

Mr. Lilly: It specifies certain features which we think would be of help.

CODE OF VIRGINIA, 1849.

(Pages 310 and 311, Part I.)

REPORTS TO THE STATE AND ITS POWER TO EXAMINE THE BANKS.

Sec. 25. The board shall annually in January, and quarterly thereafter, transmit to the Governor a statement of the condition of the bank on the first day of the month, wherein shall be specified the amount of capital stock subscribed, with the amount paid and the amount unpaid thereon, the value of the real estate of the bank, the total amount of debts due to and from it, noting specially the amount of dealings in exchange, and the premiums paid thereon, and also bad and doubtful debts; the amount on hand of gold and silver and other coin; amount of money deposited; amount of each denomination of bills in circulation, and the aggregate of the whole; amount of bills on hand of solvent banks incorporated by this State, and also of those incorporated elsewhere; and the rate and amount of the last dividend of profits, with the amount of the surplus or contingent fund; which statement shall be signed by at least a majority of the directors, and verified by the oath of the president or cashier.

Sec. 26. In addition to the said quarterly statements, the several banks shall report to the Governor a comparative statement of their condition for the corresponding quarter of the preceding year, and the Governor shall have the same published in at least two newspapers in the city of Richmond.

Sec. 27. There may at any time be an inspection of the books and examination into the proceedings of any bank, by a joint committee of the two houses of the General Assembly, or a committee of either house, or one or more commissioners appointed by the Assembly or the Governor.

Mr. Holt: Now in explanation of, or in addition to Defendants Exhibit 10, and the sub sheet to Exhibit 10, we offer, upon the subject of the collection of taxes, when they fall due, etc., and are collectible, portions of Chapter 36 of the Code of Virginia of 1860. We will try and point out such sections of that as we want.

The Master: This Act goes in, subject to the suggestion that it is to be inspected by the other side, and if counsel on each side are able to agree on a summary that will adequately state, from the standpoint of either side, the substance of this statute, that will shorten the record, they are at liberty to do so.

Mr. Holt: I believe about all we have to ascertain from that is, under the Act, when the assessments were made.

Mr. Conrad: I think we can stipulate that.

The Master: If you do not stipulate, the Act goes in. If you do stipulate, the Act goes out. I do not want to take time to stipulate it now.

Mr. Holt: And under the same circumstances, and for the same purpose, we likewise offer the Chapter 35 of the Code of Virginia of 1860. I have no doubt we will be able to stipulate as to that.

The Master: That is subject to the same suggestion of stipulation.

Mr. Holt: That covers the subject of assessments and taxes on personal property.

The Master: That goes in subject to the same suggestion. Of course the examination of these various Acts, and the arranging of these stipulations, is going to involve some work on the part of counsel outside of the session. I cannot sit here and discuss those stipulations, because it takes too much time. There is quite a lot of this material that is going in here, subject to this suggestion that I have made, that if you agree among yourselves to stipulate as to the effect of this legislation, then all you need to print is the stipulation. My notion of the better way to get those stipulations up is not to discuss them back and forth together here, but to sit down and write them out, and you are much more likely to get the proper stipulation than you are when we make the suggestion offhand from side to side here in the hearing, and it does not take the time of the hearing. I do not want to take the time of the hearing to make any effort to agree on any of these stipulations from now on. Now, Judge Holt, let us have your next suggestion.

Mr. Holt: By reference to page 41 of the supplemental answer, you will find this allegation:

"She says that the State of Virginia, as this defendant is informed, has received from time to time, in addition to the amounts hereinbefore set out in paragraph six of this supplemental answer, dividends upon the bonds, stocks and securities hereinbefore described to an amount equal to $5,782,240.09, and did likewise, at the time of the separation of the two States, retain, without accounting unto the State of West Virginia for any part thereof, all of the public buildings," etc.

We thought we had our schedules complete, but we omitted them, and now we want to introduce some schedules upon this subject, not for the purpose of utilizing them for the reduction of the debt, but upon the subject of interest, for the purpose of showing that we—

The Master: You mean the reduction of West Virginia's indebtedness to Virginia, when you say the reduction of the debt?

Mr. Holt: Yes. Not for the purpose of reducing West Virginia's indebtedness to Virginia, but as having some bearing upon the question whether or not we should be charged with interest upon that indebtedness. I recall that in the argument before the Supreme Court, Chief Justice White kept distressing me more or less by asking for some broad equity or equitable reason why we should not pay interest, and our theory is that this is one of those broad equities.

Mr. Conrad: Judge White in his oral opinion included in it a reference to the subject of interest, but in the opinion as published it is omitted. I did not find it in the opinion that is published. This question of interest is submitted to you for report, and you have it before you, have you not?

The Master: Yes.

Mr. Conrad: In his oral opinion—I was sitting very near to him and was struck with the fact, and gratified by it, but when the opinion came out I observed that the question of interest was omitted from it. The newspaper reports of his opinion contained a reference to the subject of interest.

Mr. Anderson: All the issues raised in the answer are referred to the Master.

The Master: Whatever the original opinion may mean, I suppose I am confined to it. These schedules are introduced, as I understand it, not for the purpose—

Mr. Holt: I only want to identify them and mark them and then I will drop them.

The Master: That is right. These schedules are introduced not for the purpose of affecting any particular sum that may be due, but for the purpose of shedding some light upon the question as to whether or not the State of West Virginia is liable to interest on such sum as may be due.

Mr. Holt: That is it exactly, that is the situation.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN,

recalled for further re-direct examination, testified as follows:

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, have you prepared an exhibit showing the various amounts of dividends received by the State of Virginia from stocks held by said State subsequent to June 20th, 1863?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Were they dividends upon stocks that she had acquired prior to January 1st, 1861?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Of how many sheets does that exhibit consist?

A. Of seven sheets.

Q. Are they numbered by pages?

A. They are numbered by sheets in the upper left-hand corner.

Q. They are numbered by sheets, then?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Do these sheets, or does this exhibit, show upon its face the sources from which it was made up?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Does this seven sheet exhibit correctly represent the books and documents from which it is taken?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it correct?

Mr. Conrad: You mean whether they are correctly copied or transcribed, but not correct in fact.

A. Yes, sir.

By The Master:

Q. Has this schedule been checked up with Mr. Potter?

A. No, sir.

The Master: Have that checked up so that we can clean this up with the other.

Mr. Holt: You see we are going between times as hard as we can go.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Where is the one on interest?

A. Commencing with sheet 5.

Q. Well, then, did the whole seven sheets of the matter that I have been talking about cover dividends at all?

A. No, sir, they did not.

Q. Of how many sheets is that statement composed?

A. Three.

Q. And how are they numbered?

A. In the upper left-hand corner sheets, 5, 6 and 7.

Q. Do these interest sheets state upon their face the sources of information from which your schedule or statement is made up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do they correctly represent and state the contents of the records, books and documents from which they are taken?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you to file sheets 1 to 4, inclusive, and mark them as Defendant's Exhibit No. 12, 1863. Will you do so?

A. I file them so marked.

The schedule was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit, No. 12, 1863 (four sheets), September 9th, 1914. C. B.

Q. And I will ask you to file the sheets from 5 to 7 inclusive, covering the subject of interest on loans, and mark them as Defendant's Exhibit No. 13, 1863. Will you do so?

A. I file them so marked.

The schedule was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 13, 1863 (three sheets), September 9th, 1914. C. B.

The Witness: I would like to call your attention to the fact that the total then of Defendant's Exhibit 12 will be carried forward and included in the total mentioned on Exhibit 13.

Q. Do you mean on the summary?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: That is next?

Mr. Holt: That is all on that subject, I believe. Now, this exhibit has the same bearing as the one last introduced, but it is to cover the dividends declared on stocks after January 1st, 1861 and I suppose down to June 20th, 1863; is that right?

The Witness: Down to the present time.

Mr. Holt: Of course that is in the alternative as to which date might be adopted as the proper date of settlement.

Q. Have you prepared an exhibit, Mr. Hillman, showing the amount of dividends received by the State of Virginia after January 1st, 1861, declared upon stocks acquired by her prior to that date?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Of how many sheets does this consist?

A. Of six sheets.

Q. How are they numbered or indicated?

A. In the upper left-hand corner, sheets 1 to 6, both numbers, inclusive.

Q. Have you prepared a corresponding exhibit upon the subject of interest covering the same dates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are they indicated?

A. Sheets 7 to 10 printed in the upper left hand corner.

Q. Do both of these exhibits indicate upon their face the sources of information from which they were made up?

A. Yes, sir, they do.

Q. Do they correctly represent the documents, records, etc., thereon indicated from which they are made up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you file the one relating to the dividends on stocks, being sheets Nos. 1 to 6, inclusive, and mark it Defendant's Exhibit No. 12?

A. Yes, sir, I file it so marked.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 12, 1861 (six sheets), September 9th, 1914, C. B.

[This exhibit is printed as "Defendant's Exhibit No. 12, 1861—ten sheets."]

Q. Will you likewise file the one relating to the subject of interest upon loans, as a part of your testimony, running from pages 7 to 10, inclusive, and mark it as Defendant's Exhibit No. 13?

A. Yes, sir, I file it so marked.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 13, 1861 (four sheets), September 9th, 1914, C. B.

[This exhibit is printed as "Defendant's Exhibit No. 12, 1861—ten sheets."]

The Master: Neither of these last two exhibits affects in any way the principal sum due, but are only to be used so far as they may be pertinent in determining the interest upon whatever sum may be found due?

Mr. Holt: That is it exactly.

Q. Mr. Hillman, the Master asked you this morning to ascertain and file a statement, if you could, made up from the books of the James River and Kanawha Canal, showing a balance sheet thereof or whatever you could get upon that subject from its books. Have you any such statement prepared?

A. No, sir. My man is working on that now over at the C. & O. office on what information he can get. The original books, so he informs me, of the J. R. & K. were burnt in 1865, when Richmond was taken, or to a large extent destroyed, but that he has some documents there from which he thinks he can get the data that I desire, and he is working on it now. Also, I would say, your Honor, that as soon as I can finish here we will complete the statement that you desired of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad, which I expect to have ready to file the first thing in the morning.

The Master: Any time before we conclude the hearing will take care of that, leaving opportunity enough to cross-examine if desired, and I tell you what I would like to have you do when you complete these schedules, submit them to Mr. Potter and have him verify them so that when we get all through I want Mr. Porter if it is possible to be able to say that he has compared all these computations and all these statements of facts, and so far as their accuracy is concerned, he has no criticism to make, so you keep right in touch with him and let him verify it.

Q. Then there is one other exhibit that I understand you have in course of preparation, and that is a statement showing the cost of public buildings in the State of Virginia. Is that true?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: That of course is to be addressed to the same subject of interest—that is not to be taken as a deduction of principal.

Mr. Lilly: Mr. Harrison, you heard what Judge Holt was stating with reference to the value of State buildings, and so on. Do you think that you people could come to some stipulation as to what they were reasonably worth in 1861?

The Master: Take that up with them outside, during some intermission.

Mr. Lilly: I might suggest that we think it does not show what it was worth, but the Bennett Commission in the early 70's found them worth $3,875,000.

The Master: See what you can do on that question, between the counsel.

Mr. Holt: I do not see Mr. Potter here, but one matter was left open this morning on this question of taxes, collected by Virginia from West Virginia counties, that he and Mr. Hillman were to check up. I want to straighten that out. How is that, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: I think that will be all right. We won't keep Mr. Hillman to testify to that. I understood from Mr. Potter that he had checked up with him, and that he would be prepared to say whether it was subject to amendment. I do not think it is.

Mr. Holt: So that Exhibit 10 and the sub sheet to it stand as produced this morning.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Potter is not here, but I think so.

The Witness: Here is one thing, the item of $8,010.30, that is marked no date; in other words, the date is uncertain. That is the reason that there are two totals on that sheet.

The Master: I will suspend here for five minutes, and then I expect West Virginia will be prepared to clean up in chief.

Mr. Holt: We expect to be able to clean up this afternoon with the exception of bringing in those schedules to-morrow morning, and one witness on oral evidence to-morrow morning.

Mr. Holt: We would like Mr. J. K. Anderson sworn, and Mr. Lilly will examine him.

J. K. ANDERSON,

called as a witness in behalf of the defendant, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. What is your name?

A. J. K. Anderson.

Q. What is your residence?

A. I reside in Charleston, West Virginia.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. Chief Engineer of the Public Service Commission of West Virginia.

Q. Have you taken any course in engineering, and if so, when?

A. I graduated in engineering with the degree of Bachelor of Science in Engineering in 1899 from Swarthmore College.

Q. Since then, have you been occupied in that work from time to time?

A. I have been occupied in engineering the greater part of the time since that date.

Q. Have you had occasion to make an investigation with reference to any improvements on file in the archives of the State of Virginia?

A. I have.

Q. Did you find a map bearing date 1859; if so, please state where you found it?

A. I found a map in the office of the State Librarian of Virginia in this building with the following title.

Q. Please read it.

A. Map of the State of Virginia reduced from the nine sheet map of the State in conformity to law by Herman Boye, 1828, corrected by order of the Executive by L. V. Buckholtz, 1859, with a scale which is practically one inch equal to ten miles.

Q. I see you have a blue print here representing certain railroads and canals. From what were they taken?

A. A tracing was made from this map just mentioned in the Library of the State of Virginia on which I showed the different railroads in which the State of Virginia was interested by investment of moneys in some form. I also showed or traced from this map the James River and Kanawha Canal and the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, the Dismal Swamp Canal, the Alexandria Canal—

Q. You traced the various navigation and canal projects as shown on that map, did you?

A. I did.

Q. The map, I believe, purported to show the railroads built and located as of the year 1859. Did you do anything to bring the map down to show the location of the railroads as of January 1, 1861?

A. I did.

Q. In what way did you do that, Mr. Anderson?

A. I examined in the office of the Librarian certain copies of Document No. 17, which were reports of public utilities to the Virginia State Board of Public Works, and from the various reports therein made for subsequent years I ascertained what extension, if any, should be added to the map before mentioned in order to show the situation as of January 1st, 1861.

Q. Take the railroads as laid down on the map of 1859, together with the extensions as indicated in this report that you refer to, or document of Virginia, does this map truly and correctly lay down the railroads as then constructed and located?

A. It does. I would like to say in this connection, by way of explanation, that that map of 1859, to which reference has been made, showed two classifications; it showed railroads finished and railroads unfinished; it showed canals finished and canals unfinished. For the better understanding of conditions as then existing, I have on this map which I have prepared shown the following designation, a solid red line to show railroads in operation, a dashed red line to show railroads under construction, and a dotted red line to show railroads located.

Q. These various canal navigation companies, as I understand it, are copied correctly from the map of 1859?

A. The map of 1859 did not show any navigation companies.

Q. How did you place them on?

A. I ascertained the location of these navigation projects as best I could by examination of maps wherever filed with the State Corporation Commission.

Q. Of Virginia?

A. Of Virginia.

Q. They were the official maps and data and documents of that commission?

A. Yes, sir. I found very few of those maps; and I have indicated on this map more the streams, without showing the particular amount of stream which was improved. I was unable to ascertain just the extent of the improvement on these various streams, but have indicated with a green color over small circles, and connected with a single straight line, the location of the streams, and perhaps approximately what proportion of those streams was improved. That part was unknown to me.

By The Master:

Q. Do you refer to the canalization of the streams?

A. No, sir, I refer to the old improvement projects, not the canals.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. Were the canals laid down on the map?

A. The canals I have heretofore mentioned, with the exception of Kempsville Canal, were shown on the map on file with the State Librarian.

Q. Have you the James River and Kanawha Canal laid down as laid down on the map of 1859?

A. I have, in so far as it was contstructed or finished. There was some projection of unfinished canal which I have not laid down here on the map.

Q. I see here a red star for banks, a square with half of it red, marked Asylums and Hospitals, and a red triangle for Schools, and a red diamond for other public buildings. Have you correctly located those various objects on the map?

A. I have.

Q. And were those institutions located as of January 1st, 1861?

A. I want to say, I had no particular knowledge as to that date. I have located these institutions last mentioned in accordance with a list which was handed to me by the State of West Virginia's counsel.

Q. The purpose was to locate these institutions that existed on and prior to January 1st, 1861?

A. I so understood it, but I have no knowledge myself of whether they were in existence at that time or not.

By The Master:

Q. You have placed them on the map on the assumption that they were?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that information you received from counsel?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. If they existed at that time, are they correctly located?

A. They are.

Q. I see that the names of the various railroads are written thereon. Are they transcribed from that map in the main?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There has been some reference to the Manassas Gap Railroad. I wish you would tell the Master the beginning of that road, where it begins, and where it ends; that is, of January 1st, 1861?

A. The road began at a point on the Orange & Alexandria Railroad, 27 miles west of Alexandria. There was nothing to indicate it at the time, but at Manassas, I presume, and went in a westerly direction to Strasburg, and then southwesterly to Mount Jackson, with a further amount of road under construction as far as Harrisonburg.

Q. Mount Jackson would be at the end of the heavy red line?

A. Yes, sir, at the end of that line.

Q. South of Strasburg, about the two letters RR?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that road completed to Mount Jackson?

The Witness: I should like to refer to some of my notes.

The Master: Certainly.

A. I found on Document No. 17 for the year 1860, in the office of the State Librarian, on page 207, the president's report on the Manassas Gap Railroad. This report was made to the stockholders, and I should like to quote from that.

Q. Go ahead.

A. "The road has been in use as far as Mount Jackson during the twelve months ending the 30th of September, 1860, five months longer than the use of the same part during the previous year."

Q. When was the road constructed from Mount Jackson on to Harrisonburg?

A. I presume that the road was constructed during the year 1860, and perhaps 1861, between those points.

Q. Upon what do you base that presumption?

A. I should like to quote again from the same volume, page 208, of the same report: "The whole line between Harrisonburg and Mount Jackson under contract and full force at work." Then I have contracted a little by leaving out some unessential words. "The engineer advises against track laying until spring Every step preparatory to commencement at that time has been taken, rails ordered are ready for shipment; contracts for crossties let; bridge timbers partly in place; bridge masonry and excavation all in such state of forwardness as leaves no obstacle to the beginning of work of track laying as soon as frost leaves the ground in the spring, and of the uninterrupted continuation of work which insures its completion to Harrisonburg by the 1st of October next."

Q. What October would that be?

A. That would be October 1st, 1861.

Q. Where was the road constructed, if you know, in 1859, how far?

A. I should like to quote from Document No. 17 for the year ending September 30th, 1859, on page 241: "On March 1st trains ran from Alexandria to Mount Jackson, 12 miles beyond Woodstock on the valley line. A considerable part of graduation and masonry between Mount Jackson and Harrisonburg is now done. $350,000 additional appropriation with funds on hand will complete to Harrisonburg within 18 months from the time when work is started."

Mr. Holt: That was in 1859?

The Witness: This was a report as of September 30th, 1859.

Q. Suppose you read the rest of that note or report.

A. "The independent line to Purcellville and Loudoun Branch still lies half done. Sections 104 and 105 two miles north of Harrisonburg under contract by Shands, contractor, and thirteen miles under his charge now more than two-thirds graded, can be finished within the coming year. The whole length of first track laid on main line and branches, exclusive of second track and siding, is 86.73 miles. The Orange & Alexandria R. R. from Alexandria to Manassas Jct. is twenty-seven miles." That is the end of the quotation.

Q. Do you understand that the line between Manassas and Alexandria was owned by the Manassas Gap, or was it under a lease?

A. It was leased.

Q. Upon what do you base that? Read the record there.

A. In document No. 17, for the year 1860, also to be found in the State Librarian's office, on page 220, I find the following reference to Manassas Gap Railroad, in one of their reports. It is given in this way: "Item 98. Branch lines leased, rented or run by company." On the next line below that, "Of the Orange & Alexandria R. R. from Alexandria to Manassas Junction, 27 miles."

Q. What was the length of the main structure of the Manassas Gap, do you say?

A. They give in this same table on the same page—

Q. Read that table.

A. It reads as follows: The heading of the table is as follows: "Table C. Characteristics." Then the next line—these questions are all numbered, or the answers to them—"80. Length main line, Alexandria to Harrisonburg, 139.30 miles." The next one is, "81. Length of single track laid, 77.77 miles." I omitted one or two. And then comes, "84. Branches or other lines owned by company. To Harper's Ferry, 44.12 miles. From Orange and Alexandria road to Gainesville, 7.96 miles. From main line to Front Royal, 1.00 mile." The next line is, "85. Length of single track laid on same, 8.96 miles." The next is 97; I skip some lines. "97. The whole length of first track laid on main line and branches, measuring the road, exclusive of second tracks and sidings, 86.73 miles." That completes the abstract.

Q. Do you know when the Manassas Gap began construction?

A. I do not. That was a matter that I was looking up, but I had not determined that when I was called.

Q. Will you please find that data and give it to the stenographer later?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the length of the James River & Kanawha Canal as of January 1st, 1861; that is, the completed part?

A. Approximately, 195 miles from Richmond to Buchanan, going west along the James River.

Q. Did it have a branch line?

A. It did, the branch to Lexington, which was approximately 22 miles from Lexington on the north fork of the James River to its mouth at Balcony Falls.

Q. What, then, would be the entire length of the constructed part of the canal as of January 1st, 1861?

A. About 217 miles.

Q. Is there a tow path in connection with the canal?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would describe to the Master the width and nature and general features in connection with the tow path.

A. The canal consists of a bed in which the water was held, with a tow path on one side which varied in width according to the amount of material which they removed from the bed of the canal in the work of construction. This width, so far as I could notice—I did not measure the width—was from 14 to 25 or 30 feet wide.

Q. What was the condition of the two path with reference to being level?

A. It was perfectly level between locks. At that point at the time I inspected the canal, there had been grading done to adapt it to railroad construction. The part of the upper lift at the lock had been cut down somewhat, and an incline approach had been created or filled from the lower level of the tow path to the upper level.

Q. It is in evidence, Mr. Anderson, that the James River & Kanawha Canal Company was transferred to the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company, and that that company constructed a railroad along this tow path. I wish you would give the Master your best idea as to how much additional excavation and work would be necessary to change the tow path into a road bed for railroad purposes?

A. I did not examine that especially with that question in view; but I should assume that the percentage would be small, not over five or ten per cent. additional graduation work being required to adapt that old tow path and the structures that were then in use for the canal to the railroad bed and uses of the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad.

Q. Then the tow path was of practical railroad grade for the Richmond & Alleghany, with the addition of perhaps five or ten per cent. additional grading; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

By The Master:

Q. Did this extend the whole length of the canal?

A. This extended for practically the whole length of the canal. There were certain points which, by reason of the short curvature on the tow path of the canal, where sharp rocks jutted out into the old James River bed, that made it necessary for them to leave the tow path at those places. At some other places, by reason of the better location, the old right of way of the James River & Kanawha Canal was left entirely, and they proceeded to acquire a new right of way and constructed their line in an entirely different location.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. About how much of this entire length of right of way was not utilized by the Richmond & Alleghany?

A. I could not answer that. I have some right of way map sheets.

Q. We will come to that a little later. Just give your best idea?

A. I would suppose not over five or ten per cent.; that is a rough guess.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. You do not mean, Mr. Anderson, that that part of the tow path that was involved in the Branch Canal up to Lexington was used, do you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the Richmond & Alleghany build on that, too?

A. Yes, sir, to within a mile or so below Lexington, as far as the old tow path extended.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. You spoke with reference to locks in the canal. Were they of value for any purpose outside of the use proper of the canal, if the canal should quit being used for canal purposes?

A. I would think not. Certain dams were built in connection with the canal which were useful for power purposes.

Q. Where were those main dams located?

A. There was one at Bosher's Dam.

Q. When did you make your examination of the road?

A. That was in August.

Q. This last August?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand it, you personally inspected the whole length of it?

A. I made an inspection like this, your Honor, I secured map sheets of the old Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company, blue prints of their original tracings, which showed the old canal bed, the right of way of the old James River & Kanawha Canal Company, the location of locks, the lock keepers' houses, the dams, and in addition to that it also showed the center line of the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad as laid down upon the old tow path or where it may have left the path, and it also showed the additional right of way acquired by the railroad company in their construction work. I took those maps, which were to the scale of one inch equals 200 feet, and which were marked corresponding with the number on the mile posts, so that it was divided up, each sheet showing one mile section. I went up on the morning train and made at best only a horseback observation of each mile section, in connection with each one of these sheets, putting down the estimated valuation of the cost of grading, taking into consideration the additional work necessary to be done at the locks, and estimating as best I could roughly about what the right of way might be worth for those several miles. That was as to the upper part and where the railroad track followed closely the tow path. For the lower end I took my sheets, showing the old Richmond basin, which was at the lower end of the canal, and also the dock property connecting that old canal with tide water at about 28th street, in Richmond.

Q. So that, in the main, your information is drawn from the original sheets?

A. With those to guide me. This was only a horseback estimate.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. Could you tell where the tow path ran with reference to where that railroad ran?

A. Very readily.

Q. You could do that from the blue prints you had?

A. You could observe the curvature, also the mile posts; also the old canal bed, the old locks, the lock keepers' houses and the two path itself at frequent intervals.

Q. How could you observe the tow path? Explain that to the Master.

A. At some places the original tow path, or at least the fill, which was made out of or arising from the excavation, extended wider than the road bed or the track and ballast as actually laid out.

Q. The track would be about 14 feet wide, wouldn't it?

A. Usually they had the width of fills at the top about 14 feet wide.

Q. The upper part of the canal you inspected from the rear end of the train with these blue prints and the data you had, and the lower end, as I understand, you walked over with the blue prints and made a personal inspection on foot?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that you estimated the value of the rightof way the best you could, taking into consideration the character of the country, and based your opinion of what it would be worth in 1861?

A. My idea, your Honor, was estimating that as of the date at which the railroad actually acquired the property and took it over.

Q. That was along about 1880?

A. About 1880.

Q. Did you estimate the value of the excavations and the value of the tow path per mile outside of or separate from the right of way?

A. I did.

Q. At what basis of value per day for work, that is the price of labor, did you take that into consideration?

A. I would like to say, your Honor, that my principal railroad experience in construction work was at a time when labor was worth about $1.00 a day, and I have no knowledge as to the value of labor in 1880, and that this judgment of mine is based largely on about what the work would have cost at the rate of a dollar a day. I do not know what it would be in 1880. My experience was largely in 1889 and 1890.

Q. I do not want to lead, but I want to hurry along. As I understand, Mr. Anderson, as you went along over the road you rode at the end of the train and had these map sheets, and each mile you passed you put down your value of the right of way in one column and then the value of the road bed as made up from the tow path in another column?

A. I made my memoranda directly on those map sheets in yellow crayons, and somewhat abbreviated them, because I put down figures which represented thousands.

Q. Do you have copies of your estimates in that regard?

A. I have none outside of this private report.

Q. Will you please file your estimates of each mile both of the right of way and of the excavations?

A. I will.

The Master: What do you mean by excavations?

Mr. Lilly: In the tow path, that is the value of the excavations in the tow path.

The Master: You mean the excavation out of the canal basin into the tow path?

Mr. Lilly: No, I mean the value in the tow path.

By The Master:

Q. Let me get this exact. What you mean by excavation, you mean what it would cost to excavate from the canal basin and pile into the tow path?

A. No. This estimate of mine was made on this basis, I tried to estimate what the value of that work would be—what the cost of that work would have been to the railroad or what the value of that old tow path was in the matter of graduation to the railroad.

Q. In other words, if the Richmond & Alleghany were going to build a railroad in that vicinity, and there was not any tow path there, your estimate is as to what the tow path as you found it would have been worth to them as a matter of construction that they would have had to make?

A. That was the point, your Honor.

The Master: That is what you mean by excavation?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, sir.

The Witness: Taking into consideration the additional work that you would have to do at each lock to grade a suitable approach.

Q. That is, being the owners of this right of way, estimating that way, it cost them a certain sum less to put the road in that vicinity or in that locality than it would have if the tow path had not been previously constructed by somebody?

A. That is the point.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. You speak of some extra work having to be done at each lock in order to get the road on grade. About what was the amount of that work at each lock?

A. I don't know; I did not have time to ascertain. I just tried to estimate, making an allowance that I thought would be compensation for each mile as I went along. I cannot recall what it was at each particular lock.

By The Master:

Q. How long were you making this trip?

A. I went up one morning, leaving here about nine o'clock in the morning, and reaching Buchanan about, I think it was about three or four o'clock in the afternoon, and spent the night at Balcony Falls, and went up the next morning to Lexington.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. And you made your observations while going up on the railroad?

A. From the rear of the railroad train.

Q. And made your estimate going twenty-five or thirty miles an hour?

A. I suppose we were going that the larger part of the time. It is a horseback opinion, going a little faster.

Q. A kind of lightning calculation?

A. It was simply a horseback opinion, and going pretty fast.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. As you passed along, could you identify each sheet or blueprint with each mile?

A. Very readily, by the mile posts and also by the curvature in alignment and locks, and things which were marked on the map.

Mr. Lilly: We now offer the following, estimate values of grading and rights of way of the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company as of date of 1880, as estimated by J. K. Anderson.

Mr. Harrison: Are you introducing the map, Mr. Lilly?

Mr. Lilly: No, not the map.

The Master: He is introducing the detailed estimate made under these conditions.

Mr. Lilly: Yes, which is as follows: Would you like me to read it?

The Master: Not as far as I am concerned. Have you duplicates of it?

Mr. Harrison: How many pages are there?

Mr. Lilly: There are 195 entries, one entry for each mile.

The Witness: About 217 entries, one entry for each mile. I put the estimated value as to each mile section.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. How in the world could you make an estimate of the cost of construction or the value of right of way for each mile when flying by at the rate of thirty miles an hour?

A. It is a rough estimate, as I stated.

Q. Could you make it as well if you had been here in Richmond?

A. No, not nearly so well. You would fail to note that here in Richmond, the depth of fill or width of fill.

Q. How could you tell the depth or the width of fill, going by at that speed?

A. You can get a rough idea of it the same as you can riding over it on horseback, of any railroad work.

Mr. Harrison: I did not mean to interrupt you.

Mr. Lilly: That is quite all right. We do not claim that it is accurate to the cent, but it is the best evidence we have.

The Master: What you mean is that it is the best evidence you could get going at that rate of speed?

Mr. Lilly: Yes.

The Master: I do not suppose it would be conceded that a more accurate estimate could not be made.

Mr. Lilly: We agree to that.

The Master: I think Mr. Anderson knows how he could get at that.

The Witness: I was pushed for time, your Honor.

The Master: There is no doubt that you have done the best you could, going at that lightning speed.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Lilly: That was going some, was it not?

The Master: It rather strikes me that it was.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. I wish you would read the summary in reference to the canal.

Mr. Conrad: If your Honor please. I do not think that the record should be encumbered or that we should go to the expense of copying into the record at all. It is perfectly evident that this gentleman is incompetent to speak of the value of this work. He might just as well have gone over it in an aeroplane. The idea of introducing that great mass of matter here—

Mr. Lilly: It is not a great mass.

Mr. Conrad: The idea of putting that into a record, and if it has to go to the court or has to be paid for, I object to it on that ground. It is not evidence that tends to prove the amount or the value of the cost, or the value of anything. I think the gentleman himself would admit that he would not buy, himself, on the statement of a civil engineer—

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. Were you ever a contractor?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then your business has been simply that of a civil engineer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who ran a level, or something of that sort?

A. A little more extensive than that, perhaps.

Q. Well, perhaps.

Mr. Conrad: I submit that the evidence is incompetent to prove, it does not tend to prove the end which it is introduced for. It is a waste of time and a consumption of money in putting it into the record. I object to it on that ground.

Mr. Lilly: We would have had the figures before you would have got through, Mr. Conrad.

The Master: The objection that Mr. Conrad has is that it encumbers the record with details that are of no value.

Mr. Conrad: And the additional objection that the gentleman, from his own statement, does not show that he is an expert.

Mr. Lilly: If the Court please, there are about five pages of that detail. It begins a mile north—

The Master: That really does not go to the question of its admissibility. Of course, if they raise it seriously I will have to rule on it.

Mr. Lilly: I would like to say a word or two with reference to that. It shows his estimate of the right of way and his estimate of the excavation. It seems to me that when he has a blue print of that particular mile, with a bird's eye view showing the center of the railroad, showing the tow path grade, and showing the whole matter, that he could go along and see this fill and that excavation and the whole situation; it is only an estimate, but whatever it is worth, we think we are entitled to it. Later that is a matter for argument. If they can show that he is wrong, they may do so.

Mr. Conrad: He has not qualified himself as an expert, from his own statement.

Mr. Lilly: There is a railroad 217 miles long that was created that we own 23½ per cent. of, and we are asking for our 23½ per cent. of that value. Now, we have shown what the Richmond & Alleghany considered it worth in 1882, and we are going to show what Mr. Anderson considered it, from his observation, as worth; and a part of it he went over on foot. Whether he is mistaken or not is for them to show, and the weight of it is of course for the Master. But it certainly would have some weight. In other words, as the record stood before Mr. Anderson came on, there is nothing to show that there was a tow path, nothing to show the width or the grade or anything about the physical situation.

The Master: They are not objecting to that. Their objection is that the witness is now undertaking to give an estimate of what it would cost and what it was worth, and what the new right of way construction cost.

Mr. Lilly: No, not the right of way.

Mr. Harrison: The value of it as a railroad right of way and as a canal right of way are two different things. We did not utilize it as a railroad. The stockholders of the James River and Kanawha Canal Company owned a canal right of way. What was it worth as a canal right of way?

Mr. Lilly: What it was worth for any purpose, that is our contention.

The Master: The question raised before me is whether this is competent testimony, and Mr. Conrad raises the question that the witness has not shown that he is qualified to testify as to the cost or value in 1880 in this locality. Now, I suppose it is a familiar rule of law, that is if the objection is insisted upon, that the witness cannot testify as to the cost of construction in a certain locality unless he has shown in the first instance that he is familiar with that cost of construction at that period of time. That is the first proposition. Then, I understand the witness to say that there are a number of instances here where there is a right of way used by the railroad which is not coterminous with the railroad tow path, and that the general question which you have covers that. Now, I suppose, in order for the witness to be able legally to testify to that he must show that he has some knowledge of what a right of way would cost in that locality at that time. Of course that involves in the first place the cost of the right of way, and in the next place the cost of the construction on the right of way. So if they insist upon it, I do not see but you will have to bring your witness up to a point of showing in the first place, 1880—well, that is nineteen years after the date—that in the first place makes it extremely doubtful as to its value; but in any event, you will have to show, as far as I can see, that the witness has the original knowledge of the conditions that existed in that locality at that time, in order to qualify him to legally express an opinion, without now discussing the evanescent and moving picture character of the description made as the basis for the information he gives.

Mr. Lilly: We can show his experience in making railroad estimates and surveys, and his general information with reference to the cost of construction work.

The Master: I do not see but what you have got to qualify him by showing his knowledge of construction in this locality and vicinity. Of course, I do not know what the witness' general knowledge may be. Here is 1880 as your date. Take, for instance, in the first place, your right of way. Of course, I cannot let this witness testify as to what a right of way would cost on the line of this road in 1880, without some intimation that he knows what the conditions were as to the value of the land that was taken for the right of way. That is so obvious that it is hardly worth discussing. Your question was broad enough to cover that, for instance. Of course I cannot let Mr. Anderson say what a right of way on this James River and Kanawha Canal would cost in 1880, unless he has some knowledge of what it would cost. His experience in some other place may or may not qualify him generally, but this right of way is located here, and he must have some knowledge of the conditions in this location, and at that time, in order to entitle him to express an opinion of what the right of way would cost at that time. That is the way it seems to me. That is as to the right of way. When you come to the question of the construction, the same general principles apply. I do not know what the fact was about 1880, I do not know what labor cost, I do not know what the factors were.

Mr. Lilly: He bases it on a dollar a day.

The Master: That does not fix it. If a dollar a day was the running price in 1880, why that might furnish a basis. Of course the objection is hardly technical. In the first place, it is nineteen years after the event that you are trying to establish. In the next place, Mr. Anderson has done the best he could with this almost chain lightning examination. The question is whether, under the circumstances, you want to encumber the record with the testimony, under these conditions. Of course, if they insist on it, I should have to compel you to prove cost and value in 1880 in that locality by some witness who had some knowledge of those facts at that time. I understand that to be the rule, and I should have to hold you to it.

Mr. Anderson: I want to say for the benefit of my friends on the other side, it seems to me that there is a more conclusive objection to this testimony than any that has been mentioned. If it be proved that this grading cost fifty thousand dollars a mile, and that it would not have cost but twenty thousand dollars a mile if the canal had not been there, that would have no legal bearing in my judgment upon the real question in this case. The question in this case is, what was the value of Virginia's $10,400,000 of stock. In what? In the James River and Kanawha Canal Company, either on the 1st of January, 1861, or on the 20th of June, 1863. Now, your Honor, any evidence of that sort is too remote to cast any light upon the value of the canal in 1863 or 1861. Why, if that sort of evidence is to go into this case, sir, it will last ten years.

Mr. Lilly: If you force us to send experts to measure it, it will.

Mr. Anderson: I do not think the evidence would be competent if an actual survey had been made by West Virginia. See what it leads to. I happen to know a great deal about this canal and about this railroad. I happened to be counsel upon its upper division for this railroad at one time, and I know something about what it cost. Suppose we could show that that right of way, instead of costing almost nothing, as the witness would seem to indicate, cost, between Lexington and Balcony Falls, over thirty thousand dollars; that as much as three thousand dollars was paid for a single mile of right of way. The company had only a right to build a canal, not a railroad. So that as to some portions of that road, it cost thousands of dollars to acquire the right of way. The witness could have gotten definite evidence if he had wanted to, by going to the records of the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company. But it would not be competent here. It would throw no light on the value of the canal in 1863, when there was no suggestion of building a railroad thereon. This railroad, as will be shown here, a very short time after its construction, went into the hands of a receiver, and it was sold. And it will be shown that it was bought for far less than the par of its bonds, and that the stock was absolutely worthless. It was sold to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, who did not then pay for it in money, but paid for it in bonds, about six million dollars, according to my recollection.

The Master: I appreciate the significance of these suggestions made by General Anderson, and they are very significant, of course. But of course the question pending here before me is not involved in the objection that he makes. If counsel for Virginia insist upon it, I must hold that a man cannot make a statement as an expert, as to the cost of construction in 1880 on the line of this Kanawha Canal Company, unless he has some knowledge of conditions that existed there at that time and at that place. This is no impeachment of the intelligence of Mr. Anderson. He knows that as well as I do or any of us do. And my judgment is that Mr. Anderson has done a first-class piece of work under the circumstances and so far as he is able to go. Of course if they raise that point I am obliged to hold that a man cannot qualify as an expert unless he has knowledge of those conditions at that time and under those circumstances. Of course we all know this question of construction sometimes involves more than a few shovelfuls of dirt. And it does involve the actual cost at that time, the cost of labor and all those things. Of course if the counsel for West Virginia feel that they want to go into that detail in connection with that, with Mr. Anderson, my judgment is that Mr. Anderson is not able to legally qualify as an expert on the question of the value of this road in 1880. Now if the West Virginia people feel that they want to go into more elaborate investigation on that point, the question might be raised as to whether or not it is too remote. But that I do not pass on now. My judgment is that Mr. Anderson is not able, under the circumstances, to testify.

Mr. Anderson: It opens up an endless field.

The Master: This is a practical question for the counsel for West Virginia. Mr. Anderson, in my judgment, has done a very nice piece of work, and has gone just as far as any man in his situation could go. He is not responsible for not knowing the conditions in 1880.

The Witness: I was only eleven years old then, your Honor.

The Master: Of course the facts that he has testified to, why that is another thing.

Mr. Conrad: Is not the point that has been made of more significance and force than your Honor gives it? Virginia did not own a foot of this ground.

Mr. Lilly: She owned ten millions of the twelve millions of stock.

Mr. Conrad: But a stockholder does not own the land. The company in its corporate character owns the land.

The Master: I appreciate that.

Mr. Conrad: Now Virginia is charged here with owning ten million dollars of stock, of which these gentlemen claim 23½ per cent. That is of the stock. Great heavens, it is not of the road bed or the canal bed. I have always understood that the stone on that canal was the most costly thing in the internal work of Virginia. It is what was the value of the stock, not what was the value of the road bed. There may have been a gold mine under it.

The Master: Their contention is, that here was a valuable road bed, which is a factor to be included in determining the value of the stock.

Mr. Holt: General Lilly has withdrawn his question and is going to put another.

The Master: We are now ready for another chain lightning expedition.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. Now, as to the lower end of the canal or the dock part, did you have any maps or blue prints showing the location of it?

A. I had two; one was the Sheet A and one was Sheet B, of the same scale as the other map; they show basins, locks and wharves of the old original basin and also of the dock proper.

Q. Just tell hurriedly where it was located.

The Master: Are you going to have a blue print of that?

Mr. Lilly: No, he had a blue print and he went on foot and examined this.

The Master: A general description of that is all you need.

Mr. Lilly: Yes, sir.

The Witness: I have a blue print at the hotel.

By The Master:

Q. Just describe it in your own way.

A. From about 7th Street, which is south of the Capitol, to the eastward to about 28th Street.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. In Richmond?

A. In Richmond, Virginia.

Q. How long was that property and about how wide?

A. Well, I should judge that it was not more than a mile and a quarter long, and it varied in width at the different points, in some places a hundred feet wide or more, perhaps 200 feet wide in the widest place, and other places 50 or 75 feet wide.

By The Master:

Q. You say beginning at 7th Street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that, above tidewater?

A. Seventh Street is right down here at Byrd Street station.

Q. How far is it above tidewater?

A. I think about 50 feet in elevation.

Q. I mean up the river?

A. About a mile and a quarter, perhaps.

Q. Above tidewater?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then did it run down to tidewater?

A. It did.

Q. So that it was located practically in the heart of the city?

A. Yes, sir, the business section, I should say.

The Master: That is all I want.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. And you spoke about water power. What was the height of the fall, the entire fall?

A. The fall available varied from 18 or 20 feet, and in some instances it was mentioned as being about 50 feet, or the possibility of obtaining about 50 feet.

By The Master:

Q. Were they utilized?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All of them?

A. Well, I do not believe all of the water power was utilized. There was some additional power that was not utilized. There were certain old contracts made, your Honor, going back to seventeen hundred and something, and some subsequent to that date, and some before the war and some after the war.

Q. How are those water powers to-day, for instance?

A. I understand they are now in use by the Tredegar Mills and some others.

Q. Is that water power right adjacent to Richmond?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The main fall was right in the City of Richmond?

A. Yes, sir, that is the main fall was rather an extension of falls or rapids, and they utilized the full head by means of this canal.

Q. How many horsepower did they develop?

A. I cannot give you that, your Honor.

Q. You have not got factors enough so that you could give that?

A. No, sir, I did not have the necessary data.

The Master: That is all that I wanted to inquire about.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. Do you know what the docks earned for the year 1861, or about that date, the gross earning and the net earning?

The Master: Were they segregated from the canal generally?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, sir.

The Master: A separate proposition?

Mr. Lilly: They are all owned together, but the revenue is kept separate.

A. May I refer to my notes?

Mr. Anderson: There was a lower and an upper dock.

The Witness: They acquired the lower dock and added to it, the total cost being something over $800,000. If you will let me refer to my notes, your Honor, I can give some further information on that.

The Master: We are getting something now that has some relation to the item of $1,000,000?

Mr. Lilly: Yes.

The Witness: In Document No. 17, page 117, being the report for the fiscal year ending September 30th, 1855, made by the James River and Kanawha Canal Company, I find the following under the head of unfinished improvements: "Disbursed on construction from Buchanan to Covington, $164,605." That was on locks, as I understood, beyond the part that was then finished, and to the extreme west. Then, on page 118 of the same report is shown, under the heading "Tidewater connection, excess of disbursements over receipts, on account of improvements and operation, $497,436." On page 123 of the same report, under the head of new improvements and subject heading disbursements is shown the following:

Purchase of Richmond dock	$244,721.
Tidewater connection prior to loan of 9th March, 1849,	9,233.
Tidewater connections	582,945.

Making a total as of date September 30th, 1855, $836,899

For the year ending September 30th, 1860, in Document 17, page 275, under the heading new improvement, subject heading disbursements, appear the following:

Purchase and improvement of Richmond dock	$244,721.
Tidewater connections prior to loan of 9th March, 1849	9,233.
Tidewater connections	598,199.
Total as of September 30th, 1860	$852,153.

In the same volume, on page 237, is found the following, under the heading of "Receipts from revenue:"

Dock	$50,128.03
Canal	238,991.27

Q. What date was that that the earning of the canal was $238,000?

A. That was on the same date, as of September 30th, 1860.

Q. Give what the expense was?

A. Under the heading Disbursements, Docks, $7,721.52.

Tidewater connection	$842.07.
Canal	$138,099.03.

Q. As I understand, those figures refer to the income and disbursements on the dock and canal as of September 30th, 1860?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: Ending with what year?

The Witness: That was the end of the fiscal year.

The Master: What is the aggregate of the disbursements?

The Witness: On the entire canal and docks?

The Master: Yes.

Q. Give the income and then the disbursements.

The Master: Were there any fixed charges outside of those?

Mr. Lilly: I suppose so, your Honor.

The Master: We will see what those were. I think we can get it all in here. If there were fixed charges, we will see what they were and what the next result was.

Mr. Lilly: I think Mr. Hillman is trying to look up the balance sheet.

The Master: You think he will supplement that?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, sir.

The Witness: The total of disbursements, your Honor, in the estimates just mentioned for the fiscal year ending September 30th, 1860, $146,662.62.

Q. Give the total of income from the docks and canal?

The Master: The receipts.

A. The total receipts for the same period of time, received from the docks and canal, $289,119.30.

The Master: Do you know what the interest charges were upon the indebtedness of the canal company for that year?

A. I am not informed.

The Master: We will get that from Mr. Hillman.

Q. How much was the excess of the income over the disbursements for the year ending September 30th, 1860?

A. $142,456.68.

Mr. Lilly: We will now offer the map in evidence.

The map was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 14, September 9th, 1914, C. B.

The Master: We will suspend here until 10 o'clock in the morning.

Adjourned to September 10th, 1914, at 10 A. M.

BEFORE THE MASTER.

Richmond, Virginia, September 10th, 1914.

Present the same counsel as on yesterday.

Mr. Lilly: There was some evidence given yesterday with reference to Mount Jackson on the map that was filed, and Mr. Anderson has had that put on some of the other maps; and we ask to substitute that.

The Master: These were not put in yesterday.

J. K. ANDERSON,

recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

The Witness: Leesburg was put on, it being another terminus of the operating road.

The Master: I was going to make this inquiry about this blueprint. Of course if that is a part of the record I will have to get it in in some place in the record. Would it be feasible to reduce this by a photographic process, say fifty per cent., and make it reasonably equally effective? There are a lot of these names on here that could be reduced fifty per cent. and be read all right. If we could reduce this fifty per cent. it would make a blueprint that would go very conveniently into the record, but as it is now it is pretty large to go in.

Mr. Lilly: We could use this for the original record now, but when it is put in print it could be reduced.

The Master: Mr. Anderson can attend to that. That will make it a pretty convenient exhibit to go right along in the print. Was this map put in?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, your honor, marked Exhibit No. 14.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. Mr. Anderson, how much railroad was in operation and completed in the State of West Virginia as of January 1st, 1861?

The Master: West Virginia?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, the number of miles.

The Master: You mean now of these systems involved in the controversy?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, sir.

The Master: So that it is confined to that?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, I mean to confine it to the railroads in which Virginia was interested as a stockholder.

The Master: And as to which claims are made in this answer?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, sir.

The Master: So that confines it to the record itself. I suppose that is what you meant?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, that is what I meant.

Mr. Harrison: All that is in the record now.

The Master: It won't take but a minute, if they want it.

A. There was approximately in that part of old Virginia which now constitutes West Virginia about 18 miles of operated road, being a part of the Winchester & Potomac Railroad.

By the Master:

Q. That was in 1861 and 1863?

A. In 1861, January 1, 1861, your honor.

The Master: And does that also apply to June 20th, 1863?

Mr. Lilly: I do not know whether he has investigated with reference to that.

The Witness: No, sir, I have not.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. What was the total mileage of railroad in what is now Virginia as of January 1, 1861, in which Virginia was a stockholder and to which claims are set up in the defendant's supplemental answer?

The Master: To which this controversy relates; that covers the whole ground.

A. 1,199.99, I might say 1,200 miles.

Q. Did you bring with you the blue prints showing the dock's properties?

A. I did not; they are at the hotel.

Mr. Lilly: That is all at present.

The Master: You may cross-examine.

Mr. Anderson, of counsel for Virginia: If your honor please, I mention this for information, my instructions from the master—I would like to have Dr. Hogg's attention—I thought your honor had ruled out the evidence of Mr. Anderson yesterday.

The Master: I ruled out his opinion as to the cost and value.

Mr. Anderson: And as to his inspection?

The Master: There is nothing in on that. I did not rule out what he stated about the tow path and the road, those things that he could see; anybody could see that. His testimony is competent upon that point. I did rule out everything that he was expected to testify to on the question of cost of excavation or value of existing tow paths to be utilized by the road and covering that general question. As to the physical conditions, there was no objection made to his testimony. The only objection that was made to his testimony was when you got down to the point where he was asked to put into the record his opinion as to the question of excavation. Then an objection was made and I sustained the objection. No objection was made to any of the balance of his testimony and I did not have any occasion to rule it out.

Mr. Holt: All that portion of his testimony as to which your statement about the airship had application went out.

The Master: Yes, the horseback observation. We know that Mr. Anderson made it, but it is not in as a factor. Nothing else was objected to.

Mr. Anderson: We do not care to cross-examine him. We have evidence that takes his evidence out of the case.

Mr. Harrison: I want to ask him one question.

CROSS EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I want to know the length of the Orange & Alexandria railroad.

A. The distance from Alexandria to Gordonsville was 88.3 miles. Then there is a piece over the Virginia Central from Gordonsville to Charlottesville, and then they had an additional length of line from Charlottesville to Lynchburg of 60 miles, and then a branch line from Warrenton Junction to Warrenton, making a total of 157.2 miles of main line and branches.

Mr. Harrison: That is all I want to ask.

Mr. Holt: I wanted to understand from Mr. Anderson what he said, if anything, upon the subject of the state of completion of this canal of January 1st, 1861.

Mr. Harrison: He did not say anything.

Mr. Holt: I will ask you the question and run the risk of repetition.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Was the James River and Kanawha Canal completed and in operation on January 1st, 1861?

A. My only source of information regarding that was this map of 1859, which so showed it as being completed or finished, to use their own term, from Richmond to Buchanan and also from Lexington down the north fork of the James River to Balcony Falls.

Q. From Balcony Falls to Buchanan, is there any hiatus there?

A. No. I mentioned from Richmond, which passes Balcony Falls to Buchanan.

Q. Was that canal complete and in operation on January 1st, 1861, then?

Mr. Anderson: It undoubtedly was, to near Lexington, not quite to it.

The Witness: I said a few miles below Lexington.

Mr. Anderson: I would not say it was completed, it was in operation.

The Master: The towpath was about a mile short of Lexington.

Mr. Holt: If Mr. Hillman will now take the stand we will give the Master the requisite information on the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac road. But while he is coming, yesterday when we introduced this interest account, interest collected on securities from 1861, we had nothing but the white sheet or matrix, and although it was filed as an exhibit, we have now the blueprints to distribute. Have they been handed to you gentlemen already?

Mr. Harrison: I reckon so, Judge; I really do not know.

The Master: Do you want the original blueprint to go on file as the official exhibit?

Mr. Holt: We really marked it that way yesterday.

The Master: Have you anything else that you can do while Mr. Hillman is coming?

Mr. Holt: I believe not. We have one other accountant that we want to get a short schedule from.

The Master: My attention was called to the fact this morning that there is some question as to how the original schedule found on page 13 of the print in the case will be treated in connection with the corrected schedule. Of course that schedule has been very extensively and profoundly modified by the corrections subsequently made. I understand West Virginia would prefer to have the schedule 13 go out and the corrected schedule take its place, and Virginia prefers to have it stay in and the corrected schedule go in also.

Mr. Harrison: Undoubtedly.

The Master: Of course unless there is an agreement between the parties that would have to be the course pursued, because that was the course developed upon the hearing.

Mr. Holt: We make no question about that; let them both go in.

Mr. Harrison: Put in the original schedule and the revised schedule.

The Master: I suppose they want the benefit of whatever change they have compelled the witness to make during the course of the hearing.

Mr. Lilly: If it explains the change, let it go in.

The Master: Exhibit No. 11, page 66, has also been changed. And I suppose the Virginia people prefer to have the changed schedule in addition to the original schedule. If not we will change it.

Mr. Harrison: Yes, we want it just as before, let the original stand and put in the corrected schedule.

The Master: Let the original stand as it is and let the corrected schedule go in, so that the record will show the original schedule and the corrections made during the hearing.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN,

recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, upon yesterday or the day before the master requested you to give him and put into the record any additional information that you might find with respect to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railway Company, throwing light upon the character of its balance sheet as put in by you.

The Master: And principally the large item called cost of construction, so that we could get an intelligent idea of what that really represented.

Q. Have you made an additional search and if so, have you found anything throwing any light upon that subject?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. What is that?

The Master: Does this include all that there is, and has he accompanied it with all the explanation that will be useful? Because if he has you submit it to the other side and put it right into the record and I will take it for what it is worth later on. If the memorandum which you hold in your hand, Judge Holt, contains everything that Mr. Hillman has found and if it contains all the explanations that occur to him as being essential and the same thing that he would make orally, put it into the record and hand it to the other side, and as far as I am concerned, I will look it over later and the other side can have an opportunity to cross-examine in relation to it.

Q. Have you prepared, Mr. Hillman, a written statement showing the result by items of your new search?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Will you file it as a part of your testimony and mark it

Defendant's Exhibit No. 15?

Mr. Harrison: What does that exhibit purport to be?

Mr. Holt: I will hand you a copy of it right now.

A. I file it so marked.

The Master: This is the data which he has found bearing upon the weight to be given to the balance sheet of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 15, September 10th, 1914, C. B., and is as follows:

In matter of the Potomac Steamboat Company stock included in the assets of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac railroad, March 1, 1861, $38,900.00.

Page 350, R. F. & P. report of 1853, referring to the Washington & Fredericksburg Steamship Company, (the original company of the Potomac Company) says: "In consequence of the low price paid for the Steamboat Company stock, the R. R. Company have since received 12 to 14% annual dividends," but states that this year (1853) the Steamboat Company lost money because they had to make connection with two trains per day. This loss was made the basis of a more liberal allowance by the R. F. & P. to the Steamboat Company in the division of rates, and then the Steamboat Company seems to have just paid its expenses.

Page 502, March 31, 1861 report, shows that the four boats of this company were seized by the U. S. Government for transports and war vessels. On the same report a dividend is shown on this stock, and carried in surplus, of $33,360.00.

In April, 1862, page 507, they had credited this account $83,385.00, which increase of $50,025.00 was explained in the report of November, 1864 (written and not paged), when it was stated that Capt. J. M. Robinson had turned over to the State the $50,025.00, their share of the amount paid by the U. S. Government for the four boats. This establishes that January 1, 1861, this asset was at least worth par.

In the Matter of Bills Receivable:

This account varies from year to year, sometimes greater and sometimes less than the amount March 31, 1861. There is also shown in the disbursements from year to year purchases of bills receivable, hence it is inferrable that the account was good and collectible.

In the Matter of Value of Cost of Road and Equipment:

The cost is carried forward carefully year to year, generally under classified headings, such as "Engineering," "Grading," "Bridges," &c., and contains no items that are not legitimate.

They had a yearly report by directors as to general conditions of road, and in almost every instance they report on roadway and rolling stock, and the report is always in excellent condition, showing that the repairs and renewals had taken care to keep the road in good condition.

In addition to this, we have the following items of "extraordinary" expense charged to operating expenses, which extra expenses were additional items of cost of road and equipment.

Page 295, R. F. & P. report, September 30, 1848, shows expenditure from earnings in capital accounts not charged to cost of road and equipment	$ 11,266.46
Page 362, 1852 report, says that the revenue has been sufficient not only to pay current expenses and the usual dividend, but to lay down heavier rail and carry 9 to 10,000 to surplus, no specific amount mentioned, but not charged to cost of road and equipment
Page 346, 1853 report, says that the " expenses included cost of two locomotives, two additional coaches, and new depot and passenger office at Fredericksburg," not charged to cost of road.

The Master: So far as I am concerned, I will take this and look it over during the intermission or this evening. By the way, do you want to excuse Mr. Hillman or do you intend to keep him here for a day or two longer?

Mr. Holt: We think we will keep him here for another day in order to be on the safe side.

The Master: As far as I am concerned, I will look at this memorandum this evening. I may not have time during the recess at noon; and the other side can also have an opportunity to examine it, and if they want to cross-examine in relation to it, they can call Mr. Hillman later, or would you prefer to take it up right now, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir, I am not prepared to cross-examine on it now.

The Master: You would not be any better prepared if he simply read it orally?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir. It will take a little time to look it over.

The Master: I think then if it is agreeable I will take that course with it and we will put it in the record, and later if you wish to ask any questions about it or I wish to ask any questions about it, we will call Mr. Hillman. That saves a little time.

Mr. Harrison: If this purports to be transcripts of the reports of the road taken from the books of the company or whatever it came from, it just seems to be excerpts with comments by this witness upon these excerpts, deductions, conclusions.

The Master: That is right.

Mr. Harrison: If they are worth anything we ought to see the data itself from which they are drawn.

The Master: Why don't you turn this memorandum over to Mr. Potter and let Mr. Potter examine it, unless you prefer to examine the original data yourself? That is, I do not like to take the time to have it brought in here. Just turn this right over to Mr. Potter, or if you want and you prefer to examine the original data, simply put the original data where they can reach it, and later if they have anything that they want to cross-examine about, we will take it up.

Mr. Anderson: This is a question of what the reports mean.

The Master: This is in response to my question. They do not offer it as evidence. What I wanted him to do was to look at the records and books of this company and see if he could give me any information that would be worth anything tending to show what weight was to be given to this entry as bearing upon its representing the actual value of the road at that date, and Mr. Hillman has done the best he could and has got everything he could find.

Mr. Hogg: And states that he would state that orally if he was examined.

The Master: Yes; but there is no occasion to take the time to do that. I suggest you turn it over to Mr. Potter and let him look at these original sources, and if there is anything later you want to cross-examine about, Mr. Hillman may be cross-examined.

Mr. Anderson: Just from glancing at the paper, I do not think it would be legal evidence if he stated it in detail.

The Master: It is not offered as legal evidence. He has brought it here at my request.

Mr. Anderson: It is inferences of the witness from facts that do not appear here.

Mr. Harrison: The point I make is that he has not brought enough here. If the reports that he has examined in the offices of the company and upon which his original testimony was based show more than the exhibits which he filed from those books originally, and he now wants to base some conclusion or conjecture or theory founded upon something else than those reports show, he ought to have brought us a complete transcript. It is not for us to go and hunt them up.

The Master: No. I think you misunderstand the situation, Mr. Harrison. Mr. Hillman brings here these trial balances and he states what they are, and I examined him on the trial balances, and when I got to examine on the trial balances I found this item that is carried along three or four years, at exactly the same sum, and my examination was directed to the question as to whether or not on a liquidation of this company that sum could properly be realized from the assets, and in connection with that I asked Mr. Hillman to look over for me the books of this company and its reports and anything that he could find that would tend to show to me anything that in his judgment would help me in determining whether that was the total cost of the road after a period of some thirty years, and if that is all there was to it, the weight that I would give to it, and it is in response to that suggestion and request of mine that Mr. Hillman brings this data. Mr. Hillman did not produce it and the other side did not produce it. He has brought it here at my request because I wanted to see if the books showed anything that would give me any light on the proposition as to whether that big item was simply aggregate cost without any cost for depreciation and simply showed whatever they paid out during thirty years, so that I could tell whether or not in my judgment the road that during a period of thirty years had cost say a sum of money would now sell for that same sum. It is in response to that that he has done this work. Of course if it does not appear to you that he has gone into it thoroughly enough, have Mr. Potter do it and bring in anything that will tend to give me any light at all on this proposition.

Mr. Harrison: I do. My point is that it does not shed any light on the subject.

The Master: Then if it does not, it does not amount to anything.

Mr. Harrison: You have just stated that you had requested him to furnish you additional information bearing on this balance sheet that would show what was included in cost of construction, etc., or whether something else included cost of construction. Take this statement he has made, let me read it—

The Master: Can't we save time in this way. Suppose you look it over and I will look it over, and if it does not throw any light on the subject it won't amount to anything.

Mr. Harrison: I think it would be an absolute waste of time to cross-examine about this thing.

The Master: I have not read it. Of course if you want to pursue that course I will have him examined in detail about it, and you can go on with the cross-examination now. But my suggestion is that we let him put this statement in here—I suppose he has done the best he could—

Mr. Harrison: No, I do not think he has. I think he should have brought us the reports from which these extracts are made.

The Master: Then have the reports examined.

Mr. Harrison: I do not think it is up to us to examine them. It seems to me that if he has found something in the reports that he says is favorable to his construction, that it would be proper for him to bring the whole report here and not merely his excerpts.

The Master: Where is the report?

The Witness: The report, sir, is in room 1401, First National Bank building, treasurer's office of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac road.

The Master: Where is that, in Richmond?

The Witness: Yes. They will not allow them to go out of their possession.

The Master: They will open them to inspection of Mr. Potter?

The Witness: Yes, undoubtedly.

Mr. Harrison: I do not think the duty ought to be imposed upon us to send somebody there to go over those reports and see what else they contain, but my point is if there is anything contained in those reports that would help to elucidate the balance sheet of this road, the reports themselves ought to have been brought and not ex-parte extracts from them.

The Master: He was not requested by me to bring the reports, and he is not subject to criticism for not bringing them.

Mr. Harrison: Can it not be done now?

The Master: If they do not want to let those reports go out of their possession, it cannot be done.

Mr. Harrison: He can make copies.

The Master: I do not think that is required. I think Mr. Potter or you should go there and check them up.

Mr. Harrison: There is nothing to check up.

The Master: Of course if you do not care to do it you need not do it. There cannot be any confusion about this. Mr. Hillman has done just exactly what I asked him to do. He has found these things, I do not know whether any of them gives me any light at all, I have not stopped to read them, and I assume that Mr. Hillman has dug up everything that he thinks in any way could have anything to do with what I asked him about. Did you?

The Witness: Yes.

The Master: They won't allow the books to come here I suppose, and the only thing you can do, Mr. Harrison, is to go and look at them, and if there is anything that you want in that is not in, why, have it in. It is just as if I had sent some independent accountant there to ascertain these facts. I do not think that the schedule or the trial balance put in here, from my point of view, was a sufficiently exhaustive investigation. Neither side undertook to go any further. Now, I have gone further on my own motion. Inasmuch as he was the only witness who had been here, he undertook to get this for my information. If they would allow these books to come here they could be brought.

By the Master:

Q. Did you make any application to bring them here?

A. Yes, sir, they will not be allowed to leave the secretary's office unless they are brought here by legal process.

The Master: I do not suppose you would want to subpoena them?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir.

The Master: Your suggestion may be absolutely well founded, that they may not be anything here that will be of any use to me; I have not read a word of it yet. I suggest that we put this on the record, and I will read it and you read it, and if you think there is anything in it that needs examination or that ought to be checked up, of course I would like to have you people check it up. If there is not, it simply goes for nothing. The situation here is that Mr. Hillman has done the best he could to follow my instructions, as I understand it. Is not that it?

The Witness: That is right, yes, sir.

The Master: Now, whether I have got anything by making that effort, of course I do not know. I think we will let this go on and say that the cross-examination as to the memorandum furnished by Mr. Hillman is for the time being suspended, until, if the parties desire, an opportunity may be given to investigate the original sources, and until I may make any examination I want to make. And after you look it over carefully, if you are satisfied it does not shed any light, you may say nothing further about it. Do I make myself clear, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Master: Didn't I make an inquiry at one time about the large items in the James River and Kanawha Canal Company matter involving franchise?

Mr. Hogg: Yes, sir.

The Master: And dock facilities? Have you prepared anything on that?

Mr. Holt: We have nothing, your honor, except what Mr. Anderson said yesterday about the docks.

The Master: That is, there is nothing else that can be developed.

Mr. Holt: It seems that those books are practically destroyed. Some of them are in existence, but it is just a piecemeal business, as I am informed. Do you gentlemen expect to put into the record the market quotations on James River and Kanawha stock?

Mr. Harrison: I think so. I think that is included in our list. We have some market quotations on that.

Mr. Holt: There was one other matter here—

The Master: Before we leave this, Judge, let me see if I fully understand it. Where is the James River and Kanawha exhibit, what page?

Mr. Holt: Mr. Hillman, if you have it, give it to the master.

Mr. Lilly: It is next to the last, about page 60, as well as I remember it.

Mr. Hogg: Have those schedules been printed yet?

The Master: Yes.

Mr. Lilly: I find it is page 38, your honor.

The Master: What I wanted was this, and if further investigation develops that nothing can be ascertained on that line I will have that appear right now. Here is this item of franchises and right of way, $5,588,609.76. I wanted the information, if it was in existence, that would show to me how much of that item was allocated to right of way and how much of it was called franchise. And then in addition to that I wanted the information, if it was obtainable, that would tell me whether that franchise represented an actual expenditure by Virginia or by the Canal Company, or whether it was simply an item of franchise that they were undertaking to value as being something they had received from the State, consisting of the right to construct and build this canal, and they were using it as a basis for capitalization, and with reference to which no actual expenditure had been made. Now, if there is anything in existence that will give me any light on that I would like to have it. But if investigations have been made since I made the inquiry, and the developments are negative, why that simply leaves it just as I find it. You all appreciate the significance of the inquiry, but that is what I want to know. It really comes down to this, whether they were capitalizing the franchises at an arbitrary price put on it by themselves, or whether they were capitalizing it on the actual cash that had been paid out by somebody at some time.

Mr. Anderson: As I understand, the franchise was an intangible right.

The Master: There is nothing to show me that.

Mr. Anderson: The charter is in.

The Master: Even the charter does not show me. Of course I know that this Canal Company cannot exist and operate this canal without a franchise from the State. I suppose under this franchise they have a right to exercise eminent domain. In the first place they have the franchise of being a corporation, and in the second place they have a public franchise which they exercise in the construction of this public utility, which involves the responsibility of a common carrier, and invests them with the right of eminent domain. What I want to find out is when they put in this balance sheet, whether it is simply their valuation of that public franchise, for which they have not paid a copper, possibly, unless they paid something to the state, and that therefore it is an arbitrary sum, or whether that represents the actual expenditure of cash.

Mr. Anderson: I do not think they ever expended a dollar of money. We cannot prove that.

The Master: Of course if the books of the company are accessible, there is not any question but that the proper accountant can demonstrate to me what the fact is in regard to that item. Well, now, if they are not in existence, and if there is no evidence accessible we will simply have to take it as it stands. As it stands it does not show anything one way or the other.

Mr. Anderson: I do not know what the books of the company would show about it at all.

The Master: Of course I make myself clear to counsel on both sides on that item?

Mr. Anderson: Virginia never charged anything for the charter except the charter fee.

The Master: Of course it may be that this whole sum of money was paid out for right of way, and that they simply put in franchises as a description of that phase of their assets. Of course I cannot tell. The point with me is that if there is anything in existence that will render this factor certain I would like to have it.

Mr. Holt: So far as I am able to discover, your honor, there is nothing extant that would throw any light on your inquiry outside of the deed itself. The deed goes into very considerable detail, and you may find it helpful.

The Master: Very well.

Mr. Holt: But beyond that I do not belive there is anything.

The Master: Then that exhausts the whole inquiry. Of course that is simply one of the unfortunate conditions we are up against on account of the expiration of this long period of time. I want the record to show right here that every effort has been made to make that factor certain, and the only thing that either side can get is what may be contained in this deed.

Mr. Lilly: There is something here that might throw some light on it.

The Master: Suppose you look that up, Mr. Attorney-General, during the noon recess.

Mr. Lilly: All right, your honor.

The Master: Have you any other witness?

Mr. Holt: We may straighten it out without calling him. Some question was made the other day about the fact that one of Mr. Hillman's schedules was based upon an examination made by an assistant, of records at Washington and not upon the personal examination made by himself. We have Mr. Bray here this morning who made that examination, and I presume we would be permitted to conclude that his examination was accurate and correct unless the gentlemen want to examine him upon the subject.

The Master: Then the record shows that West Virginia has offered Mr. Bray as a witness for the purpose of establishing the verity of the computations that were made by him and subsequently adopted by Mr. Hillman; and that unless desired by the counsel on the other side they wont' take up the time to formally establish those facts. But they are ready to produce him and subject him to cross-examination.

Mr. Harrison: I understand that Mr. Bray would testify that these were true copies?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

Mr. Anderson: Of what is shown by the books referred to.

The Master: Judge Holt stating that it was his work that was used by Mr. Hillman, and that it was accurately and correctly done. Do you want to cross-examine him?

Mr. Harrison: We say if the witness will testify, as we understand that he will do, that he investigated the reports in Washington and that the copies that he made are true transcripts of the copies that he examined, that may go.

The Master: Relying on the accuracy of Judge Holt's statements with reference to this witness, the counsel for Virginia do not require him to be produced and examined.

Mr. Holt: I have the man coming right here.

Mr. Harrison: No necessity for that.

The Master: It developed in the course of the hearing that some of the original investigation as to another schedule or schedules was made by Mr. Leitch, an assistant of Mr. Hillman, and that Mr. Hillman has utilized the information thus collected by Mr. Leitch. Mr. Holt states that Mr. Leitch accurately transcribed the work that he did, and from which Mr. Hillman testified, and they are ready to produce him this morning as a witness in chief for that purpose and subject him to cross-examination, unless it is satisfactory to Virginia to concede that he would so testify. I state it right, do I?

Mr. Holt: Yes, that is right, except that I want to be absolutely truthful about it. I really have not discussed that with Mr. Leitch. He is right here, and it may be that under the circumstances we had better ask him.

Mr. Harrison: It is a mere question of accuracy of his reports.

The Master: I believe they are correct.

Mr. Harrison: It is simply as to the accuracy of the transcripts of the reports he has made in Washington.

The Master: Under these circumstances, counsel for Virginia do not consider it necessary to require the production of Mr. Leitch, and concede that the information thus acted upon by Mr. Hillman was accurate.

Mr. Harrison: Was accurate in the sense that it was a correct transcript of what he found in Washington.

Mr. Hogg: What he found in the treasurer's office of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac railroad at Richmond.

The Master: Accurately transcribed from the books of the company in the treasurer's office at Richmond.

Mr. Holt: I have just asked the Washington man, and he says they are all O. K.

The Master: I want to call attention to the fact that I have taken the precaution to write to the Supreme Court of the United States for the purpose of ascertaining what the facts were in relation to existing duplicate copies of the original record, and I get this letter from the clerk and I read it here so that we can all have the information and govern ourselves accordingly: "Replying to your letter of the 8th instant in reference to the case of Virginia v. West Virginia, No. 2, Original, October term, 1914, I beg to say that I think there will be no difficulty in supplying the court with the record heretofore made in this case." I intimated that I thought there might be trouble. It turns out that there will not be. I thought that this ought to be stated so that you will be able to make some arrangement in connection with the details on that hypothesis. I thought I had better get the information right from the original source, and then we would know what we are talking about.

Mr. Holt: We desire to read into the record at this point and in connection with an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved February 20th, 1892, Acts of the General Assembly of 1891-92, page 533, the report of the commission appointed at the session 1889-90 to receive proposals for settling the existing unsettled obligations of the State, submitted January 14, 1892, and extending from page 17 to page 36 inclusive, of a pamphlet entitled "Special Message of the Governor of Virginia transmitting report of the commission appointed on the public debt, Richmond, 1892."

(The act of February 20, 1892, has already been printed in this record, beginning on page 695.)

GOVERNOR P. W. M'KINNEY'S SPECIAL MESSAGE.

At a session of the General Assembly of Virginia held in 1892 in the city of Richmond, Governor P. W. McKinney sent the following special message to the said Assembly in reference to the Virginia debt, which said message is reprinted in the Journal of the House of Delegates of Virginia, session 1892.

"In my regular message I made no mention of the settlement of the public debt agreed upon by your commission with the committee representing the bondholders on the 19th of November, 1891. At the time the Legislature assembled, the bondholders had not held their meeting to consider the settlement which had been made with the Virginia commission, and what their action would be was a matter of conjecture. The newspapers asserted that there was serious opposition to the settlement, and that some of the bondholders would endeavor to withdraw their bonds from the possession of the committee and oppose the proposed ratification; and it was reported also, as showing their hostility, that remarks were made by some of the bondholders, more harsh than polite, against the State of Virginia, when the head and front of her offending was that her commission had accepted the proposition of settlement, made by agents of their own selection, not a member of whom was chosen by any suggestion of hers, and were strangers to her and her people. I, therefore, thought it best to reserve for the time being what I had to say on the subject, as well as the report of your commission, until something more definite was received. On the 7th day of January, 1892, I was officially informed that the plan of settlement agreed upon on the 19th of November, 1891, had been approved by the advisory board for the creditors, by the London advisers, and by the bondholders, and I now make haste to submit for your consideration this special message, with the accompanying documents, which contain all the correspondence and the various propositions for settlement, resulting, finally, in the agreement herewith submitted for your ratification.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Since Virginia resumed her position in the Union there has been no question of such grave importance to her people as the just and honorable settlement of her public debt. She has never been forgetful of her former credit, and it has always been the desire of a majority of her citizens to settle upon a fair and honorable basis, all just liabilities held against her, and liquidate the same as speedily as possible, having a proper regard to the ability of her people to pay such reasonable taxes as are necessary for the purpose.

As evidence of these facts, we give a brief summary of her legislation on the subject.

THE FUNDING BILL.

On the 30th of March, 1871, the first session of the General Assembly, after reconstruction, an act was passed to provide for funding and paying the public debt. This unfortunate and remarkable bill was rushed through the Legislature without that consideration which its peculiar provisions and its great importance demanded. It was the origin and the cause of all our subsequent unfortunate legislation on the subject of the public debt. It assumed on the part of the State the payment of $31,393,910.96 of principal, which required annually, the sum of $1,865,450.90 for interest —an amount of principal and a rate of interest which her resources were inadequate to meet, without imposing such enormous taxation that the people in their impoverished condition were unable to bear. It was unjust and inequitable, because it assumed the payment of the whole debt, with accumulated interest during the war, and the years of reconstruction, compounded, less one-third for West Virginia's portion, "she having agreed at the organization of her State government to assume and pay an equitable proportion of the debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia." This settlement did not receive the approval of the people.

THE McCULLOCH BILL.

On the 28th of March, 1879, another act was passed, popularly known as the McCulloch bill, its professed object being to provide a new plan for the settlement of the public debt, by which "the credit of the State might be restored, and the aggregate amount of interest payable reduced within limits which would not be too burdensome to the population." New bonds were proposed, payable in forty years, bearing interest at the rate of three per cent for ten years, four per cent for twenty years, and five per cent for ten years, until the principal was redeemed. The coupons attached to said bonds "were to be receivable for all taxes, debts and demands due the State, and this was to be expressed on their face."

This new proposition was not more favorable to the State than that of 1871, save in the rate of interest. The new bond had the objectionable tax-receivable coupon feature. Under this bill the average annual amount of interest to be paid was $1,249,083.45. Like the other funding bill, it was not approved by the people. It soon became evident that so large a portion of the taxes would be paid in coupons, and not in money; that the government could not be maintained unless there was such an increase in the rate of taxation that the people could not pay it. Several efforts were made to induce the bondholders to retire their tax-receivable coupons and consent to a settlement which would bring the annual amount of interest within the resources of the State, all of which proved abortive.

THE RIDDLEBERGER BILL.

Still desirous of satisfying the creditors, if it could be done without imposing an insufferable burden upon the taxpayers, on the 14th of February, 1882, the Legislature passed what is known as the Riddleberger bill. It restated the public debt, eliminating such items as had been improperly admitted, thereby largely decreasing the principal claimed to be due, and new bonds were ordered to be issued, payable in fifty years, at three per cent interest for the amount of our indebtedness, thus equitably ascertained with non-tax paying coupons attached. This act was approved by the people, but not by the bondholders, after its merits had been elaborately discussed. Those who held the tax-paying coupons of the issues of 1871 and 1879, finding that there would not be sufficient revenue to support the government and pay the interest on the debt, made strenuous efforts to force coupons into the treasury of the State in payment of taxes.

THE SITUATION.

Though the Riddleberger bill was passed ten years ago, the debt is still unsettled, and a disagreeable litigation, distressing to the State and unprofitable to the creditors, has been going on, increasing in bitterness and extent each year. It has sorely vexed our people and consumed our revenues; and the State, like a culprit, has been dragged before the courts of the Commonwealth and the inferior and supreme courts of the United States. She has been subjected to more harsh criticism in the last ten years than in all the past of her history. Her laws have been made the theme of harsh animadversion; her motives impugned; her integrity questioned; her public officers seized and imprisoned for obeying her statutes. Her credit, which had been equal to that of any State in the Union, has been destroyed by a combination of unfortunate circumstances, against which she has contended with a heroic fortitude which has commanded the admiration of the world, and a self-sacrificing devotion to which history has no parallel. Finally, overwhelmed by numbers and resources, her territory dismembered, her towns and cities burned, her homes in ruins, her fields devastated, her sons slain, her property confiscated, her currency worthless, her young men fled from this picture of poverty and desolation and sought employment and homes elsewhere, leaving the state less able to pay the smallest sum ever mentioned as a settlement of her indebtedness than she was to pay the whole debt at the time it was contracted.

In consequence of the harsh action of the creditors, her progress in wealth and population has been impeded; enterprise has been driven away; capital has been afraid to invest—timid always and easily induced to believe that a State that does not pay its own obligations cannot be relied on to enforce the obligations held against her people, and that if she makes laws to protect herself against her creditors she will make them also to protect her people for their creditors. This being the situation, every business has felt its baneful influence, and all the people have suffered for it, and her credit, which today should be as stainless as her honor, has been destroyed by a cruel fate which every loyal son has struggled, but struggled in vain, to avert.

A COMMISSION APPOINTED.

This being her unfortunate situation, on the 5th day of March, 1890, the General Assembly, by a joint resolution, selected a commission, in part from the Senate and in part from the House of Delegates, together with the Lieutenant Governor and the Governor of the State, to receive proposals for funding the debt. The commission was authorized to agree upon the terms of a contract with parties proposing to fund, upon the principles set forth in the act of February 14, 1882, which is the Riddleberger bill, subject to ratification by the General Assembly.

On the 2d of May last I received a letter dated New York, April 28, 1891, and addressed to me in my official capacity, by which I was informed that the bondholders' committee was prepared to submit a proposition for the settlement of the State debt of Virginia, and asking me to name "a very early day," when some of their members might meet us and confer on the subject, etc. After some correspondence, I fixed on Tuesday, the 2d of June, for the proposed meeting, and invited the committee of bondholders, composed of F. P. Olcott, chairman; Hugh R. Garden, William L. Bull, Charles D. Dickey, Jr., Henry Budge and John Gill, to meet the Virginia commission at my office in Richmond, for the purpose referred to in their letter.

The propositions of the bondholders' committee were carefully considered and declined by your commission on the 3d of June—all of which will appear from the report accompanying this message.

THE SECOND CONFERENCE.

In September I received another communication, dated the 11th of August, from the bondholders' committee, making another proposition for the settlement of the debt. I declined at that time to call the committee together, because it was during the political canvass, and I did not deem it prudent to have a conference until the election was over.

By letter, dated the 28th day of October, 1891, the bondholders' committee again requested that the Virginia commission be convened "at as early a day as practicable," not later than the 15th day of November. In compliance with this request, I convened the commission on the 17th of November, the 15th being Sunday. After many conferences and much discussion, on the 19th of November your commission and the committee of the bondholders agreed upon the terms of settlement, which were unanimously approved by the commisson and the committee, as just and honorable to the creditors and the debtor.

OUR AGREEMENT.

The agreement is as follows: "We will recommend a proposition to issue a maximum amount of $19,000,000 of bonds to be exchanged for the outstanding obligations of the State mentioned in the Riddleberger act (other than those held by schools and colleges) now in the hands of the public, but not including bonds already funded under that act, such new bonds to run for one hundred years, and to bear two per cent interest for ten years, and three per cent interest for ninety years. The bonds and interest obligations shall be of the same general character as those provided by the Riddleberger bill; and it is distinctly understood that the coupons or other interest obligations are not to be receivable for taxes. The proposed new bonds shall be exchangeable for the outstanding obligations aforesaid in the proportion of nineteen of the former for twenty-eight of the latter. This recommendation is, of course, to be made conditional on the understanding that your committee hold and has the authority to exchange the obligations mentioned in your previous communication to us, amounting to at least $23,000,000." Which agreement was signed by the entire commission as follows: P. W. McKinney, R. H. Cardwell, H. T. Wickham, J. Hoge Tyler, Taylor Berry, W. D. Dabney and Robert H. Tyler; and attested by its secretary, P. C. Warwick, and transmitted to the bondholders' committee.

On November 19, 1891, we received a reply from the committee of bondholders, in which they say: "That the proposition submitted by us, as amended by you, will go to our constituents with our cheerful recommendation," etc.

THE SETTLEMENT EARNESTLY ENDORSED.

It would transcend the limits of this message for me to give in detail the work of your commission, or elaborately discuss the various phases of the public debt, for which I refer you to the report of the commission; but I cannot submit a question of so much importance to you without declaring that I have given it my best consideration, and earnestly commend it to you as the most favorable proposition for the settlement which has been presented to the Legislature for its approval and ratification. I give below a brief statement of each of the propositions for the settlement which have been approved by the Legislature, and you can readily decide upon the comparative merits of the four propositions.

FIRST FUNDING BILL.

Bonds issued under act of March 30, 1871, to run thirty-four years from July 1, 1871, due July 1, 1905, redeemable at the pleasure of the State after ten years. Rate of interest six per cent per annum, tax-receivable coupon.

Total principle on 1st July, 1871 (if all indebtedness had been funded). $31,393,910.96. requiring annual interest in tax-receivable coupons of $1,865,450.90.

SECOND FUNDING BILL.
(McCULLOCH BILL.)

Bonds issued under Act March 28, 1879, to run forty years from January 1, 1879, due January 1, 1819, redeemable after the expiration of ten years from 1st January, 1879. Rate of interest three per cent for ten years, four per cent for twenty years, and five per cent for ten years. Tax-receivable coupons.

Total principal on 1st January, 1879 (if all the indebtedness had been funded), $31,227,083.64, requiring annual interest in tax-receivable coupons, averaging $1,249,083.35.

THIRD FUNDING BILL (RIDDLEBERGER BILL.)

Bonds issued under act February 14, 1882, to run fifty years from July 1, 1882. Due July 1, 1932. Option of payment after July 1, 1900; rate of interest three per cent per annum; no tax-receivable coupons. Total principal on July 1, 1882 (if all indebtedness had been funded except bonds held by colleges), $21,796,304.30. This is the amount which is claimed to be due by a calculation which is in the preamble of the Riddleberger bill, requiring annual interest on tax-receivable coupons, $653,888.83.

FOURTH—THE OLCOTT SETTLEMENT.

By the settlement, unanimously agreed upon by the commission appointed under joint resolution of March 7, 1890, with the Olcott committee of New York, the bonds are to run one hundred years from July 1, 1891. Due July 1, 1991. Interest two per cent for ten years, and three per cent for ninety years; non-tax-receivable coupons. Principal on 1st July, 1891, of new bonds (if all indebtedness be exchanged), $19,000,000. Principal on 1st July, 1891, of three per cent bonds now in the hands of the public and literary fund, $6,081,242.50. Total principal outstanding 1st July, 1891, $25,081,242.50 (exclusive of bonds held by colleges).

The total annual interest due by the State under the settlement with the "Olcott committee," including interest on Riddleberger three per cent bonds held by the literary fund and in the hands of the public on October 1, 1891, $562,437.27—an annual saving of interest for ten years to the State, over a settlement under the Riddleberger bill, of $91,451.56, which aggregates $914,515.60.

The auditor reports as applicable for the payment of interest on the public debt, from the revenues of the State (including taxes on railroad property), about $490,307.29.

The second auditor reports annual dividends on the stock, etc., of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad Company, $32,748.

Amount of revenue available for payment of interest on the "public debt," $523,053.29; amount annually required to pay interest on the public debt, $562,437.27; amount to be provided for, about $39,383.98, if all the bonds are exchanged at once, which is scarcely probable.

THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.

By an examination of the joint resolution you will observe we were restricted to an agreement based upon the principles of the Riddleberger bill. We do not believe that we have materially transcended our powers. In ascertaining the amount due to the creditors, we have adopted the basis of settlement used in the Riddleberger bill. Ten years having elapsed since its passage, there has been a considerable increase in the debt by way of interest.

We agreed that $19,000,000 should be the maximum amount of new bonds to be issued in exchange for the outstanding obligations of the State, now in the hands of the public, but not including bonds already funded under the act of February 14, 1882. There were on October 1, 1881, $6,081,242.50, of these bonds in the hands of the public and the literary fund, which with the proposed new issue, will make the sum of $25,081,-242.50. On this amount we will be compelled to provide annually for the accruing interest. This appears to be an increase in principal over the settlement of 1882. The consideration of how this principal is to be met is postponed for a hundred years. We do not think it worth while to concern ourselves about the financial condition of Virginia a hundred years from now. We have interposed four generations between us and the payment of this principal. It is sufficient to affirm that unless all of our calculations prove delusive, based as they are on the constant increase of taxable values in the past ten years, the State will be much better able to take care of the principal of the debt than we are to provide for the interest now.

We adopted the form of the Riddleberger bill, as far as it is cable to this contract, with its non-tax-paying coupons. This is a matter of much moment. It relieves us of this device which enabled the coupon holder to intercept the taxes due by the citizen before they reached the treasury of the State. To prevent this, has been a fruitful source of controversy, and the suits arising from this subject have been the cause of forcing the State as a litigant in the State and federal courts. The tax-paying coupon is an imputation upon the good faith of the Commonwealth and a reflection upon her financial integrity, by giving a lien upon her revenues, which is unusual, unnecessary and humiliating. Our people would never ratify a settlement which embraces a bond with this feature attached, however favorable it might be in other respects.

We are to pay two per cent interest for ten years, and after that three per cent for ninety years. Our greatest difficulty will be for the first ten years. Our settlement we are assured will be the cause of bringing population and capital into this State. Each emigrant will help us to bear the burden of taxation, and every dollar's worth of property introduced will contribute its due proportion to our revenues.

WILL WE BE ABLE TO MEET THE INTEREST WITHOUT INCREASING THE RATE OF TAXATION?

I have no doubt of it. See the facts. The report of our auditor shows that in 1880 the amount of property assessed for taxes was $304,663,969; in 1885 it was $347,840, 967; in 1890 it was $380,531,815.

In 1880 the taxable value of our railroads was.....$ 9,876,306 00
In 1885 the taxable value of our railroads was..... 35,955,924 00
In 1890 the taxable value of our railroads was..... 42,500,845 00

With this rate of increase, there is scarcely room for doubt that at our present rate of taxation we will be able to support the government, take care of our charitable institutions and schools and colleges, and our old soldiers, without embarrassment to our finances at present. There will be new sources of revenue; the amount depending upon the prosperity and development of the State, which gives every reasonable assurance that we are not too sanguine in our calculations, and satisfies me of our ability, at the end of ten years, to meet the three per cent rate of interest, and at the end of one hundred years to provide for the principal.

REDUCTION OF EXPENSES.

Upon an examination of my regular message, you will see I have pointed out the way by which our expenses may be reduced thousands of dollars every year. If you will heed my advice, and enforce my suggestions by proper legislation, enough may be saved to meet any increase necessary for the payment of the annual interest upon the public debt. If in these suggestions we are in error, it is a fact about which there is no speculation, that we have money enough now in the treasury to meet any ordinary deficit, if not wasted by injudicious expenditures.

THE OLCOTT SETTLEMENT BETTER FOR THE STATE THAN THE RIDDLEBERGER.

Had all the outstanding debt been funded in Riddleberger bonds in 1882, the time of its passage, except the bonds held by schools and colleges, we would have had to pay annually, $653,888.83, which up to this time would be $5,884,999.47. This would have taken all of our available revenues, and without increasing the taxes, it would have been impossible to have met our necessary expenses. The State has saved in consequence of the bondholders failing to fund under the Riddleberger bill, in interest, $4,594,850.91. This has enabled her to spend $1,885,085.53 in the purchase of $2,357,576.60 of her own bonds, and thereby reducing her debt to that extent. She has also paid one million dollars arrearages due public schools, and $379,000 of interest due the literary fund; $600,000 to her disabled soldiers, and she has spent over a million dollars in enlarging improving, and in the support of her eleemosynary institutions. This indispensable work could not have been done with our present rate of taxation, had the whole debt been funded in 1882. Money which would have been paid to satisfy the interest (the creditors refusing to fund), we have used in part for the purposes above indicated, and have compromised the amount by adding to the principal due in 1882, to be paid a hundred years hence. Now our taxable values have increased to such an extent that we can meet all necessary demands for our revenues. If the government be "economically administered," there is no need for a higher rate of taxation. By the two per cent interest for ten years we will save $91,451.56 each year. With this sum judicially invested, we may be able to so reduce the principal of our debt that when we are compelled to pay the three per cent rate of interest, the annual amount due will be within our present revenues, even though there should be no increase in our taxable values, which is scarcely possible.

When we consider the time of this settlement, and the terms of it, there can be no doubt that it is the most favorable proposition we have ever received. Let us then not be in default, but do everything which is required of us to make good the agreement on our part, by an acceptance of the Olcott settlement, and provide for the liquidation of the amount assumed.

By this settlement we will have accomplished much for Virginia beyond what the figures disclose We have eliminated the public debt from the politics of the State, where it has been a harassing question for many years, dividind the people and embittering party feeling. Besides, it will restore confidence in us, and strengthen our credit, because the business and commercial world will see that in good faith we have done all we could do, and all that we were asked to do, to satisfy our creditors. They have selected their own agents, strangers to us, watchful of their rights and zealously guarding their interests, and after much deliberation and a thorough examination of this delicate and perplexing question, have prepared and proposed a plan for the equitable adjustment of the debt, which has been accepted by your commission on the part of Virginia, "the bondholders' committee cheerfully recommending it (the settlement) to their constituents." It was submitted to their advisory board, men of their choice—such men as Cleveland, Bayard and others of national reputation—their friends, not ours. They approved and recommended the plan of settlement of the "Virginia debt," after having carefully considered the question in all of its complications.

If, then, they have sent to us their agents with their proposition, and we have accepted it, and are prepared to comply with the terms of the settlement on our part, the odium of repudiation does not rest on us, and when charged against Virginia is false and slanderous.

The acceptance on the part of the State of their own proposition, so modified that we will be able to meet the accruing interest without increasing our rate of taxation, will unite all classes of our people, and every man who loves his State and will vindicate her honor, will come now to her assistance and the coupon vendor will find no sale for his depreciated currency among our patroitic taxpayers, and the coupon will become as worthless as the shinplaster of a past generation.

But should I be mistaken in this, and there can yet be found taxpayers who are willing to claim protection of Virginia's laws, and will still endeavor to make her crouch at the feet of these few merciless bondholders, in that event legal remedies (yet untried) will be used against all such persons, which will protect our treasury from an influx of the coupons from the bonds held by those who are unwilling to accept the terms of the settlement which Virginia now offers.

NO INCREASE OF TAXATION.

I will say to the bondholders, who are still hoping for better terms, and will not fund under the proposed law, that this is impossible without increasing the taxes. The people will not, and cannot, submit to an increase of taxation—so say they all. They have said so in the Legislature; they have said this in their conventions, and at all times and everywhere. Our people are united on this subject, without distinction of party. And they declare further that their children shall be educated; that the light of our higher schools and colleges shall not be extinguished. We intend also that our unfortunte insane shall be cared for; our old soldiers and their widows shall not be neglected. These determinations are fixed in the hearts of the people of Virginia, and they will not abandon them. These we consider are our highest obligations, and to them we will be faithful, though a cruel necessity may compel us to be delinquent to others. These declarations are not intended as threats, but are a frank expression of the opinions of the people.

Let us be prepared to carry out, in good faith, the agreement which your commission has made with the agents of the bondholders, and in due time all will be well.

For these reasons, I advise that you pass a resolution ratifying and confirming the agreement entered into by your commission with the Olcott committee for the settlement of the debt of Virginia, and that the agreement be referred to an appropriate committee to prepare a bill to carry it into effect."

Mr. Holt:

I want to ask one gentleman a question, your honor, and I think we will be done when we have that one piece of oral testimony.

The Master: I will take a recess then until 11:30.

WILLIAM D. ORD, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Give the stenographer your full name.

A. William D.Ord.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Ord?

A. Landgraff, West Virginia.

Q. What is your business or occupation?

A. Coal operator.

Q. Are you a member of what is called the West Virginia Debt Commission?

A. I am.

Q. Do you recall when you were appointed by the governor of that State?

A. About the month of April, 1913.

Q. Did that commission organize after that time?

A. It did.

Q. Were you present at the organization?

A. I was not. It is the only meeting of the commission I have not been present at.

Q. You may state whether or not you or that commission had any knowledge of the value or the disposition by Virginia of the securities mentioned in the supplemental answer of the defendant?

A. At that time?

Q. At that time.

A. I did not, and so far as developed in the discussions by the commission no member of the commission did have. The first thing that attracted the attention of the commission were the words in Justice Holmes' opinion of March 6th, 1911, "As it does not appear that there are any stocks of value on hand."

Q. Did you make that the basis of your investigation?

A. That suggested an investigation, yes, sir.

Q. How was that investigation made by your commission?

A. The commission appointed a sub-committee for the purpose of investigating that point.

Q. Who was chairman of the subcommittee?

A. I was the chairman of the subcommittee.

Q. What did you do then, please, upon the subject suggested by this remark in the opinion?

A. We secured accountants from the tax commissioner's office of the State of West Virginia, and sent them here to make such investigation as the limited time would permit. We were being hurried by motions to speed the cause in the Supreme Court, and only got time for more or less hurried examination.

Q. Where did the data come from upon which the supplemental answer was based?

A. It came from these accountants to the subcommittee, and through the subcommittee to the whole committee.

Q. You may state whether or not you discussed about that time, or at any time, with Governor Hatfield of West Virginia, or the Board of Public Works, or any of the State officials, the question of these values, and if you did whether or not they evinced any knowledge upon the subject prior to this investigation.

A. I had several discussions at that time with Governor Hatfield on the matter, one or two with the Board of Public Works.

By the Master:

Q. Was that the Board of Public Works of West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir, the Board of Public Works of West Virginia.

The Witness: And with various other State officials, and I do not remember any of them disclosing any knowledge of those things.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. After this investigation had been made by your subcommittee were any negotiations had with the Virginia Commission looking to a compromise and adjustment of this matter?

A. Yes, we had negotiations with Virginia, commencing in Washington on March 4th, 1914.

Q. You may state whether or not the West Virginia Commission made a proposition to the Virginia commission?

A. The West Virginia Commission did make a proposition to the Virginia Commission.

Q. Was that proposition in writing?

A. It was.

Q. Has a true copy thereof been exhibited with the supplemental answer?

A. It has, on page 47 of the printed supplemental answer, Exhibit A.

Q. Did the Virginia Commission make a response thereto?

A. It did.

Q. Was that response in writing?

A. Yes, sir, it is Exhibit B, on page 63 of the printed supplemental answer.

Q. Was any rejoinder thereto made by the West Virginia Commission?

A. There was. It is found on page 66, marked Exhibit C of the supplemental answer.

Q. That is of the printed supplemental answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You may state whether or not this proposition was made wholly in an effort at compromise, or for any other purpose?

A. Solely as a compromise proposition.

Mr. Holt: The object was simply to prove these exhibits.

The Master: I understand that that was simply a negotiation, and was not therefore binding as a proposition.

Mr. Holt: Exactly.

The Master: It will be so treated.

Mr. Holt: Gentlemen, you may cross-examine.

Mr. Harrison: I do not think we need to cross-examine.

Mr. Holt: Now, your honor, I believe we have reached the point where we can rest, with the understanding, however, as suggested by the master heretofore, that if we have overlooked a schdule or a statute or a fact we may have an opportunity to introduce it.

The Master: With precisely the same effect as if it was introduced now.

Mr. Lilly: I might make one inquiry, and that is with reference to the exhibits that were offered several days since the reference to the settlement of the United States Government. There were two large exhibits showing that in detail, and there was something said with reference to a stipulation or agreement, and I do not know whether the exhibits were really filed or just passed over for examination, and we would like to understand in that regard.

The Master: Does not your record disclose that?

Mr. Lilly: My memory is that they were not filed.

Mr. Hogg: I do not think the record shows that. My recollection is that they were offered and the master stated that they looked a little cumbersome and they should be stipulated in order to save space; but while they were not marked, yet the understanding as I recall it was that they were in unless stipulated out.

The Master: It may be so understood.

Mr. Holt: I suppose that will be satisfactory.

The Master: Yes.

Mr. Hogg: The record shows that.

The Master: With the exception of these schedules relating to dividends and interest on loans submitted by West Virginia showing those matters in detail, I understand those have not been checked up, and I do not know whether you care to check them up, but with the exception of those schedules I understand that no question is raised as to the accuracy of the schedules submitted by West Virginia covering the whole case in so far as they state facts from the records and in so far as they make computations. The conclusions that are sought to be drawn therefrom by West Virginia are not conceded by Virginia, but the accuracy of the figures themselves is conceded

Mr. Harrison: That is my recollection.

The Master: Unless something develops some error in that admission, that cleans up every schedule that West Virginia has thus far put in as a matter of statement of figures and as a matter of computation.

Mr. Holt: I think Mr. Potter concedes them all.

The Master: This takes care of it. As to these schedules in relation to the question of interest, whether you care to go over these or not I do not know, but you can advise me about that later.

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Master: Are you ready to proceed, Mr. Harrison:

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir. I think it has already been understood, has it not, that any evidence or facts that either side may deem pertinent shall be admitted and considered by the master after this hearing has been closed and before the matter is finally submitted to the Master? Is not that the understanding? Did you not indicate yesterday that that would be true?

The Master: Yes. I will make this statement. I expect the parties on either side, so far as is possible, to close the hearing while we are going on now, and put in everything that is within their reach, so that the case in a sense may be considered as closed. Now, then, after that is done, if it develops that either side, when they come to prepare their argument in connection with this case finds that any fact that they deem to be material has been inadvertently omitted, I shall open the case at the time of the argument to give either side an opportunity to prove such fact; and at that time giving the other side, if necessary, time to answer such fact that may be proved by the other side. The purpose of this suggestion is that, while I want everything closed up now, I do not want the counsel to feel that they are absolutely foreclosed. And I want the Supreme Court to know from this record that no inadvertence that may be discovered before this case passes from my hands will fail to be corrected, with a full opportunity, by either party. So that when it finally reaches the Supreme Court they will know that each party has had every possible opportunity to establish their contentions and to prove every fact that they deem to be necessary. Do I cover the ground now?

Mr. Conrad: We know of nothing. But of course after a case is finished, sometimes something occurs to us.

The Master: I thought it wise to make this suggestion. Of course I know how counsel feel. Sometimes you feel a sense of annoyance about something that you have omitted. If that is the case, no harm will be done, because each of you will have an opportunity to put in anything that you may have omitted. Do I make that perfectly clear?

Mr. Lilly: Yes, your honor.

PLAINTIFF'S TESTIMONY

ARTHUR G. POTTER,

called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Mr. Potter, please state your residence and occupation.

A. I live in New York City and I am a certified public accountant by profession.

Q. Mr. Potter, will you please state in a general way your experience as an accountant and the character of work which you have done as such.

A. I became a professional accountant in 1900 and have been following general practice ever since. That includes such matters as financial investigations, audits, advising systems for various lines of business, etc., the general practice in accountancy.

Q. Are you the accountant who had charge of the investigation made in this case which was embodied in the original record?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you prepared a schedule, Mr. Potter, relating to the sinking fund, receipts and disbursements, under Class A?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state what the exhibit shows and hand copies to counsel on the other side and one to the Master.

A. This exhibit is a summary of the transactions of the sinking fund from January 1st, 1861, to December 31st, 1871. It starts with a balance on hand as shown in the record in this case, and there is added thereto the receipts between January 1st, 1861, and June 20th, 1863. Then follow the receipts between June 20th, 1863, down to December 31st, 1871, arriving at a total. That covers receipts. As to the disbursements, they are shown first between January 1st, 1861, and June 20th, 1863, a balance struck, and then between June 20th, 1863, and December 31st, 1871.

By the Master:

Q. And your balance on hand agrees with the statement in the supplemental answer?

A. Both on January 1st, 1861, and June 20th, 1863.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. And that balance is shown on your exhibit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The balance January 1st, 1861, was shown to be $819,250.03. That is correct, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the balance June 20th, 1863, was shown to be $143,195.90; that is correct, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those two items correspond with the exhibit filed by the defendant in this case?

A. They do.

Q. You continue the statement to December 31st, 1871, do you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Showing the total receipts to that date and total disbursements also?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please give the totals as of December 31st, 1871.

A. Total cash on hand December 31st, 1871?

Q. No, not that. I want you to state the total interest paid by Virginia from January 1st, 1861, to December 31st, 1871, on the public debt as it existed on the 1st day of January, 1861, as shown by the record.

A. $7,094,103.61.

Mr. Holt: Your honor, we do not care of course to interrupt the examination, but I suppose it is understood that any objection we may have to a portion of this schedule as being immaterial, I suppose that is understood.

The Master: That is reserved, yes.

Q. Now, you have just stated that the net interest paid by Virginia on January 1st, 1861, to December 31st, 1871, was $7,094,103.61. Was that the net interest paid by the Com nonwealth of Virginia on the debt as it was ascertained by he original record to exist on the 1st day of January, 1861?

A. No, sir, it was the interest paid on the entire debt of he State of Virginia. There were some issues after January st, 1861. This is a transcript of the operations of the sinking und, taken from the sinking fund cash book.

Q. And it shows the payment on the entire debt prior to 861?

A. Yes, sir, and also what was issued after January 1st, 861, the items being inseparable without a great deal of labor, o determine what issues came out after January 1st, 1861.

Q. Now, state what your exhibit shows in respect to bonds issued after 1861, and for what purpose they were issued.

A. The third sheet in this exhibit is a copy of the second auditor's report of December 1st, 1861, table B, page 9, in which is stated the amount of bonds issued under the act of March 2nd, 1866, for interest which had not been paid in cash.

Q. In what amount?

A. $6,576,913.60.

Q. Now, your statement also shows an item of unfunded interest due the 1st of January, 1867, and fundable in bonds under the act approved March 20th, 1861, which you have added to the amount of the bonds, $582,761.79, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Making the total amount of the bonds issued under the act of March 2nd, 1866, to pay interest, and the unfunded interest due January 1st, 1867, $7,159,675.39?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, please give the amount of your totals shown on that third sheet of your exhibit, and what they represent.

A. The $7,094.103.61 is the total interest paid by the State on the unfunded debt and cash as shown on the first and second sheets of this exhibit.

Q. Between what dates?

A. Between January 1st, 1861, and December 31st, 1871. The item of $6,576,913.60 is the amount of the bonds issued under the authority of the act of March 2nd, 1866. It will be observed that I did not add to this the amount of the unfunded interest fundable, which you have just spoken about; the total of these two items is $13,671,017.21, representing the interest paid by the State of Virginia on the unfunded debt in cash and in bonds. I might say as at the 1st of December, 1871, as that is the date of the second auditor's report.

Q. Your pages 1 and 2 of your exhibit show the interest paid in cash from January 1st, 1861, to December 31st, 1871, by the State of Virginia, on the undivided debt, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It goes into these details there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the third page shows the payments made by her in bonds in satisfaction of interest between those two dates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the total cash payments and payments in bonds is also shown on the third sheet?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to have that exhibit marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, September 10th, 1914, C. B.

Mr. Harrison: Will it be proper to identify this in some way as on the rehearing, because in the original records there are original exhibits.

The Master: I think we can go right ahead with Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 in this record. If any reference is made to the other record we will call it the original record, and when we say the record, that means this hearing.

Mr. Hogg: That distinction is made already in the record.

The Master: Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1 refers to this record. If you want to refer to exhibits in the other record refer to the exhibit by number in the original record. I think that explanation will be all right.

Mr. Harrison: Now, we shall want to file, we have not a copy of it this morning, an act of March 2nd, 1866, under which bonds were issued for the purpose of paying interest as shown by the exhibit.

The Master: Then funish the stenographer with the volume and page, etc. and he can insert that in the record, and that is subject to the suggestion that the effect of it may be stipulated and make it unnecessary to publish the whole act.

Mr. Harrison: I think that will be sufficient. We do not want to publish the whole act.

By the Master:

Q. I understand you have no criticism of the following items found on Defendant's Exhibit 1, page 1 of Exhibits, balance State funds $23,985.18; Board of Public Works $5,958.28; Commonwealth fund $252,842.67, which with your balance of $819,250.03 results in an aggegate of $1,102,036.16, I understand you have no criticism of these items?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Harrison: Class B, the testimony which we want to introduce at this time by this witness under this class with relation to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad stock are the market quotations which have not yet come up to us, but we will introduce them later, and I simply mention it and pass on.

By Mr. Harrison:

A. Please insert in the record the market quotations that you have compiled relative to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company, and state the sources from which the quotations have been derived.

Mr. Holt: I would like to inquire at this point, your honor, how far Mr. Potter has covered those market quotations, how far down he came.

Mr. Robinson: I can say that the quotations in respect to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac as well as everything else that we could find, in some cases goes further than others, but the exhibit will be up here very shortly. It covers 1861 and 1863 in this case.

Mr. Holt: Does it come down to the present time?

Mr. Robinson: No.

Mr. Harrison: It relates to the two dates that are under inquiry, 1861 and June 20th, 1863.

Q. Under Class C, Mr. Potter, of the original answer, page 54, proceeds of sales of securities, etc., have you prepared an exhibit on that subject?

A. I have.

Q. Please state first what it shows?

Mr. Lilly: May I ask a question?

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. Have you submitted that or any other exhibits to West Virginia's counsel or accountant, Mr. Potter?

A. We did not have your final exhibit until about noon yesterday. We have had no opportunity to submit anything.

Mr. Lilly: I do not want to be captious or even tending towards biliousness, but we have consistently furnished the gentlemen on the other side with our records, our data, our schedules and everything else; and here we are confronted, after this case has been going on three weeks, with a great array of schedules, not one of which, or any part thereof, has ever been submitted to us. I do not think it is in keeping with our treatment towards them in that regard, or in keeping with the suggestion of the Master.

The Master: All I can say about that is—

Mr. Harrison: Just let me say one word, if your honor please. If my memory serves me correctly our friends never handed us any exhibit until they were handed to us by the witness.

Mr. Lilly: Was it not agreed that you should submit them to us?

Mr. Harrison: We could not get up exhibits until we had your work. We have been working against time to complete these, and really have not finished them yet.

The Master: This is the situation; of course this does not affect the legal rights of either party—I can only say this, it has been incumbent upon the plaintiff to submit to the other side everything in the line of a schedule that they intended to rely upon, as soon as it was prepared. That is as far as I can go. If they have done that they have complied with my instructions, and if they have not done it they have not complied with my instructions.

Mr. Harrison: We have done it as far as we were able to.

The Master: If it turns out that the Virginia people have not submitted these exhibits from time to time, as fast as they have had them completed, to West Virginia, they have not followed my instructions; and if it be true that West Virginia has not done the same thing, they have not followed my instructions.

Mr. Lilly: We have submitted them before we could check them up, even with inaccuracies in them.

Mr. Harrison: The inaccuracies were discovered by the cross-examination.

The Master: We do not need to take time for discussion on this matter. I do not say that it is not proper for Mr. Lilly to call attention to it.

Mr. Anderson: I do not think either side is in default here at all, as I recall the facts. This tentative agreement was made in the preliminary hearing of this case in New York, and it was then understood that West Virginia would furnish to us in advance of the hearing here, as fast as they could prepare them, all of the schedules which they proposed to submit, which they could prepare before the hearing. When we came here, two months had elapsed, and during that time we had not received a single schedule from our friends. When we came here on the first of August we were furnished with a few schedules. Now we could not prepare replies to those schedules until we had them, and we could not prepare them during the hearing, because our expert accountant had to be here during the hearing to understand what was meant by the figures in the schedules submitted by the other side. We are not complaining of them, but we prepared the schedules just as soon as we could after we had the information which enabled us to prepare them. We had to know what their schedules were in order to know what their claims were, and we could not reply to them until after the hearing, because our expert accountant had to be here, as they understand very well, during the whole of the examination. He could not work here and prepare those schedules at the same time.

Mr. Lilly: This schedule refers to Class A that we introduced nearly three weeks ago, and there is not a thing that they did not know then and could not have had up. I do not care to pursue it further. I just want to make that protest.

Mr. Holt: The fact remains that all of our exhibits for 1861 have been in the hands of the opposition for nearly three weeks.

The Master: I am going to make this suggestion. Of course the fact that a schedule has not been furnished by one side to the other does not necessarily affect the integrity of the schedule. My attention is not called to it for that purpose. If it develops that a schedule has been withheld from the other side for a purpose that is ulterior and that affects the integrity of the schedule, that will develop as we go along. It is open to West Virginia to find out on cross-examination when all of these schedules were completed by the accountant, and if they were not submitted to the other side according to the request of the counsel it is up to them to find out why. And if that has weight and significance, they are entitled to the benefit of it. Of course, we do not get anywhere by discussing it further now. I want it understood that as far as I am concerned it does not prejudice either party, so far as the hearing at present stands; and the only significance it can possibly have is the effect it may have upon the integrity of a schedule. Whether it has any or not, that will be a matter for me to say when the facts are developed, if there are facts to be developed.

Mr. Harrison: I never saw the schedules until yesterday myself, and we are not much better off upon our side than the counsel on the other side. I knew what was being prepared, but I never laid my eyes on them until yesterday evening about four o'clock, and then only two of them.

The Master: Of course, without commenting further, I think I appreciate the significance of the situation, and I want to repeat that it is perfectly proper for the Attorney General of West Virginia, if he thinks they have not had the treatment that they ought to have received, to call attention to it. And with the suggestion that I have made, we will go right along.

Q. The question, Mr. Potter, was to explain what that exhibit shows.

The Master: So far as the schedules themselves show just exactly what the witness would say, I suggest whether it would be necessary to go over them in detail.

Mr. Harrison: That is exactly the reason I asked the question in the form I did. I want him to make a general statement of what the exhibit shows, but I do not want to take up the items in detail.

The Master: That was exactly my suggestion.

A. This schedule shows in the first column the amounts claimed by West Virginia under Class C, bringing it to the same total as shown by the revised schedule which I received yesterday for Class C, the Defendant's revised Schedule C. The next column, or the next two columns, show the par and the market of the bonds of the State of Virginia, received by Virginia from these internal improvement companies, issued by Virginia prior to January 1st, 1861, and surrendered by the internal improvement companies in payment of the State's interest to that internal improvement company. They are then extended at the market value, as near as it could be ascertained on the date on which the company surrendered the bonds to the State. The next two columns show the same thing with respect to bonds issued under the Act of 1866. In some of the records of the State these bonds are designated as old and new, the old applying to issued prior to January 1st, 1861, and the new applying to the issue of 1866. Next comes a column in which is the amount of cash received from these same companies, in full or part payment of their debt to the State; following which comes a column in which this cash is reduced to a gold basis. And the column at the extreme right is the total net gold value of the entire recovery by the State of Virginia for her interest in these 19 items under Class C. I must make one qualification in regard to this. The bonds received from the United States Government claim were intended to be entered, but I notice just now that they have been omitted. I would like the privilege of changing the schedule to that extent.

Q. Where would you insert that?

A. On the second page, opposite No. 17, under the value of bonds issued prior to January 1st, 1861, under par, and extended under market at a market quotation as near to the date on which Virginia received the bonds back as is obtainable.

The Master: Do this the first thing in the intermission.

The Witness: Then the schedule is supported by sheets showing the details of these bonds, new and old, and the market quotations and the dates; but those sub-schedules have not yet been finished. This schedule was finished not more than an hour ago. I do not know just how soon the sub-schedules will be in, but they merely amplify the information contained on the top schedule.

Mr. Hogg: To be read in connection with this, I suppose?

The Witness: Yes, sir, that is the intention.

Q. Your first column under the head of claimed by West Virginia as value January 1st, 1861, represents the figures testified to by West Virginia as being the value of those respective items on that date, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: Represents the books value?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, it represents the book value or whatever kind of value. It was sometimes called book, sometimes face, and sometimes other kinds.

The Master: Except as Mr. Hillman may have qualified his statement as the result of his examination, I understand that West Virginia up to date relies practically upon what is known as book value, so far as stocks are concerned.

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Master: And so far as loans are concerned, on face value, so that there will not be any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. Harrison: That column contains the West Virginia figures.

The Master: As finally corrected.

Q. The West Virginia figures in respect to the value of the stocks and the bonds mentioned in that column?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Potter, please state the sources from which you derived the data that you have embraced in this schedule?

A. Par value of the bonds surrendered by these internal improvement companies is the same I believe in almost every instance as used by West Virginia and derived from the same sources. That is also true of the cash. The quotations, the market quotations at which they have been reduced, have been taken from the files of newspapers in the State Library on the floor above us, particularly the Richmond Dispatch. It contains quotations from the New York Exchange, the Baltimore Exchange and the Richmond Exchange. We have used the nearest quotation that we could find to the date on which the internal improvement companies surrendered the State bonds. In a number of instances, the dates were not given with any exactness, and on those dates we applied the dates which appeared in the sinking fund records, the journal of the sinking fund being quite definite in that regard. The rate at which the cash is reduced is a part of the original record, being Plaintiff's Exhibit E-2, on page 647 of the original record, showing the value of Confederate currency in gold from 1861 until 1865.

Q. You have prepared this schedule on the basis of what West Virginia claims as book value; am I right, book value of the respective items in that list?

A. Yes, sir, that is my understanding.

Q. You did not take the par?

A. Par of what, Mr. Harrison?

Q. The par of those items, the par value as shown on the West Virginia exhibit. Take, for example, the Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company. By reference to Defendant's Exhibit No. 3, page 13, I find that stock par value is $874,500, while the book value given January, 1861, is $932,566. Those are the figures that you took?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you do not make this statement on the basis of the par value?

A. No, sir. Those figures are merely put there to identify the item, and the calculations to the right of the first column are not based on any value, either book, par or anything else as of record, but they are based on what Virginia got.

Mr. Holt: It would be book value in the case of stock, and in the case of loan, what we call face value, I suppose.

Q. The calculation is on the basis of what Virginia actually received for the several securities mentioned in the list?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to mark that exhibit Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 3, and file it?

A. I file it so marked.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 3, September 10th, 1914, C. B.

Q. Going back a moment to Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, Mr. Potter, I think I omitted to ask you the sources of your information upon which that exhibit is based and the accuracy of it as well as the accuracy of the last exhibit which is filed.

The Master: You agree with the other side on that. I would not spend any more time on that.

Q. You can state just the sources of your information briefly.

A. The cash book of the sinking fund now in the Second Auditor's office as to the first two pages. There are some extracts or notes on that page which are not shown entirely in that book, but the information is all in the record I believe now in regard to the item on the first page relating to the $443,300. Do you wish me to go into this categorically?

Q. No, I just want you to give a general statement as to the sources of your information so that it may appear.

A. The next regarding the—

The Master: You need not give any more detail about that. There is no disagreement between the two of you on that.

The Witness: The information on the third page is, as indicated, taken from the annual reports of the officers of the State of Virginia for 1871, and is a copy of the Second Auditor's report.

Mr. Lilly: There is no page reference and there is no guide to our accountant by which we can ascertain or check up your data.

The Witness: My impression is that the cash book is not paged. There is only the one and I am sure that your accountant knows all about it.

Mr. Holt: The point is, your exhibit does not give the book or page for showing the source of information, that is it.

The Witness: It does not mention any book, it does not give any page on the first and second pages for the reasons stated.

Mr. Holt: You referred to certain reports. Did you mean printed reports?

Mr. Harrison: The report of the Auditor is on page 3.

The Witness: Printed annual reports.

The Master: The third page gives the source.

Mr. Lilly: We are talking about Exhibit 1, your Honor.

The Master: Yes, the third page states on Exhibit 1, Second Auditor's report of December 1, 1871, Table B, page 9, right on the head of it.

Q. Before leaving Schedule 1, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, Mr. Potter, it might be appropriate to put in there an exhibit or two as it relates to an item in that schedule. I refer to the payment of $886,685 under the caption Virginia & Tennessee Railroad, account of mortgage, $1,000,000. I want to file with your testimony an extract which was read here bearing upon that payment and its repudiation. Have you those extracts with you?

A. No, sir, they have not been copied yet.

Mr. Harrison: I thought they had, or I would not have stopped you. I will have to do that later on.

Mr. Holt: Was it not read into the record the other day, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, I did read it in and intended it to go in as proof, but I understood you gentlemen to object to that method, and say that you wanted it put in with our evidence.

The Master: Have it struck out there and put in here. I think there was a question raised about that, as to whether the evidence would be put in in that way, and I simply said that if it was insisted on it could not be done by way of an answer; but Mr. Harrison did read those extracts into the record. If it is agreed, those extracts may be cut out of the record in that place and inserted here.

Mr. Lilly: But there were questions based on them.

The Master: I think you can cut out the whole examination. My recollection is that the examination was not material.

Mr. Holt: Suppose in order to avoid the cutting out process we treat them as having been introduced.

Mr. Harrison: Just treat them as introduced.

Mr. Lilly: By the plaintiff.

The Master: Yes. Treat them as having been already properly introduced, and that saves repeating them here. Had you completed with this schedule, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, I am through with it.

By The Master:

Q. Mr. Potter, in the column marked par, if I understand it correctly, you have inserted all sums received, and then where they were received in bonds you have carried out the market value of the bonds at the time of their receipt, is that right?

A. Yes, but I think you will find that under that column, prior to 1861, and bonds of 1866, there is nothing else but market. That relates solely to the bonds surrendered, those four columns. There is no cash entered in those columns. The cash is taken up in a separate column just beyond.

Q. Yes, cash received.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So as to be sure I am correct, the first item, Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company, par of $745,341.48, that represents bonds that were received in connection with the payment of that stock and loan, prior to January 1st, 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then in addition to those there was received bonds issued under the Act of 1866, found under the other column par $129,365.83?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those two added together show the total amount of bonds and the class of bonds received in connection with the payment for that stock and that loan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you have figured out the par of those separate issues of bonds in the column indicated?

A. Figured out the market?

Q. Yes, the market.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time of the transaction?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: I get it then.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now, Mr. Potter, I will ask you if you have prepared an exhibit dealing with Class D?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Found on page 53 of the Defendant's supplemental answer?

A. I have.

Q. If so, will you please explain, as you have been doing, what that exhibit shows?

The Master: We are right close to adjournment, and I will suspend here until half-past two.

At this point a recess was taken until 2:30.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. Harrison: I will go back for a moment to Class C.

The Master: I find bound into my Class C the supporting schedules, and as I understand it you want to include those.

Continuation of the direct-examination of

ARTHUR G. POTTER,

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Have you corrected Schedule C, Plaintiff's Exhibit 3, in respect to showing the amount of the bonds held by the State of Virginia, of the United States Government?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the market value of the same?

A. Yes, sir.

By The Master:

Q. And have you made that correction on the copies the other side have?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. And have you extended the totals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you attached the supporting exhibits showing the market quotations of the securities?

A. I have in some of the copies, to the one furnished to the stenographer and the two to West Virginia; and the others will follow as soon as they are finished.

Q. The question was if you had attached them to the exhibit which you now file?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you prepared to introduce Schedule No. 2, the quotations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please explain Exhibit No. 2 briefly and file it with the stenographer and mark it Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2, September 10, 1914, C. B.

The Master: This, Mr. Stenographer, will be inserted in its proper chronological order in the record.

A. This exhibit contains quotations on Virginia State stock or Virginia bonds beginning with 1860, and giving quotations at various dates up to 1887. Following that are quotations on the Farmers' Bank of Virginia, Exchange Bank of Virginia and Bank of Virginia as of the latter part of 1860, and the beginning of the year 1861, and as of 1863, as near June 20th, as it was possible to find them. Following that are quotations on Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company six and eight per cent. bonds and some on the stocks of the Orange & Alexandria. Following this is quotations on the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company, Manassas Gap Railroad Company, Richmond & Danville Railroad Company, Richmond & York River Railroad Company, South Side Railroad Company, Virginia Central Railroad Company, Virginia & Tenessee Railroad Company, James River and Kanawha Company, Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Company, Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company. These are the only quotations we have been able to find in our researches, and we used for the purpose the files of the Richmond Dispatch in the Public Library in this building.

Q. Quoted on the dates set opposite the quotations, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: As I understand it, this exhibit, Mr. Harrison, refers to the quotations you have been able to find relating to any of the subject matters involved in the controversy.

Mr. Harrison: That is what I understand.

The Master: All of which are stated in detail by Mr. Potter?

Mr. Harrison: That is correct.

The Master: And so far as they cover dates, for instance, it is from one date to another date, that all the quotations between those dates—

The Witness: No, not necessarily. For instance, we wanted to use a value of January 21st, and one at June, 1863, and if the quotation happened to be the same on two or three different dates, we would take the nearest date.

Q. In other words, between two given dates, no quotations are left out that would vary the statement?

A. No, sir.

Q. And if none are stated, either none appeared or they are identical with those that are stated?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: That gives me an idea of the effect of it.

The Witness: That is not entirely true of the matter of the Virginia State bonds, because there we got quotations on dates at which internal improvement companies settled with the State, and there might be November, 1860, or thereabouts, and the next one might be June, 1863.

The Master: Yes, exactly.

The Witness: Or 1873, or 1883.

Q. You would not carry all the quotations exactly from 1860 to 1873?

A. No, sir.

Q. But all the quotations that you have undertaken to give, grouped around a certain date are given in full?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Mr. Potter, referring to your Exhibit 3, the supporting exhibit filed with that now, beginning with the heading "Bonds," shows the computations—or you can state what that shows?

A. It shows in more detail than was possible on the top schedule the amount of the bonds and the date received and the market quotations at which the amounts are extended. Following that are several sheets covering cash transactions, giving the date the cash was received, the gold equivalent on that date, and the extension.

Q. Were the market quotations the nearest to the date on which the stocks, etc., were received?

A. Yes, sir.

By The Master:

Q. And you have taken the nearest quotation as the proper quotation for that date?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wherever you have not found a quotation on that date?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Am I right about that?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: Now quotations is Exhibit No. 2, is it?

Mr. Harrison: That is right.

The Master: The detail of quotations is Exhibit No. 2, but on Exhibit 3 he has quotations that are applied to various items.

Mr. Harrison: Applied to items on Exhibit C.

The Master: And those quotations in Exhibit 3 will of course be found duplicated in Exhibit 2.

Mr. Robinson: They are copies from 2.

Mr. Holt: In other words, No. 2 Exhibit, which is devoted exclusively to quotations, embraces everything that is in on the subject of quotations.

The Master: That is the way I understand it. All the quotations that are found on Exhibit 3, Class C, except errors that may have been made in transcription, are identical with the same entries that will be found on Exhibit 2; that is right, is it not?

The Witness: Yes, sir, that is right.

The Master: Of course unless some errors have been made in carrying the account forward. If there should happen to be an error, I suppose we should be safe in relying, probably, on Exhibit 2, because that is devoted entirely to quotations.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Have you corrected the sub-schedule to Exhibit No. 3, in reference to the claim against the United States Government, or have you only corrected the top schedule?

A. Only the top schedule in that case, Mr. Harrison. I did not have time to fix the other one. The sub-schedule would simply show that a certain amount of bonds of old unfunded bonds—

The Master: When you say top schedule, you simply mean this schedule as distinguished from the sub-schedule?

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

Q. What was the date of your quotation, Mr. Potter, on that item? You might as well put it in and correct it.

A. The quotations on fundable Virginia bonds were the same on January 1st, March 12th, and March 15th, in the year 1892, that is 26; and that is the rate I used in reducing the bonds received from the Government.

By The Master:

Q. I thought that was the adjustment made as of 1894.

A. Which was the nearest date that I could find on the Virginia bonds.

Q. Your sub-schedule shows that?

A. It does not now, but I will make it show it.

Q. You will see that it does?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Robinson: The record shows it right here anyway; that is the point.

The Master: Exactly.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now, I will take up the exhibit with reference to Class D. Will you please state as you have been doing what that exhibit shows?

A. It shows the net cash equivalent received by the State of Virginia for the income, interest and dividends which had accrued prior to January 1st, 1861, and was received by the State after January 1st, 1861, from internal improvement companies as shown in Defendant's Class D.

Q. Class D in the supplemental answer related to interest on loans and dividends on stock accrued prior to January 1st, 1861, upon common investments and collected by the State of Virginia after January 1st, 1861, and your exhibit relating to that class shows the scale value, does it not, of those receipts?

A. Yes, sir.

By The Master:

Q. It reduces the items mentioned in Class D to a gold basis as of the dates of their receipt, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the effect of your Exhibit No. 4?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Will you file that exhibit and mark it Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 4?

A. Yes, sir.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 4, September 10th, 1914, C. B.

By The Master:

Q. With that exception the schedule agrees with the schedule on the same subject already introduced by the defendant, as I understand it?

A. It deals with the same figures.

Q. The same items?

A. The same items and merely reduces them to the gold basis.

Q. The only discrepancy there would be between your schedule, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 4, and the schedule of the defendants relating to the same class would be the difference resulting from a reduction of the items as of the dates of their payment to a gold basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The principal sum remains the same?

A. The principal sum remains the same.

The Master: Now, we come to Class E.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now, in respect to Class E, Mr. Potter, please state whether or not any exhibit that you have filed deals with the values of the bank stocks set forth in Class E?

A. Yes, sir, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2.

Q. By giving the market quotations?

A. By giving the market quotations, yes, sir.

By The Master:

Q. Do the items in Exhibit 2 which deal with these six items in Class E differ in any way from the same items presented by the schedules of the defendant except in a reduction of the items to a gold basis upon their respective dates?

A. No.

Q. The principal sum remains the same?

A. I don't quite get the question.

Mr. Robinson: He has not given any computations. The summaries on that are not ready yet; they are being worked on.

The Master: What you propose is a little later to file in concrete shape a schedule under this class, but the data will be drawn from Exhibit No. 2, but for convenience it will be put into concrete shape under Class E?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Master: I get your point.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Which of those bank stocks do the quotations relate to?

A. Farmers' Bank of Virginia, Exchange Bank and Bank of Virginia.

Q. You found no quotations as to the Bank of the Valley?

A. No, sir, no quotations as to the Bank of the Valley.

Q. Did you examine for quotations as to the Northwestern Bank and Fairmount Bank?

A. We did not make any search for those banks.

The Master: Those are evidently a little different class from the others. By the way, right there, I do not remember just now whether the schedule of West Virginia differs very much from my finding in the report. The amount stated in the answer here as far as the Fairmount Bank is concerned is identical with the finding in my report, and so far as, I think, the Northwestern Bank was rendered subject to adjustment by reason of the fact as I understood somebody to say, that there was a branch somewhere in Virginia, but I have not seen any evidence in the case relative to that. You want to bear that in mind, that that is a factor to be considered. Something must be put in the record so I will know something about it. As I understand, the suggestion is that the whole of the Northwestern Bank should not be charged in the last analysis to West Virginia by reason of the fact that one of its branches was then and continued to remain in the State of Virginia. I think all there is in this record that tends to show that is the statement of Professor Hogg that that was the fact. That of course is not evidence, and if you want that fact to appear, somebody must see that it gets into the record so if it is entitled to consideration it will receive it. I call your attention to the fact, because you may have omitted that. My recollection is very distinct that there is not a word in this record so far as the testimony goes that tends to establish that fact, if it is a fact.

Mr. Robinson: You will find it in the original record.

The Master: Of course I do not carry that original record in my head.

Mr. Lilly: I suppose Virginia charges us with whatever we got out of the Northwestern Bank. It is not in the record yet that we got anything except possibly by an Act.

The Master: I think the original record establishes more or less facts on that ground. It would not be safe in any event to rest on that, because when we get through they may call your attention to facts in the original record which tend to establish a different proposition. I simply call attention to this now so that if either side rely upon the fact that there was a branch in Virginia which should minimize the amount to be charged to West Virginia, whoever relies upon that proposition had better see that it gets into the record. It may be in the original record. All I can say about that is that I have not got the slightest recollection about it.

Mr. Hogg: All of the branch banks, both of the Farmers' Bank and the Northwestern Bank, appear in Plaintiff's general Exhibit No. 1. The branches that were established appear in Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1 in the original record.

Mr. Holt: It is conceded to be a supplemental exhibit if it is already in the record, and there is evidence enough in the record to show the value of the branch in Virginia, and there is no controversy but that it remained in Virginia. I guess neither side have any care about it.

The Master: I would like to have you look into that.

Mr. Hogg: We will do that in conjunction with the Master's report.

The Master: I would not want an error made on that as a result of some inadvertence. Subject to that, I was going to inquire whether there was any serious controversy about the value I found in the other report. I think I found that the value of the Fairmount Bank is $51,200, and what I thought was that if these two items were practically agreed upon we could eliminate them.

Mr. Anderson: As to the Jeffersonville Bank, the facts as to that cannot increase the charge against Virginia, because they were like all the other banks that went up in the war.

The Master: Well, this is not a charge against Virginia, this is a charge against West Virginia.

Mr. Anderson: It will be—

The Master: I will suspend any further discussion about that until you have an opportunity to ascertain about this branch bank, and when we get to that, why, if you can agree upon the value of those two banks, that eliminates so much from my consideration, that is all. We won't bother with it any further now.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You say your Exhibit 2 does not show any quotations for the Bank of the Valley?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you fail to find any quotations on that bank?

A. Yes, sir, I found no quotations for that bank.

The Master: Where was that located?

Mr. Anderson: Winchester.

Mr. Robinson: Staunton, was it not?

Mr. Anderson: And Staunton, too, I think. There were probably several branches of it.

Q. Now, Mr. Potter, taking up Class F of the supplemental answer, which embraces, as you will observe, some classes of stock beginning with the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company, and loans, etc., have you any exhibits relating to that, and if not, will you have one? Do you show the quotations, or have you shown the quotations?

A. The quotations are shown in this Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2 for Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company stock and bonds, for some of the dates; and South Side Railroad bonds are given, but we found no quotations on the stock.

Q. Virginia & Kentucky Railroad Company stock?

A. We found no quotations on Virginia & Kentucky Railroad Company stock.

Q. Did you find any on Norfolk & Petersburg Railroad Company stock?

A. No, sir, I found nothing on the Norfolk & Petersburg stock.

Q. Have you before you a copy of the mortgage deed by which the State of Virginia was secured to the extent of $4,000,000 against the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio Railway Company, the assignee of those stocks and loans?

A. I have such a copy, yes, sir.

The Master: That is the second mortgage that has been re-referred to?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, that is the second mortgage. And I thought it would be well to file a copy of that.

The Witness: I have not got it ready for filing.

Mr. Harrison: We will file that, marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 5.

Mr. Holt: I suppose it can be copied afterwards.

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

Mr. Holt: May I ask a question right there?

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Where do you get that, Mr. Potter, that mortgage?

A. From a manuscript copy on file in the office of the Corporation Commission, in the box there.

Q. It is one of their records, is it?

A. One of their very choice records; they would not let me take it out of the office.

Mr. Holt: I suppose none of us makes any question about those things.

The Master: Is it not a matter of record?

The Witness: I do not find it printed anywhere, it may be.

The Master: Is it not recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds?

Mr. Harrison: I suppose so.

Mr. Holt: I suppose on most of these things it is understood that the objections of both sides go to the materiality, rather than to the form.

The Master: Exactly.

Mr. Holt: Under those circumstances, we simply object to the materiality and not to the form of his evidence.

The Master: Of course, as a matter of legal evidence, this copy would not be admissible, but that point is not raised.

Mr. Harrison: If necessary, I can send for the original.

Mr. Holt: We do not want you to do that.

The Master: It is understood that you offer the original. But let us see if we have the exhibit number right. The last exhibit here is number 4. Class E will be No. 5.

Mr. Harrison: There has been an Act filed, the Act of February, 1866, under which certain bonds were issued to take up interest, a short Act. We may not file that. I think just a reference will be regarded as sufficient.

The Master: This will have to be the case in connection with that; you file that deed, and if you can stipulate among yourselves that a statement of its effect will take the place of the record, the deed will be eliminated from the record and the statement will go in its place. Now, then, the same thing will apply to this mortgage. Of course if this mortgage is made a part of this record it will have to go up with the record unless between you, you make some arrangement to put upon the record what you agree is the substance of this mortgage. Otherwise, the whole mortgage would have to go in.

Mr. Holt: Well, that gives them the benefit of it, whether anything is ever done with it or not. I fear that there will be so much left to stipulation, and the time is so short, that we won't have time to get together and arrange the matter.

The Master: I am going to make a suggestion about that later on.

Mr. Robinson: You said "deed"; you meant "act."

The Master: I remember now, Mr. Potter said the Act was very short. We had better have an exhibit as to Class E, and that will have a number in the exhibits. I want to keep this chronological order regular. Class E, will be Exhibit 5, and the schedule for Class F, which is in process of preparation, as I understand, Mr. Harrison—

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

The Master: The schedule for Class F will be Exhibit 6, and this mortgage—

(At this point Mr. Robinson made a statement which he requested should not be made part of the record.)

The Master: I want to be sure that we get into this record all of this material in its chronological order, and by that I mean that the classes must appear one after the other. As far as I am concerned I would be very glad to have you consolidate F and G, or any other two.

Mr. Robinson: They will all be consolidated, A, B, C, D, E, F, and G.

The Master: That would take care of Classes E, F and G, which would complete the classes, and that would be your exhibits, as the case may be.

Mr. Robinson: It won't be, but it will be an exhibit.

The Master: That will maintain the chronological order all right; you will have the individual exhibits for the individual classes, and then you will have these three all grouped in one. When will that summarized schedule be ready?

Mr. Robinson: I hope to-morrow morning; they have been working on it to-day.

The Master: Now about this mortgage, the understanding is that the mortgage is in, and unless between the parties there is some stipulation that can take its place upon the record and that will correctly and succinctly state what Virginia desires and what West Virginia may also want by way of explanation, the whole mortgage would probably have to be printed in the record.

Mr. Robinson: The Act will be marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 5, and the Deed of Trust will be marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 6.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now, Class G of the supplemental answer, which contains a list of securities said to have been subsequently given away, have you any quotations of the James River and Kanawha Company stock, which heads the list of those?

The Master: I want to make this suggestion before you begin that. As to Class G and the schedule appearing there, I understand that the defendants have struck out everything except the first two items, and no longer claim anything on account of the balance. So that that carries down to those two items. I am correct about that, am I not?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

Q. Now, we take up this James River and Kanawha Company item under Class G. Have you any quotations of the James River stock, Mr. Potter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As of what dates?

A. November and December, 1860.

Q. Where are they found?

A. In the Richmond Dispatch.

By The Master:

Q. In your Exhibit 2?

A. Yes, sir, I beg your pardon, in Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Those quotations are contained in your Exhibit No. 2?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. And were obtained from the Richmond Dispatch?

A. Yes, sir, 1860, 1861 and 1863, certain dates.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Well, what was the quotation of the James River stock as shown on your exhibit at the nearest date to June 20th, 1863?

A. On June 16th it was 22, and on June 27th it was the same. I found no intervening quotation.

Q. Well, now, about the Manassas Gap Railroad; did you find any quotations on that, Mr. Potter?

A. I found no quotations on the stock, but the bonds were quoted in November, 1860, and April and November, 1863.

Q. Are those quotations shown on your Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the quotations of those bonds?

A. The six per cent. bonds on November 2nd, there was no bid—

Q. What year?

A. 1860.

Q. What was it?

A. 65 asked, no bid. And that ran through November 9th, 16th, 23rd and 30th. On April 8th, 1863, there was bid 58, no quotation, nothing asked. On November 20th, 1863, 150 bid. I found no quotation between November 20th, 1863, and April 8th, 1863.

By The Master:

Q. Where was that quotation found?

A. Richmond Dispatch.

Q. Did it indicate it was on the Richmond Exchange?

A. Yes, sir, it so states in my Exhibit No. 2. The exchange is quoted here in every instance; or it was my intention to have it in—some Baltimore Exchange quotations and some New York Exchange quotations.

Mr. Harrison: Now, we have not the summaries yet ready, which have already been referred to. They are being prepared, and if we get them this afternoon we will put them in. I now offer an exhibit which you can mark Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 9, which is a statement of the interest due to October 1st, 1914, upon West Virginia's share of the debt of the undivided State of Virginia unpaid and outstanding January 1st, 1861. I will say by way of explanation to our friends on the other side that this computation has been filed on one or two occasions with the briefs of counsel, but has not heretofore been introduced into the record, and I will ask Mr. Potter to say whether he made those computations and to file it as requested.

The Witness: I made the computations, yes, sir, and the stenographer has a copy.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You file it as requested?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the computations correct, Mr. Potter?

A. Yes, sir.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 9, September 10th, 1914, C. B.

Q. Now, Mr. Potter, I will ask you a question, and it will apply to all—perhaps I have asked it with reference to each—but are the exhibits which you have filed taken from the records of the State of Virginia, and are they accurately transcribed, and the computations accurate in each instance?

A. If you consider the files of newspapers as part of the records of the State of Virginia I would say yes to all of them, and the calculations are properly made to the best of my knowledge and belief. I have checked most of them personally. I believe that they are all absolutely right.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now, let me ask right there, Mr. Potter, you mean by the records of Virginia, do you, the newspapers that are on file in the Library giving market quotations, and some original records and some printed reports?

A. Yes, sir, the same documents that were used by Mr. Hillman throughout.

Mr. Holt: I take it that the newspaper is a record of Virginia so far as that is concerned.

The Master: The facts are stated, and it goes for what it is worth.

Mr. Anderson: It is not the record of the State, but it is the evidence of contemporaneous history.

Mr. Harrison: We will have, as has already been stated, some additional exhibits. One other exhibit which he has not completed is computations of the interest from December, 1871, down to date on what are known as college bonds; that is to say, bonds held by the educational institutions upon which Virginia has paid six per cent. interest continuously. Mr. Potter's exhibit goes as far as 1871. We are having that computation made on those bonds because she has paid the entire interest on them, and they were never funded down to date, and is doing so to-day, and they constituted a part of the original debt. They are included in the exhibit that he has made down to 1871, but these particular bonds which were never funded, and upon which the State has continued to pay six per cent,, we want an exhibit to show them.

The Master: That is a computation you are having made?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir. And we are having one further exhibit made showing the entire amount of the debt that Virginia has paid since January 1st, 1871, with the interest added to it on account of the ante-bellum debt, the debt of the undivided state, and as her share of it, that she has paid, that she has attempted to pay and has paid; that is altogether on account of her share.

Mr. Anderson: I have shown our friends on the other side a deed from Leland, a commissioner appointed by the Circuit Court of the City of Richmond in the foreclosure suit instituted in 1883, in which all the property of the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company was sold. The Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company, your Honor will remember, as has been testified in the last day, was the successor of the James River and Kanawha Company; it purchased the property of the James River and Kanawha Company, and upon its towpath built a railroad and completed it sufficiently for operation in November, 1880. In 1883 foreclosure proceedings were instituted, the record of which I have here, the whole case to foreclose the mortgages executed by that company, one for $5,000,000 and one for $4,000,000, the proceeds of which were expended in the building of the road, the completion of the road and its equipment, and on the decree of the court in that case, that consolidated case, the road was sold by the commissioner and was purchased by a committee for $5,000,000. I do not care to encumber this record with all the proceedings of that suit, but all the substantial facts in regard to it are recited in detail in this deed from the Commissioner of the Circuit Court of the City of Richmond to this purchasing committee, conveying the property to it, and I would like to have our friends on the other side agree to a stipulation that the facts recited in that deed are in accordance with the proceedings of the court and the decree recited. It will save trouble and a good deal of expense.

Mr. Holt: That sale was confirmed, was it, General?

Mr. Anderson: As I remember, the deed was also submitted to the court and confirmed.

Mr. Holt: What was the date of the deed from the James River and Kanawha to the Richmond & Alleghany?

The Master: I think it was 1880.

Mr. Anderson: That must have been 1879 or 1880.

The Master: 1880, I think.

Mr. Holt: Now, here is a deed dated the 20th of May, 1889, from Leland, Special Commissioner, to a purchasing committee, conveying the property of the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad as a result of a foreclosure suit. In other words, after they received their deed for this property from the James River and Kanawha Company they went on and built their road and executed a mortgage upon the road, and it was subsequently sold under that mortgage in 1889, the deed evidencing the conveyance springing out of that sale. The deed recites the history of the situation.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, it recites the salient facts of record, the suit, the decrees and all.

Mr. Holt: My suggestion is that you prepare such a stipulation embodying that.

Mr. Anderson: I will.

Mr. Holt: Then I think we can sign it.

The Master: The deed is introduced and marked and it is understood that it is to be printed in the record, subject to a stipulation between the counsel, which may eliminate the necessity of its being printed. That covers your ground?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir. The deed includes certain facts that we do not ask any stipulation about, but the recitals of the deed we would like to have, that are sustained by the record.

The Master: You can probably arrange a stipulation that can take care of it.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Potter, to read into the record two extracts, one from the journal entry and one from the Auditor's report, giving the dates in each instance, relating to the subsequent history after the war of the several banks of circulation that we are concerned with that are set up in Class E of the defendant's answer.

A. I find in the printed annual report of the State of Virginia for 1866, the following extract, which is a part of the annual report of the Auditor of Public Accounts for the fiscal year ending September 30th, 1866—

Mr. Holt: Those reports were printed by the State of Virginia?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: Suppose you let that go into the record for the benefit of both of us, that these printed reports were published by the State of Virginia.

Mr. Harrison: That is my understanding; I understand they were, certainly, yes.

A. (Continuing) This extract is taken from page 12 of this report referred to, and is as follows, in 1860—

Mr. Harrison: All you want the record to show is that they were official reports?

Mr. Holt: That is all.

The Master: Either printed by or under the authority of the State of Virginia.

Mr. Holt: Let it go right into the record, please.

A. (Continuing) "In 1860 there were 66 banks and branches in the state with a capital of $15,520,550 and a circulation of $12,000,000. Of these, 20 were located in West Virginia with a capital of $3,468,800. The residue, 46, were in this state with a capital of $11,631,900. The amount of dividends and bonus paid into the treasury by these banks in 1860 was $368,853.43. Such of them as are located in this state have been ruined by circumstances over which they had no control. Their stocks are worthless and their circulation selling in your streets at from 10 to 30 cents on the dollar. The state own of the stock of these banks, estimating the value per share at par, $3,760,020." Further extract is found further on in the—

Mr. Holt: What was the statement there about their circulation selling for 10 cents on the dollar.

The Witness: "Their stocks, etc., are worthless and their circulation selling in your streets at from 10 to 30 cents on the dollar."

Mr. Holt: What is the difference between circulation and the stocks, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Circulation is notes, notes issued by the bank.

Mr. Holt: In other words, that is a statement that the stock is of no account at all and the circulation is 10 cents on the dollar?

The Master: The banks' notes were only worth 10 to 30 cents on the dollar.

A. (Continuing) "State securities were selling in 1860 at par or at a price very nearly approximating it. They are selling now at only 40 cents on the dollar. Thus 60 per cent. of the value of your stocks and bonds, held principally by your own citizens, have been destroyed by the fortunies of war."

Q. Now read the other entry.

A. The other entry referred to is a journal entry found in Journal D, I have not the page before me, but the date is September 30th, 1872. By this journal entry the accounts carrying the cost of the bank stock held by the Board of Public Works were closed, the entry reading as follows: "To balance latter accounts, some having been lost at the close of the war in 1865."

Mr. Holt: What journal entry is that?

The Witness: That is in the Internal Improvement journal.

Mr. Holt: What office?

The Witness: In the Second Auditor's office, Internal Improvement Fund, Journal D, September 30th, 1872.

Mr. Harrison: Now, on that point I would like to inquire, Judge, whether it will be agreeable to you gentlemen to enter into the stipulation that was handed to you yesterday, before we shall proceed further with testimony on this line.

Mr. Holt: We will give you an answer on that in the morning, and so far as we are concerned I think we will probably say yes. The only difficulty in my mind was this, that the Master seemed to think he would prefer something more.

Mr. Harrison: The only thing we are concerned with is the stock and this Auditor's report. This report that we found showed that even the notes of the bank had no value.

Mr. Holt: As I understand, it amounts to this, that through the fortunes of war by 1865 or 1866 the stocks owned by the State of Virginia in these various banks had become worthless.

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

Mr. Holt: We will see what we can do in the morning.

The Master: My suggestion was this, that the mere fact the stock became worthless was not necessarily a full demonstration of the financial condition of the banks. Of course, if this statement, if it is evidence, that the circulation was selling on the street from 10 to 30 cents on the dollar, why that has some tendency to go further, and if it is true, which up to date I have not seen proved in this case, that the circulation was a prior charge upon the assets and preceded liability to the depositors, that of course is another salient fact; but these things have all been suggested here this afternoon, and the case was entirely barren of them until now. What I think would be more satisfactory, if there are decrees of court liquidating these various banks, would be a concrete statement of exactly what those decrees show. If this testimony is of any value at all, it would be very much more satisfactory to me than these general statements, and so far as I am concerned, if it is relied upon by either side and the decrees are available, I would like to have stated in this record a concise summary of just what those decrees show. It can be done in a paragraph in the case of each bank.

Mr. Harrison: I think the difficulty is that the decrees which you speak of are really not available.

The Master: That is another thing.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Conrad did suggest that some litigation had been had over two or three of them in the Federal Courts in Richmond. We examined there yesterday and conferred with the clerk about it and could not find it. As far as he could see, he could not find any record of the proceedings in the Federal Court over 50 years ago relating to any of those banks at all. He did not know where the papers had gone or whether he had overlooked it in tracing it down, but he could not find it.

Mr. Anderson: That clerk's office has been moved once or twice.

The Master: Would they be naturally wound up in the Federal Court?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir, they were.

The Master: It seems to me if they were State banks, unless they had foreign creditors—

Mr. Harrison: Litigation arose over them in the State courts; that is, individual suits where somebody who owed the bank would be sued.

The Master: My suggestion is this, isn't it true that when you come to the liquidation of a state institution, the state tribunal is the tribunal that would liquidate it?

Mr. Harrison: I will have some further evidence on that.

The Master: I was given to understand that these decrees were in existence. If they are not in existence, that is of course another thing.

Mr. Harrison: They may be perhaps; They must be in some repository somewhere, but it would take a good deal of time to hunt around and find them.

Mr. Holt: Won't it be true that you will find the individual suits, against individuals, I mean, where they undertook to offset notes of the bank, were in the Federal court, and that the liquidating suit was in the State court?

The Master: But that does not necessarily determine the condition of the bank, a suit between individuals.

Mr. Holt: That is the reason, I mean, why they cannot find any decrees or litigation in the Federal Court.

The Master: It seems to me a little incongruous that you should have a decree liquidating a State bank found in the Federal Court.

Mr. Anderson: The suits must have been brought by non-residents, that is all.

The Master: Even then, of course, I have not examined it, but it strikes me as incongruous. Suppose you have the records in your State courts run down. It cannot be a great job, because the clerk's index of the various actions during the period of ten years will show it.

Mr. Anderson: My recollection is perfectly distinct, it was just after the war, that such suits were pending in the Federal courts here.

The Master: What I would like is this. Of course I cannot anticipate in advance what weight may be given to this or what weight I might feel like giving to it; but when I come to think it over, I would like to have all of the available facts that are in existence that tend to demonstrate the financial condition of those banks as near to 1861 and 1863 as is feasible. I do not know what weight I may give it; I may not give it any, so far as that goes. Of course there are a good many complications that are involved in this case, and of course the counsel will go into that on their argument. It is possible that I may decide that this evidence is entitled to weight; now if it is, I want all the evidence there is on the point.

Mr. Harrison: I do not know whether I will be able or not, or any of us will be able, to find the decrees. I would not really know what court to go to, to look for them.

The Master: Of course you will do the best you can; that is all.

Mr. Harrison: I will put into the record something that bears on the question. I want to put into the record the Act of February 12th, 1866. That Act required the banks of the Commonwealth to go into liquidation. The object that the Legislature had in mind was to take care as far as possible of the interest of the parties interested, by prescribing a method for going into liquidation at once; they were staggering along, and it required them to go into liquidation, and they made assignments immediately, and I think assignments are dated the same date, of two of the banks, that the Act is dated. I will put that Act in. Now several suits originated, and there were various questions that arose naturally in a complicated state of affairs such as were involved in those banks, and the case went to the Court of Appeals in the two suits, Exchange Bank of Virginia, for Camp, Trustee, against Knox; and Farmers' Bank of Virginia, for Goddin, etc., against Anderson & Company. The two suits were heard together, as they involved the same questions, and the Act of the Legislature was construed that required them to go into liquidation, and the real object of those suits, the question involved was the right of a debtor of the bank to offset the bank's circulation against his liability to the bank. The debtor owed the bank. The receivers of the bank sued the debtor. He tendered as an offset the notes of the bank. And in discussing those questions—and that was refused, he did not succeed—the court said:

"The sole question, therefore, presented in these two records is, whether or not, these depreciated bank notes thus acquired, can be set off against the demands of the plaintiffs, suing for the use of the trustees of the creditors of the banks. It is to this question that I shall confine my opinion."

The Master: You mean the deed of trust, which was the beginning of the liquidation proceedings?

Mr. Harrison: That is right, it began with a deed of assignment to the trustees. The court further said:

"The close of the late civil war found all the banks of circulation in the State in a condition of hopeless insolvency. They were compelled to suspend business, and there was scarcely a remote possibility of a resumption. In this state of things, forced upon them by the calamities of war, nothing remained for them but to go at once into a course of liquidation, and to distribute among their creditors such remnants of their assets as might yet be realized.

"In this condition of things, and to effectuate this object upon equitable terms, the general assembly passed the act of the 12th of February, 1866, entitled an act requiring the banks of the Commonwealth to go into liquidation.

"The purpose of that act was to provide regulations, by which, as recited in the preamble, 'a speedy settlement of the affairs of said banks should be made, in order to a legal and proper distribution of their assets amongst all persons entitled to share in such distribution.'"

The court decided there that the debtor of the bank that acquired the notes of a bank after assignment for the purpose of liquidation could not offset them against his liability to the bank.

The Master: That is what volume?

Mr. Harrison: That in Volume XIX of Grattan's Reports, page 739.

The same question arose two or three years later in the case of the Bank of the Valley. The trustees under the general deed of assignment made by the Bank of the Valley sued a debtor of the bank, and that debtor sought to offset against that liability notes of the bank which he had acquired after the date of the assignment. And there the same questions arose, and the court said:

"The act of the general assembly, passed February 12th, 1866, requiring the banks of the Commonwealth to go into liquidation, was the subject of judicial construction and interpretation by this court in the case of 'Exchange Bank v. Knox,' and 'Farmers' Bank v. Anderson,' 19th Gratt., 739; which cases were afterwards reaffirmed in 'Saunders v. White,' 20 Gratt., 327. By these decisions it was held—

"1. That the act forbids and prevents all preferences among the creditors of the bank.

"2. That a debtor of the bank cannot set off notes of the bank bought up by the debtor after the execution and recording of the deed and notice thereof to the debtor.

"3. The banks being utterly insolvent, the trustees are the trustees of the creditors, not of the banks, and are purchasers and assignees for value of all the property and effects of the banks for the benefit of the creditors.

"4. Though the charters of the banks require them to take these notes in payment of debts due to them, this does not authorize debtors of the bank to pay their debts in the notes of the bank, bought up after the execution and recording of the deeds conveying their assets to trustees for the benefit of their creditors, because the debts are no longer due to the bank, but to the creditors of the bank.

"These principles must govern the case now before us."

The court goes on, and in the body of the opinion it appears that there had been litigation in the Federal Court here in Richmond, and it seems that the Virginia Court of Appeals did not follow the ruling of Judge Underwood, who had ruled that they could offset those notes against the debts due to the bank.

"At that term the defendant tendered a plea in the following words: 'The defendant for further plea states, that pursuant to a decree and order of the Circuit Court of the United States, made in the cause of the Merchants Bank of Baltimore v. The Bank of the Valley of Va. et al., in which case the said Fant was appointed receiver, dated day of September, 1869, herewith exhibited, he, the said defendant Marshall, did heretofore, to wit, on the day of , 1870, offer to pay the whole sum with interest and costs claimed in the plaintiff's declaration in circulating notes (commonly called bank notes) issued theretofore, and put in circulation by the said nominal plaintiff to the said Fant as receiver; which offer was by said Fant refused, saying that he would not receive said circulation; and said defendant brings said money in court with this plea, and has already filed the same with his plea of set-off. Wherefore he says, that he has fully tendered the whole sum claimed by the plaintiff in a currency which he was bound by said decree to take in payment; and this he is ready to verify,' &c., &c."

Showing that the Federal Court here had authorized that to be done. I do not care to go on and read this, except it says this:

"Conceding that the order of Judge Underwood was imperative on his receiver, yet when the judgment of the Circuit Court of Frederick (that is where Winchester is located) was entered (July term, 1872), this order of Judge Underwood had been rescinded by Judge Bond (the Circuit Judge of the United States), who followed the decision of the Supreme Court of this State, which had declared that a debt due to the bank could not be paid in the depreciated notes of the bank, acquired after notice of the assignment of the assets of the bank."

Mr. Hogg: What is that case?

Mr. Harrison: Bank of the Valley against Marshall, 25 Grattan, 378. Those decisions, taken in connection with the Act of the Legislature and the records here in the Capitol, it seems to us show conclusively—

The Master: You say here in the Capitol?

Mr. Harrison: The extract from the journal and the extract from the Auditor's report—show that the stock itself, whatever may be said of the circulation of the bank, was absolutely worthless.

The Master: This is a proposition that the counsel for Virginia are interested in more than anybody else in this case. These opinions show that the banks were insolvent, but that is all they do show; they do not show to what extent, they do not show how small the assets were, and there is not a word in them that would authorize me to find how small the assets were or what the remnants were. If this is entitled to weight on this proposition, the fact that they were simply insolvent and that the stock was not worth anything is of course one thing. The extent to which they are insolvent is a very much longer step, as tending to show what their condition may have been at a preceding date. I am telling you how this lies in my mind. But there is not a word in this record or in these opinions that gives me the information, beyond the fact that they were insolvent. They may have been worth ten cents on the dollar. The stock might have been worth par or nothing five years after that time. Just exactly how much this evidence of the condition of these things after certain dates is going to be worth, of course I cannot tell. I am going to explain this somewhat the way it lies in my mind, so that you can appreciate the situation. Here is 1863 and 1861. 1861 is a time of peace. And nothing has appeared here in this record to show that there are any financial disturbances or conditions that would adversely affect any industry or enterprise in Virginia. I am stating simply what this record shows. I do not understand that there is any controversy about that, January, 1st, 1861. Now, June 20th, 1863, of course is another proposition, but both of these dates are involved here. Now, I say that if testimony showing the condition of the bank in 1866, as bearing on its value in 1861, is to have value, a good deal depends upon the financial condition of that bank in 1866. If it was simply insolvent and its stock worth nothing, why that might be one thing. If it could pay five cents on the dollar to any of its creditors, it might be quite a different thing, and be very much more probative in its character as to 1861. And the same is true as to 1863. Now, do I make this plain? The mere fact that the stock was not worth anything in 1866, may or may not demonstrate that it was not worth anything on January 1, 1861, and it may not go a great ways towards it. On the other hand, if the bank was entirely devoid of assets in 1866, it may go a good deal farther towards showing that its stock was not of much value January 1st, 1861, and the same of June 20th, 1863. Now, do I make that plain?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

The Master: That is all there is to it. Now, my suggestion is simply this, of course I am discussing this a great deal more than I would in an ordinary litigation—this is not a question of catching anybody in a trap. When I get around to this, I want to get this in accordance with what the facts are, and as I say, I cannot tell—here are a great many conditions; I suppose it will be contended that intervening January 1st, 1861, and 1866, a good many things did happen.

Mr. Anderson: I do not think there is much controversy about the value in 1861; it certainly had value in 1861.

The Master: I do not know what you are going to contend.

Mr. Anderson: We have proved it; both sides have put in evidence on that.

The Master: Then you come to June 20th, 1863; a good many things happened after June 20th, 1863, before 1866. The battle of Gettysburg was fought in July, 1863, and up to the date of the battle of Gettysburg a decently satisfactory condition of hope of success existed in the part of the country where we now happen to be, up to July, 1863. The people down here did not consider the situation hopeless up to that time. Now, a good many things happened after June 20th, 1863. Well, among other things, this stock turned out to be worthless. Suppose evidence was introduced to satisfy me that after June 20th these banks did not have anything of any value. The fact that their stock turned out to be worthless in 1866 is another thing. I am simply illustrating this, because I have got to pass on all these things. I do not know as I have any title perhaps to give my notions about this at this stage of it, but I want to get at these facts. It seems to me too obvious for discussion, that if the fact that these banks were utterly worthless—I will put it as strong as that, but that does not appear here, and there is nothing that will justify me in finding that—the utterly worthless character of this stock in 1866 and the utterly worthless character of the bank itself in 1866 are quite different things. The stock might not be worth a dollar, and there might have been money enough realized out of these assets of those banks to pay all its deposits and its full circulation and every creditor, and leave the stockholders without a cent. So far as the stock is concerned, the bank might have had assets on hand and been in a sense absolutely insolvent. Now, the point is, if this condition in 1866 is going to have weight, to be taken into account as a factor, in my judgment it is important to get as near as you can to the exact condition. Now, do I make that clear?

Mr. Harrison: That is what we have been trying to do.

The Master: When we get around to this, I am not going to suggest what West Virginia is going to argue, but I know what they are going to argue, and of course you know what they are going to argue; there will be a contention here that there was such a profound change between June 20th, 1863, and 1866, that the evidence that you offer in connection with 1866 is entirely worthless and should not be taken into account. That is what West Virginia is going to argue. Suppose that does not impress me as fully as they expect to impress me with it. Then I come down to the question whether there was anything in this bank in 1866. Now, 1866 is nearer 1863 than it is 1861. Of course they may say that somebody stole it in 1865, for instance, or 1864. Well, if they satisfy me, or if it appeared that these banks had full treasuries in 1864 or 1865, and either the Federal Army or the Confederate Army took it, that does not affect the value of the stock in January, 1863, if it was on hand at that time. Take the naked proposition of the financial condition of the bank itself, and if I reach the conclusion that the condition in 1866 is entitled to weight as tending to show what the condition was on June 20th, 1863, it is of importance for me to know.

Mr. Harrison: We will see if we cannot get them.

The Master: I am not arguing this case, but I can come pretty near repeating the arguments on both sides before they are made. I am not trying this case on one side or the other, but I want everything from every point of view. I want it here so that when I come to decide later I will have as much foundation as possible. I had a lot of trouble before on account of the extremely barren condition of the testimony on some subjects. This is no criticism on the counsel, because the counsel did the best they could. If they cannot get it, of course they cannot produce it, and I cannot have it. But so far as you can get it, I want it. I hope I have not elaborated that too much.

Mr. Harrison: I understand your Honor, and if we can get it we certainly will do it.

The Master: I hope West Virginia does not feel that I have unduly interfered at this time in the trial of the case.

Mr. Lilly: It is all right, sir.

The Master: You are expected to argue this fully, notwithstanding that I have intimated that I can state the argument.

Mr. Harrison: I do not think that we will be able to put the balance of those exhibits in.

The Master: Why can't they cross-examine Mr. Potter as to Exhibit 1?

Mr. Harrison: They may go ahead. Can you do that, Judge Holt?

Mr. Holt: Our difficulty is that we have had no opportunity to go over these exhibits with our accountant. We will be very brief, though, when we do start.

The Master: We have an hour and a half. If you say you want the time, I will give it to you; I understand the practical conditions, but what I want to do is to make as much progress as we can; and of course if you feel, Judge, that under the circumstances you can make as much progress by suspending until morning, unless you are prepared to go on with something else—have you anything else, Mr. Harrison, you can take up the time with? Of course, it must be understood that if this case goes in a little criss-cross, like a Virginia rail fence, while it is going in, it will come out all right. I simply want to use up all the time.

Mr. Harrison: We have some exhibits to put in, but it won't take but a moment to do it.

The Master: I will suspend here for five minutes, and in the meanwhile you may confer.

Mr. Holt: May I ask what will be the residue of their evidence? I would like to have some outline of it.

The Master: I will suspend for five minutes; in the meantime Mr. Harrison will get ready with such additional exhibits as they have. And they propose, Mr. Harrison, to take up after a short recess the inquiry as to what you may have in addition to these schedules.

Mr. Harrison: The witness offers as a further exhibit the photographic copies of the balance sheet, etc., of the banks that have been used in the testimony of the defendant's witness, Mr. Hillman.

The photograph's were admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibits Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15, respectively, September 10th, 1914, C. B.

The Master: Judge Holt, you feel under the circumstances that you would prefer to suspend the cross-examination of Mr. Potter until morning?

Mr. Holt: I would prefer it, your Honor. And I really believe we would lose nothing by it.

The Master: I believe that is a reasonable suggestion, taking everything into account. In the meanwhile, if the counsel for Virginia can make any progress, they have some few schedules that they can put in, and if in addition to that they have anything else they can do I would be glad to have them do it. If it is agreeable to the counsel for Virginia, Judge Holt would like to have the counsel for Virginia indicate what they have in addition to the testimony of Mr. Potter and the general subjects to which it relates, so that we can get some judgment as to how much time you may require.

Mr. Harrison: I think we could wind up in an hour if we were prepared this afternoon.

Mr. Holt: Then when you complete the schedules and Mr. Potter's examination and Mr. Williams' examination, you are ready to rest?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, the schedules and Mr. Potter and Mr. Williams, and we are trying to get one or two other gentlemen—we would not need any if we could make the stipulation.

The Master: What is that, as to the Confederate money?

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

Mr. Holt: We have not considered the Confederate money stipulation, only the banks.

The Master: We will suspend here, so that the cross-examination of Mr. Potter can begin to-morrow morning. How would half-past nine do, Judge?

Mr. Holt: That would suit me.

The Master: If the plaintiff's are ready to-morrow morning to complete the examination of Mr. Potter with these summarized exhibits, of course they will complete it, and immediately on its completion I expect that Judge Holt will be prepared to go on with his cross-examination. And then your two other witnesses, and then subject to odds and ends the case is practically closed. I am right about that, am I, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

The Master: I want to congratulate counsel on both sides on the fact that we have made great progress to-day. Meanwhile, it is understood that Mr. Hillman of course has all of the data that has been submitted, so that he and his assistants can check up everything, so that when we get through I want to get the same statement in the record with reference to Virginia's compilations that I have now with reference to West Virginia's. And that cleans up everything with respect to computations.

Adjourned to September 11th, 1914, at 9:30 A. M.

BEFORE THE MASTER.

Richmond, Va., September 11, 1914.

Present, the same counsel as on yesterday.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN, recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

By the Master:

Q. I call your attention now, Mr. Hillman, to the memorandum you submitted in response to my request that you make further investigation in connection with the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad, and I would simply like to have you supplement the statement you have given by giving to me the amount which appears carried as the cost of the road on September 30, 1848, 1849, 1855 and 1858. Just add those.

A. Yes.

Q. I want the gross amount that they carry in their annual statements under the cost of road, which was carried as $1,531.000.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just duplicate that item.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. These items that you refer to as extraordinary expenses in 1858 and 1859 and 1860 and 1861, those do not appear to be charged in or connected with the main item of cost of construction, but appear in other items of cost involved in the balance sheet, as I understand it.

A. They are included in operating expenses classed as extraordinary expenses.

The Master: That covers it all as far as I am concerned. Have you your schedules this morring?

Mr. Robinson: We were at work pretty nearly all night, but Mr. Harrison has not seen them yet, we have some of them.

The Master: Then let Mr. Holt go right along with the cross-examination of Mr. Potter on the schedules that are now in. You are ready to proceed with the cross-examination, are you not. Judge Holt?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

The Master: Just as soon as Mr. Harrison comes in we will proceed with the cross-examination. I give both sides notice now that I am not going to wait the hearing for the accountants to get together and do any checking up that may be necessary in order to verify. I want it all checked up and verified, but I am not going to wait the hearing for that purpose.

The Master: Mr. Harrison, before you came in I called Mr. Hillman's attention to this memorandum that was submitted to me in connection with the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company, and suggested to him that in addition to what is on that I wanted him to give to me the item of cost of road and property, etc., that appeared for the years 1848, 1849, 1855 and 1858; and then he testified on my examination that the item referred to as extraordinary expenses, to which he has called attention, was charged in to operating expenses and made no part of this item of the cost of construction. I did that while I was waiting for you. I want to make this suggestion on the record, and then I want Mr. Holt to proceed with the cross-examination of Mr. Potter. There has been some discussion as to the circumstances under which this $1,000,000 loan of one of the roads was paid in part, the contention being on one side that there was no authority in law for the payment. As far as I know there is nothing yet in this record which would enable me to reach a conclusion upon that legal proposition. I know what the contention is, but so far as I remember my attention has not been called, except by oral statements, to any statute from which I can reach the conclusion as to whether or not that payment was or was not authorized and therefore binding. I simply call attention to that so that if it has been omitted and you want it in you may put it in. Now, Judge Holt, you may proceed with the cross-examination. You may have it in, but if you have, it has escaped my attention.

Mr. Holt: The idea was, as I recall, that the officer who received this payment had no authority to receive it.

The Master: I do not know of anything in the record that establishes that fact.

Mr. Harrison: Except the entries in the journal, the minutes of the Board of Public Works and the Sinking Fund.

The Master: That is simply a declaration of the Board of Public Works and involves their construction of what the law was. Of course if you want to rest on that, with that suggestion, that leaves the case in that position. I do not know of anything in this record that would enable me as an original proposition to determine whether or not that payment was authorized. I simply call attention to it now here so that if there is any defect in it, then the defect may be remedied. Now, you may proceed, Judge Holt.

Mr. Holt: I will be very brief.

Mr. Robinson: If your Honor please, in our Exhibit No. 1, Mr. Harrison asked a question of Mr. Potter whether this cash interest paid by Virginia from January 1, 1861, to December 31, 1871, represented entirely and exclusively interest upon the debt as it existed January 1, 1861, and Mr. Potter answered that it did not exclusively represent interest on that debt. That was a surprise to Mr. Harrison and to myself. We had supposed that it did, and learned for the first time that between 1861 and 1871 there was about a million dollars of bonds issued in payment of work that had been contracted for prior to January 1, 1861, so that to that extent we have overlooked in our case as originally tried about a million dollars of the common debt. We are not making any point of that now, but what I wish to state is that we will correct this schedule in that regard and hand it in as soon as we can. We cannot do it to-day. It is one of the things which is a surprise that has come at the last minute, but what we want this schedule to show is the interest on the undivided debt paid by Virgnia down to December 31, 1871, the time of her first refunding act.

The Master: That may go as the statement of the witness if it is agreeable to Mr. Holt, by way of additional explanation to Exhibit No. 1, Class A.

Mr. Harrison: It explains his former answer.

The Master: Is there any objection to that being treated as a statement of Mr. Potter in explanation?

Mr. Holt: How is that, Mr. Potter?

Mr. Potter: That is the fact.

Mr. Anderson: If your Honor please, in regard to that matter, the fact that Virginia had issued nearly a million dollars of bonds in settlement of antecedent obligations of the State, that is obligations contracted before January 1, 1861, was well known to me and I think to the other counsel for Virginia during the former hearing. We did not set up those claims because by the compact between the two States evidenced by the provision in the constitution of West Virgina, Section 8 of Article 8 of the Constitution of West Virginia, and the Act of Assembly of Virginia, according to the provisions of that Constitution we thought we could not set up any portion of the debt contracted before 1861, this was really contracted before 1861, but evidenced by bonds. We did not set this up because there were intermediate contributions by West Virginia to the treasury of Virginia against which we thought this would be a fair set off, and it will be found that it sets off everything that West Virginia could possibly have paid between 1861 and 1863.

The Master: Now, Mr. Holt, you may proceed with your cross-examination.

Continuation of the examination of

ARTHUR G. POTTER.

Cross Examination by Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, I believe you stated on yesterday that you were the accountant in this case upon its former trial. Did you mean that that you were the accountant appointed by the Court or that you represented only the State of Virginia?

Mr. Harrison: I said representing the State of Virginia, as far as I remember; if I did not, I intended to say so.

The Master: There is no question about that fact.

A. I represented the State of Virginia.

Q. Turning now to your Exhibit No. 1, which relates to the Sinking Fund, I believe that you stated on yesterday in response to a question by Mr. Harrison, that the balance in that fund on January 1, 1861, as given by you at $819,250.03, tallies with the Defendant's Exhibit No. 1?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that the amount to the credit of that fund on June 20th, 1863, of $143,195.90, tallies with Defendant's Exhibit No. 1, 1863?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So there is no disagreement there?

A. No, sir.

Q. I note that you have an item under the head of Sinking Fund, disbursements, January 1, 1861, to December 31, 1871, of $443,300.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you do not carry it out in your computation for the reason that, according to your contention, it was refunded, is that true?

A. I would not go so far as to say that it was refunded; a tender was made of it according to the entries on the books.

Q. That was a part of a payment, was it not, of $886,685, made by the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company on the million dollar mortgage?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part of that $886,685, if any, was permitted to remain in the Sinking Fund?

A. Judging from these figures, found in the cash book of the Sinking Fund I should say it would be the difference, $443,385.

By the Master:

Q. And what sum?

A. What is that?

Q. The difference between $443,000—

A. No, sir; the difference between $443,300 and $886,685, or $443,385.

Q. Just one-half?

A. One-half with the $85 off.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. That amount then was permitted to remain in the Sinking Fund?

A. That is the only conclusion I can arrive at from the entries on the books.

Q. And so far as the balance of eight hundred and eighty-six thousand and some dollars is concerned, namely $443,300, was it not simply transferred to the Commonwealth Fund and not refunded?

A. I cannot say as to that. I can give you the exact wording of the entry covering that transfer if you wish it.

The Master: When you say refunded, Judge, I suppose you mean returned?

Mr. Holt: Yes, returned.

The Master: I suppose the use of the term refunded arises from the fact that it is used in the entry. But we all understand it was returned by the parties who made the alleged illegal payment.

Mr. Holt: Yes.

The Master: Proceed.

Q. You say you have that entry before you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it, Cash Book B of the Sinking Fund, March 27, 1863?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does that entry show?

A. On the credit side of the Cash Book, by Commonwealth of Virginia, by order of Commissioners of Sinking Fund, it being one-half of the amount paid by Virginia & Tennessee Railroad which said Commissioners refused to receive, which now has to await further legislation, $443,300.

Q. Which has to await future legislation, is it not?

A. I beg your pardon, it is future.

Q. Have you another entry upon the Auditor's Day Book, 1861-65, page 309, before you?

A. No, sir; I have not that entry.

The Master: Can you send for that book. Would you like to have it, Judge?

Mr. Holt: I have a memorandum of it.

The Master: You may be able to read it right in from that memorandum of it.

Mr. Holt: I would like to have it if we can get it in just a moment.

The Master: Send for it, Mr. Potter. I would suggest if you have there a memorandum showing what than entry is, why can't you put it in by asking him if such an entry does not exist. If they do not make any point about it that will answer the purpose as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Holt: I will.

Q. I will ask you if there is not an entry on the First Auditor's Day Book, 1861-1865, page 309, under date of March 27, 1865, reading as follows: To the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, from said fund on account of money transferred to the Commonwealth by the Commissioners, $443,300.

A. I do not know, I have not seen such an entry.

Mr. Holt: We will have that brought in.

The Master: You can proceed and take that up later, can you, Judge?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

(At this point the book was produced.)

Q. Have you found the entry that I have just refered to?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Read it.

A. J. S. Calvert, debit to sundry accounts. Under that heading, to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund from said fund on account of money transferred to the Commonwealth by the Commissioners, $443,300.

Q. Give the page on which you find it?

A. Page, 309.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. What is the date?

A. February 28, 1865.

By the Master:

Q. What is the book?

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Is it under of February 27, 1865?

A. March 31st.

By the Master:

Q. What year?

A. 1865.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. My reference is to March 27th.

A. There is a 27 there. I do not know whether that means—I think that means the 27th of the month. The whole entry is dated March 31st. I believe that is the entry for the whole month, and this 27 means the 27th of the month.

By the Master:

Q. Then just say that that entry is dated March 27th.

A. Yes, sir; that entry is dated March 27th, and appears on page 309 of the Day Book, Auditor's Office of Virginia, 1861-1865.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Then, according to that entry, Mr. Potter, that $443,300 was not returned but was simply transferred from the Sinking Fund to the Commonwealth?

A. This would indicate that it was paid to the Treasurer of the Commonwealth, yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. That is, from one fund to the other? The point that Judge Holt has in mind is that there is nothing on these entries that shows that anything representing this payment was returned to the parties who originally paid it.

A. Not that this entry shows.

Q. You do not have anything on the books that shows it?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not find anything on the books that shows that any of the consideration that is alleged to have been received on account of this fund was returned to the parties who originally paid the same?

A. Not on this book, no, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now, you have upon Exhibit No. 1, Mr. Potter, an aggregate item of interest paid on the State debt between June 20, 1863, and April 1, 1865, of $1,503,957.88; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The object of your exhibit then as I understand is to show that Virginia paid in the shape of interest upon the undivided debt between those dates that amount?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you claim that for her?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This exhibit does not reduce the $1,503,957.88 to the gold standard, does it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where in this and your other exhibits when a settlement was made by the turning over of any assets owned by the State of Virginia in which West Virginia claims 23½ per cent., you do reduce it to the gold basis, do you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Through all your exhibits?

A. Yes, sir; where cash is involved.

Q. That is, wherever any stocks in which West Virginia claims an equity have been utilized in the cancellation of any part of the undivided debt you reduce the matter to a gold basis?

A. I do not want to evade the question, but I want to be accurate about it. We reduced the cash to a gold basis and the stocks to a market basis; if you refer to that as a gold basis, my answer would be yes.

Q. Why, now, when West Virginia uses bonds in the payment of any portion of the principal or interest of the undivided debt do you give her the full benefit at par of those bonds, but on the other hand when a bond is cancelled or redeemed by any asset, in order to cut down West Virginia's credits, do you reduce that transaction to a gold basis?

A. I believe that the value of the investments sold by Virginia is more nearly shown by what Virginia got for it at the market value of the bonds than it is by the par value.

By the Master:

Q. That is not quite the question. The question is why you have used the gold basis in one factor of the equasion and do not use it in the other.

A. I did not understand his question that way.

Q. And whether it relates to any item except this $1,503,957.88 or not, I do not know, because that is the only one that has been developed. The suggestion that Judge Holt's question conveys to my mind is that when you are minimizing the charge to Virginia in the interests of Virginia and to minimize the amount due to West Virginia, you reduce the various factors to a gold basis so far as cash is concerned, but, upon the other side of the account, when you are crediting Virginia with the disbursements you have not reduced that to a gold basis, and he wants to know why if you did it in the one case you did not do it in the other.

A. My answer to that is Virginia is not makng any claim here. West Virginia is making the claim. I have been instructed to try to arrive at a fair valuation, and I have attempted to do that to the best of my ability. This calculation is merely operations of the sinking fund for a series of years. There is no reduction and no addition made to this schedule.

Q. Do you mean by that as far as this schedule goes this is rather illustrative than probative?

A. If I understand your question, yes, sir.

Mr. Robinson: Isn't your question a question addressed to counsel more than to the accountant?

The Master: I think it is a proper question for the accountant.

Yes, I think it is all quite true, but I allowed that method of inquiry on the part of Virginia, and I think it is legitimate as far as Mr. Potter is concerned. He is a qualified accountant. This is exactly the same line of inquiry that was pursued with Mr. Hillman; that is, in substance. Of course in the last analysis both of you understand that I am going to be governed by the contentions, that is so far as the attitude of the various parties are concerned, by the attitude asserted by their counsel. I do not say I am going to take the assertions of the counsel, but I am going to hold them to the theories which their counsel stand for in final argument.

Mr. Holt: Of course these exhibits from first to last show that wherever we set up a credit they minimize it by a reduction to the gold basis, where, on the other hand, they want to show how glorious has been the conduct of Virginia, they do not reduce it to the gold basis.

The Master: Of course the purpose of this cross-examination is to emphasize that fact.

Mr. Holt: And I wanted to know what reason there was for it, if any.

The Master: You have a perfect right to it, and as I understand, Mr. Potter has done the best he could to give the reasons from his point of view. There is no question about the propriety of the cross-examination.

Mr. Harrison: In response to the comment made by my friend on the other side, which of course embodied a veiled criticism of the motives and integrity of Virginia—

The Master: I do not think so; it does not convey any such idea to my mind. It is quite proper for both sides of this controversy to put their best foot forward, and make the best and most satisfactory showing that they can. I do not think there is a thing in this objection, Mr. Harrison, that reflects upon the sincerity or integrity of either Virginia or its accountant.

Mr. Harrison: I want to call your Honor's attention to what this exhibit means. I apprehend the witness has not conveyed that idea yet clearly to your Honor's mind, in respect to the item of interest under criticism, the aggregate amount being $1,503,957.88 I merely want to say that that column headed Interest on State debt, including the item that has been criticized shows that so much of the State's public obligation had been discharged. In other words, that a total of $4,086,136.27 of the obligation of the State to pay interest, whether it was paid in chips or whet-stones, or not, it was paid in a currency that was accepted by the creditor, and discharged that much liability. And that was all that column was intended to show, and all that it does show.

The Master: I understand that.

Mr. Harrison: That there had been lifted between those dates, the dates mentioned here, at the particular date that Judge Holt refers to, there had been lifted one million nine hundred thousand dollars of interest that had accrued on the undivided debt, and no longer rested as an obligation.

The Master: It bears more upon this question of interest, and at the same time of course, so far as Judge Holt's criticism may be founded upon the record, he is entitled to make it.

Mr. Harrison: I wanted to explain just what the real purpose was. And the object was, whatever effect this may have, as an offset, to be relieved of interest and so on.

The Master: This does not offset against anything.

Mr. Harrison: I understand that.

Mr. Holt: Would it not be equally true if Virginia would use some Richmond & Danville Railroad stock for the purpose of lifting one of her thousand dollar bonds?

The Master: Do you want that addressed to the witness?

Mr. Holt: I have addressed it to Mr. Harrison.

The Master: I would a little rather have it addressed to the witness. This little side discussion is simply anticipating the discussion that is going to take place before me when we get through with this case.

Mr. Holt: We will come to those items in another schedule.

The Master: I do not think we have any misunderstanding, Mr. Harrison, of your position.

By the Master:

Q. This is simply a transcript of the book, is that it?

A. Yes, sir; that is all.

Mr. Hogg: That is reduction added, as I understand, to a gold basis.

The Witness: No, no gold basis.

Q. You have not changed the interest you found on the books. This is simply a photograph of the Sinking Fund operation?

A. Just a condensed statement of the Sinking Fund operation for that period of years.

Q. You have not modified any item?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have not changed any item?

A. No, sir.

The Master: That is the way I understood it.

Mr. Holt: We so understood it, but we had a modest idea that what was sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander.

The Master: It excited your curiosity?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now, turning to the last page of the same exhibit we find that you have made some payments here, Virginia has, by bonds, coupon bonds dated the 1st of January, 1866, registered bonds, 1866, coupon bonds, 1867, and so on, amounting to $6,576,913.60. Now, there was no reduction in those transactions as shown by your schedule, either to a gold basis or to a market value, was there?

A. No, sir.

Q. All bonds cancelled and all bonds issued and turned over were set down at their face value, were they not? This does not purport to set down any bonds cancelled.

Q. These were bonds issued for the purpose of paying interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course it resulted in no bond cancellation, but they are set down here, the bonds so issued, as at their face value?

A. As reported in the Second Auditor's report. This is a copy of the figures found in that report.

Q. Were those bonds later funded?

A. I do not know that all of them were, but I know that some of them were.

Q. Were they not at a later date funded at 50 cents on the dollar?

A. I do not know.

Q. Well, have you no means of ascertaining the fact so that you may answer the question?

A. I presume I could find out; yes, if the records are there.

Q. I wish you would do that.

The Master: Have you got somebody that is assisting you, Mr. Potter?

Mr. Robinson: The bill shows that on account of Virginia's share of this debt she has already paid over seventy millions of dollars. These were refunded several times, not these particular bonds, but the bonds under this statute. Virginia has been paying interest on refunded bonds, and when we get through we will show that for every dollar of these bonds Virginia has probably paid a dollar and a half or maybe two dollars. That is a computation that we have not made.

The Master: That may all be true, but of course they are entitled if they want it, on a cross-examination, to this detail. It is a legitimate cross-examination and a legitimate inquiry. It may well be that later on you may cover the whole ground, but of course you understand that they are not required to accept your method of covering it.

By the Master:

Q. Have you now anybody working with you, Mr. Potter?

A. Yes, sir; but nobody sufficiently familiar with this matter to go into it.

Q. How long would it take to get this information?

Mr. Anderson: That would be an exceedingly difficult matter to work out, your honor.

The Master: When these items appear here and some effect is going to be claimed for them, they are entitled to cross-examine on them.

Mr. Robinson: This is a new schedule. Why don't they have some of their men look it up?

The Master: They are entitled to proceed and get all the information from Mr. Potter that they can. We need not spend any time discussing what is going to be done, because if Mr. Holt insists that Mr. Potter get it for him, he will have to do it.

Mr. Harrison: If they want any further information, why can't they get it for themselves?

The Master: They have a right to get it from Mr. Potter if they see fit.

Mr. Harrison: I never called for any statements to be made and never assumed that I would have a right to impose on their witness.

Mr. Lilly: You wanted our man to go and get a private book from one of the railroad companies.

Mr. Robinson: It is a computation that will take three days.

The Master: Of course I cannot help that.

Mr. Harrison: The only point that I am making is, not that there is any objection in the world to getting it, I would be glad to have them get it, but I think they ought to get it for themselves. I do not think they ought to require us to furnish them with additional information that requires the examination of books

Mr. Holt: We find on the last page of this exhibit, your honor, six millions of dollars and seven millions of dollars, an aggregate of over thirteen millions of what Virginia has done. And we have heard a great deal about the seventy million dollar business that she has done in this direction heretofore. And we find that this is a bond transaction, and we have very strong suspicion that these bonds were subsequently funded at 50 cents on the dollar, and have probably been funded again two or three times and pared again, so that thirteen million dollars does not sound so big.

The Master: I think you have a right to minimize it.

Mr. Robinson: We will put in a schedule.

Mr. Holt: We do not ask for a schedule, we simply ask if these bonds were subsequently refunded at a less amount than their face, and if so at what amount.

The Master: If you are prepared to furnish a schedule here, why can't Mr. Potter take the information and make that statement?

Mr. Robinson: It will take two or three days.

The Master: We will proceed here with the understanding that if it is feasible Mr. Potter will furnish the information.

The witness: I would like to know exactly the information I am to supply to them.

The Master: You have got five items of bonds on the last page of your Exhibit No. 1, and what Judge Holt wants to know is whether or not that list of bonds was not afterwards refunded at 50 cents on the dollar or some sum less than par and a subsequent refunding of those bonds at a sum less than par. In other words, so far as you can he wants you to trace out the final disposition of these particular bonds with reference to the question as to whether they were or were not refunded on a basis less than par, and if so how much.

The Witness: I can answer that question to an extent as to some of those bonds.

The Master: Do not stop to make those figures now.

The Witness: I have some of the data before me. There was one million—

The Master: I am not going to spend time here on something that does not get us anywhere; I am not going to wait around here for another day to allow accountants to compute. I want to know how adequately you can answer that question from the data you have there. If you can do it with sufficient adequateness to satisfy Judge Holt you may answer it now.

The Witness: I can account for a million and a half of it.

The Master: Will that answer your purpose Judge Holt?

Mr. Holt: I do not think it covers it.

The Master: We won't spend any more time on it now. You need not spend a minute on it now. You have a right to minimize that item, if you can, and the ouly question now is how that is going to be done in the most feasible way. You shall do it as far as that is concerned, and the other side do not object to it. But I am not going to wait here for Mr. Potter to make any computations now, because that delays the hearing. What we will do about that will depend upon some arrangement we will make later. But the understanding is that that will be done.

Mr. Robinson: Every one of those refunding Acts covers the bonds and interest. You have got to figure the interest.

The Master: What I am going to do this morning is to clean up this hearing, and matters like this that are going to be the subject of arrangement and adjustment we will take up after I finish the hearing. I want to get this hearing through. It is all right enough, but we will have a definite understanding. Can you proceed, Judge, with that understanding?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir; I will go right along.

The Master: I am not going to run an accountant's office here in this hearing any longer. I did that on the other side quite a good deal; there is no reflection on anybody but time is too short and life is too uncertain. These accountants can figure a good deal better to themselves than right here.

Mr. Holt: We promise to be short.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. We will come now, Mr. Potter, to Exhibit 2, quotations on Virginia bonds from newspapers and likewise quotations on stocks set up in the supplemental answer.

The Master: If you have no objection, I have one or two questions of my own that I would like to ask in relation to that, if I will not be disturbing you in your cross-examination, on Exhibit 2. There are one or two items that I want to make some inquiries about.

By the Master:

Q. What is the meaning of this term that I find in here, Peelers, 6's? Look at it under December, 1874, there are 6's and Peelers. What are Peelers?

Mr. Robinson: Peelers are a bond that you have nothing to do with. They are merely bonds of 1872 that repealed the clause in 1871 making coupons acceptable for taxation.

The Master: Is there any objection to that explanation?

Mr. Anderson: The fact is, in December, 1871—

Q. You refer to consols?

A. That means $100 bonds.

Q. What is the occasion for the insertion of Peelers in here at all?

A. These quotations are just copies. They were quoted that way in the newspapers.

The Master: But if there is no such thing as Peelers in controversy here, I want Mr. Potter to strike that out of his schedule, because I do not want to be confused by it later on.

Mr. Holt: In other words, there is no neccessity of copying the whole quotations.

The Master: No. I suppose he has taken the quotations that he found.

Mr. Anderson: The only thing is that they have a different market value.

The Master: What good does that do me in finding the market value of other bonds? It simply confused it. Here are Consols. Are consols involved here? What are consols?

Mr. Robinson: Consols of the issue of 1874. You must remember that we are reducing bonds received in exchange for certain securities under Class C, and all kinds of bonds are coming in. I am not sure whether or not there were any Peelers or any Consols, but it does not take very much of space to give the quotations for all Virginia bonds.

The Master: A quotation that does not relate to a bond that was used in payment of some of these securities not only does me no good, but confuses me and has not any bearing on this case, as it seems to me. What I want Mr. Potter to do is to go through this schedule and strike out of it everything, every single security that is not involved in this controversy.

Mr. Holt: You do not want market quotations of Swiss Tunnel stock.

The Master: What good does it do me except to confuse me? With that understanding I see no objection to it. I do not want it in here. I do not know what it proves, and when I come to look it over in the absence of the testimony of the witness I will be wondering what it is all about anyway.

Mr. Harrison: This is just a general statement of the quotations, but he applies that later on.

The Master: Yes, but I want this schedule cleaned up in this way, I want Mr. Potter to cut out every single item here that does not relate and which he does not know that it relates to some security involved in this controversy, and then I have a clear field before me. Have you any objection, Judge Holt?

Mr. Holt: I want them out.

The Master: Then Mr. Potter is to cut them out, and the checking in that regard is to be subject to the checking up of the accountants on either side. Now, proceed Judge.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, on the first page of Exhibit No. 2, you give quotations for 1860, 1861 and 1863 upon Virginia bonds; is that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the year 1860, I see 89, 88 and as low as 82 and a fraction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. 1861, as low as 78½?

The Master: 78 is the lowest.

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean that these are quotations as of those dates, market quotations upon Virginia bonds that constituted a part of the debt of Virginia prior to January 1, 1861?

A. I believe so; yes, sir.

Q. The Supreme Court in getting after us charged us the par of these bonds, didn't they?

A. They did, yes, sir.

Q. What is the object then of introducing a lot of market quotations on a bond here that the Supreme Court of the United States has said as far as we are concerned we shall be charged with at par?

A. I do not know, there is no object that I know of. I was not advised as to the object. I was requested to get these quotations.

Mr. Holt: I just could not see the materiality of it.

The Master: That puts it right up to counsel and they have notice in advance what they are expected to discuss on the argument.

Mr. Harrison: That is all right.

Q. What stock exchanges furnished these quotations?

A. The quotations in the paper shown are the quotations from the New York Exchange and the Richmond Exchange and the Baltimore Exchange in some cases.

Q. Did the City of Richmond have any stock exchange?

A. I do not know of personal knowledge, but I am advised on good authority that they did.

Q. Is it not a fact that there was no Stock Exchange in the City of Richmond in 1860 and 1861, and that the market quotations found in the newspapers of that municipality as of those dates were simply furnished by a single firm of brokers in that city?

A. I don't know.

Q. Do not the papers themselves show from which you got these quotations that to be the fact.

A. When these quotations—

The Master: The question is whether the papers show that to be a fact, that is all.

The Witness: I was just going to say that I did not see the papers. The quotations were compiled by two of my assistants, one checking the other, and I believe they are accurate.

The Master: You simply do not know because you did not see the papers?

The Witness: No, sir.

Q. Then you got these quotations second hand?

A. That is a fact.

The Master: That is, the work of getting them up was done by his assistants, is that what you mean by that?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir. I have no doubt that is all right.

The Master: Perfectly. Unless it is conceded by you, in order to establish the continuity of legal proof, you will have to produce the assistants, but there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. Harrison: We will do that if it is required.

The Witness: I think the Judge will understand it would be impossible for me to compile as many quotations as that in the time I have had.

The Master: There is no criticism of you, Mr. Potter. They only want to get at just what the fact is.

Q. In order to make it specific, because we may ask one of your assistants about it, were not all these market quotations published in the papers consulted by you or by your assistants furnished by Lancaster & Company, brokers, or by Sutton & Comany, brokers, in the City of Richmond?

A. I don't know.

Q. I notice on the same page and for the year 1863 you have a quotation purporting to be taken from the New York Times. Did you consult the New York Times itself?

A. Yes, sir; copies of the New York Times in the library room up-stairs.

Q. I was going to ask you where did you get them from, from the New York Times?

A. My assistant reports to me that he got it from an original copy of the New York Times in the Virginia State Library.

Q. Then you did not go to the City of New York to make the examination.

A. No, sir.

Mr. Holt: My real object in that, your Honor, is to find out whether or not we could check it without going to New York.

The Master: Exactly so, yes.

The Witness: They have some incomplete files of the New York Times, I believe, upstairs, of about that time.

Q. I notice on this same page 1, under date of January, 1863, that you have a quotation taken from the Richmond Dispatch of a bid on bonds of 110, and that under date of January 4, 1863, the day following, you have a quotation purporting to have been taken from the New York Times upon the same bonds of 62.

A. Yes.

Q. How do you explain the difference?

A. I believe it is accounted for by the quotation of 110 being in Confederate and the 62 being in the currency used in New York.

Q. Would that be gold in New York or would that be greenbacks?

A. I cannot answer that question; I don't know.

Q. You have no authority then for saying that any of these New York quotations are made upon the gold basis?

A. No, sir; it does not specify that as I understand it in the papers.

Q. What is your judgment in the premises, if you have any?

A. I have no judgment in the premises. I do not know anything about the afterward history.

The Master: That exhausts it if you have not any judgment.

Q. I will ask you the further question if gold were at a great premium upon that date would you expect the market quotation in New York to be on a gold basis or to speak in greenbacks, what would you expect under such circumstances?

A. I think it would be quite natural to expect that they would be quoted in the currency, which was most used, and if gold, it would be specified as gold, provided there was a high premium.

Q. In other words, you would expect it to be a greenback quotation?

A. Quite probably; yes, sir.

Q. Now, what is the ratio there of difference between the New York quotations that I have referred to and the Richmond quotation?

A. It is nearly, approximately 2 to 1.

Q. Nearly two to one?

A. Not quite.

Q. Would you not infer from that then that it only took so far as market quotations are concerned about two Confederate dollars to make one dollar of greenbacks?

A. No, I would not conclude that.

Q. Why then would the same bond that was bringing in the City of Richmond 110 in Confederate currency bring $62 in greenback currency in the City of New York?

A. I believe it is a matter of record that Confederate currency was much more depreciated than greenbacks at that time.

Q. The ratio there though is about 2 to 1. In reducing to a gold basis in your subsequent schedules have you not utilized a greater ratio than 2 to 1?

A. I have used the ratio quoted as already in the record on the date or as near to the date as I could get to it when the payment was made.

Q. What is the smallest ratio you have used in your subsequent calculations?

A. I think 2 to 1, in some cases, 3, 5, 7 1-2.

Q. And 7 1-2; and what is the highest ratio?

A. I think it went as high as 23, twenty odd.

Q. Can you discover that much difference in any of your market quotations in New York and Richmond?

A. I have made no examination along those lines.

Q. I wish you would glance over your Exhibit No. 2 and see whether or not you ever at any time have set down the difference of 7 or 20 to 1 between the market quotation at the two different points, upon the same bond.

A. In July, 1863, I have used a quotation of 9.

Q. What page, please?

A. I find that in my Schedule D. In reducing cash received on that date—during July, I find a quotation of 135 on Virginia 6's.

Q. Where is that quotation, please?

A. That quotation is 63, July 17th.

Q. At what place, though, Richmond or New York?

A. Richmond Dispatch—or, Richmond, Virginia. And on the 13th of the same month the New York quotation was 61.

Q. What would the ratio be there?

A. That is about the same that you quoted.

The Master: The fact that you want to develop is that he has not in any instance undertaken to reduce them to gold basis predicated upon the statement that he uses elsewhere.

By the Master:

Q. Is not that true, that you have not made any effort to reduce this table of quotations that you have made here to a gold basis?

A. That is true.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. (Handing book). There is January 4th, 1864.

The Master: Is that the date?

By Mr. Holt:

Q. The question about that was whether all of these quotations had not been furnished, and is not the fact apparent upon the paper?

The Master: The question is whether the paper does not show it.

Mr. Harrison: Here it is on the book.

The Witness: Sales of stock in Richmond by John A. Lancaster & Son, No. 197 Main Street, two doors above the Farmers' Bank, for the week ending January 2, 1861. Virginia six per cent. registered bonds, sales, $80.

Mr. Harrison: They all show sales. It is a weekly report of sales.

Q. But I find upon this page, no sales, under this date of January 3, 1863, but a bid of 110.

The Master: You do not want to take time to go through and check up these items. What you do want is to have the accountant do that, and if the checking up shows a condition that you want to have appear in the record—

Mr. Holt: Your Honor will not quarrel with me when you see my purpose. What I wanted to know was whether or not all of these market quotations on bonds taken from the Richmond papers were not furnished to the Richmond papers by one or the other of those brokerage firms.

The Witness: The quotations that I have just read would indicate that as to this date. I have not examined the other dates.

Q. Well, can you conveniently and speedily look at another one or two there by way of illustration?

A. On January 11th that is true, the same house.

Q. And does it show that they are all private sales? Is there not something in those newspapers to indicate that?

Mr. Holt: I have sold some few bonds at times when I was so hard up I could hardly walk, for anything I could get.

The Master: You were lucky to have them at that time. Why can't we have those papers gone over and have a succint statement made for whatever it may be worth.

Mr. Holt: We probably would like to have it when we come to the stocks.

The Master: Whatever may be needed in that regard, we will have that done, but before we conclude I would like to have you indicate just exactly how far you would like to have him go in that respect.

Mr. Holt: Well, he might perhaps, after an examination, put into the record this, if it be the fact, that all of the market quotations taken from the Richmond papers relative to Virginia bonds for 1860, 1861 and 1863, and for every other year given in his Exhibit No. 2, were furnished by private brokers, based upon private sales; that is, if that be the fact.

The Master: Now, have the original sources examined by somebody and see whether that can be accurately stated; and if it can be, why, have that statement made. The real point that Judge Holt has in mind is that there was no public stock exchange in Richmond, and that this information is simply information published from private sales by brokerage concerns from time to time.

The Witness: I have found that term used, Richmond Exchange, frequently; and I made some inquiries around Richmond and was told that there was an exchange.

The Master: You cannot testify to that.

Mr. Lilly: We do not think it is a fact.

Mr. Holt: I will ask him one question on that point, and that will test the exhibit too.

The Master: That is right.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. You have no authority then for saying that there was a Richmond Exchange in existence upon the dates embraced in this exhibit, other than hearsay?

A. No, sir.

Q. Turn now to page 8 of this same exhibit, Farmers' Bank of Virginia, 1860, November 2nd, quotation 102. Where did you get that quotation?

The Master: What date is that, Judge?

Mr. Holt: November 2nd, 1860.

A. The Farmers' Bank of Virginia.

Q. Where did you get the quotation under that date of 102, showing a premium?

A. From the Richmond Dispatch.

Q. Does your exhibit show it?

A. There is a note added—it was omitted when this was originally written up, but there was a note added, and if it did not get into your exhibit, it was meant to.

Mr. Holt: I have nothing here to show.

The Master: I have a note here.

Mr. Holt: It is not here.

The Master: It is on mine.

Q. After you have examined the newspapers that you have just now consulted, do you want to change your statement that they are taken from the Richmond Stock Exchange?

A. If I find that this is not in accordance with the fact I certainly want to change it.

Q. You are not satisfied yet?

A. I am not satisfied, no.

The Master: Now, I suggest that when you are prepared to make your general statement in relation to the Richmond Dispatch, I do not know whether these quotations are bid and asked, and it is evident that the Richmond Dispatch so far as you have produced it does not show either bid or asked but does show sales; and if that be the fact, simply have it appear that they are reports made by brokers of sales, which is something that your exhibit does not show.

Mr. Holt: I think some of those brokers' reports simply show bids and what was asked; I do not think it is uniform. Some of them show sales.

The Master: Then in that case my suggestion could not be followed.

Q. What was the quotation, according to your Exhibit No. 2, on Farmers' Bank of Virginia stock upon the date nearest to January 1, 1861?

A. 100, on January 4, 1861.

Q. What would be the quotation on the next nearest date to January 1, 1861?

A. December 14th, at 100—December 14, 1860, at 100.

Q. You find then the stock of that bank quoted at par a few days before January 1, 1861, and three days after January 1, 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether either one of those quotations was an actual sale?

A. No, sir; I have not that information before me.

Q. Do you know whether they represent a bid?

A. That is my understanding of these quotations, that they were bid prices.

Q. And you do not know whether any sales resulted, that is whether those bids were accepted or not?

A. I cannot say.

Q. And you do not know how many bids were made?

A. No, sir.

Q. Suppose a bid of $100 was made on the 4th day of January, 1861, upon 10 shares of the Farmers' Bank of Virginia, which bid was not accepted, would you take that as any evidence at all of the value of the stock on that day in the market?

A. I think it would be an indication of what people were willing to pay for it, and that would establish the value to a certain extent.

Q. Would not that be a pretty weak evidentiary fact, if some man through a private broker were to offer you par on 10 shares of stock in the Farmers' Bank of Virginia on that date, and you had refused it?

A. Well, I do not know, because I would have to know something about what value I put on it.

Q. Well, would that indicate the state of the market at all?

A. I think it would.

Q. Upon that bank stock?

A. I think it would give a fair indication of what the market was. They would not take the time and trouble to quote them otherwise.

Q. Would you be willing to advise a client upon evidence of that kind that that was the market value of that stock?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. You would consider that pretty slim picking?

A. I would have to see some evidence of sales at that price.

Q. On January 18, 1861, you have the Farmers' Bank of Virginia, 99. Was that a bid or what was asked, or does it represent a sale?

A. I will have to make the same answer to all of this, Judge. I do not know of my own personal knowledge. I believe that they are bid quotations.

The Master: There is no occasion for having this record left in that uncertain condition, and I do not want it left in that way. I want you to check this up and put on some kind of a notation so that when I look this over I will know whether these are bids or offers or sales, all of them. There is no occasion for leaving this in this uncertain condition, and I cannot have it left in that way. I suppose you would like to have that done too, Judge?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

The Master: Check it all up, so we will know whether they are bids or offers or sales. That of course you can do later.

The Witness: I will.

The Master: And I want you to check it up with the accountant on the other side.

Q. Now, in 1863, on January 7th, the same stock you have quoted at 103, and on January 21st of 1863 at 105, January 29th, 105, and February 7th, 107 1-2, March 14th of 1863, 111, and on April 8th, 1863, 131, and April 18th, 1863, 128. Do you know whether those quotations represent bids, sales or prices that were asked?

A. I do not.

Q. Nor do you know, as I understand you, how much stock was involved in either one of those quotations?

A. No, sir.

Q. Whether, if it was a sale, one share or a thousand shares were sold?

A. No, sir.

Q. If it were an offer whether it was made upon one share or a thousand shares?

A. No, sir.

The Master: And there is another thing that you may put in when you check up and give us the detail; if the sources of your information show the amount of the transaction, put that in.

Mr. Holt: I was going to ask that.

Q. Then your schedule does not show, in either instances, the amount of the transaction?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or whether it involved more than one transaction?

A. No, sir.

The Master: We will suspend here for five minutes.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Taking the Exchange Bank quotations now upon the same page of Exhibit No. 2, we find on November 2, 1860, this stock quoted according to your exhibit at 105 1-2. Was that a bid?

A. I believe it was. I do not know positively.

Q. Was it accepted?

A. I don't know.

Q. How about on the 9th of November, the quotation of 104½, was it a bid?

A. I don't know, I think it was.

Q. On November 16th, 1860, 104½?

A. The same is true.

Q. November 23, 1860, 100?

A. The same.

Q. And a bid I presume simply on December 14th, of 101?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was nothing to show what was asked?

A. No, I have not anything before me to show that.

Q. Nor does your exhibit show whether any sales were made upon either of those dates?

A. No, sir.

Q. Taking the various quotations in the year 1861 upon the stock of this bank, what have you to say in the same respect thereto?

A. The same answer as to your previous questions.

Q. How about the quotations under the year 1863?

A. The same answer.

Q. Taking the bank of Virginia, you have a quotation under date of November 9th, 1860, of 70. What do you mean by that, what was the par value of that stock?

A. 70.

Q. Then that quotation is at par?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And it was the same upon all the dates given in that year?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. From what paper were those quotations taken?
A. The Richmond Dispatch.
Q. Do they represent bids, sales or offers?
A. I believe they represent bids.

By the Master:
Q. Have you any original knowledge on that point?
A. No.
Q. Did you see the Dispatch?
A. No; I stated a while ago that I had not prepared this personally. My answer is the same as to these questions.
Mr. Holt: Then the witness had better say he does not know.
The Master: Yes; that is all you want to answer to that question.
The Witness: I don't know.
The Master: You simply don't know and that exhausts that subject. If they want to pursue it further, then they will have to pursue it with some other witness.

By Mr. Holt:
Q. You may take the quotations on the stock of the Bank of Virginia for the year 1861. Do you know where those quotations came from?
A. The Richmond Dispatch.
Q. Do you personally know that?
A. It was reported to me by my assistant who took them from that paper.
Q. You did not examine the paper yourself?
A. No, sir.
Q. And you have no personal knowledge upon the subject whether those quotations represent bids, offers or sales?
A. No, sir.
Q. Nor how much stock was involved in either transaction.
A. No, sir.
Q. Is the same true so far as the quotations given throughout the year 1863?

A. With one exception in 1863, the quotation of November 27th as I read it would be 122 bid and 123 asked.

By the Master:

Q. As far as your knowledge of the facts goes the same is true as to all these quotations that you have here in your exhibits, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. These quotations are the result of work done by two of your assistants.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have not any personal knowledge of the sources from which they came?

A. Except that I told them to take certain books; if they took any others, I don't know; they would not be likely to do that.

Q. That does not give you personal knowledge of the quotations.

A. That is true..

Q. You know what they went for, but you did not see it?

A. No.

Q. You did not have anything to do with it?

A. No.

The Master: That covers the whole ground as far as you are concerned.

Mr. Harrison: In a similar situation in the examination of the defendant's chief accountant, where his testimony related to exhibits that were compiled by his assistants, we made no question at their request as to the integrity of the work upon which he based his testimony, conceding without requiring them to bring their witness who had made the investigation to the stand that it might be accepted as truly and accurately made. I assumed the same course would be pursued here, as one man cannot be on a dozen different jobs at the same time. Now, if it is not going to be pursued and we are to be required to bring in witnesses to vouch for the integrity or the accuracy of the work, I would like to know it.

The Master: There has not been anything said yet to indicate that they propose to question it, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. Holt: The point with me, Mr. Harrison, is that I feel that the entries here on November 27 of 122-123, I have no doubt that is correctly taken from the paper, so I am not questioning that. But what I did want to get was some additional information, and that is whether or not that represented a bid or a sale or an offer.

By the Master:

And that Mr. Potter does not know, and I have already instructed Mr. Potter to elaborate this schedule and make it appear with reference to every item—first, whether it is asked or bid or a sale, and, second, if it shows the amount of the transaction, so that when this schedule is completed it will show all those details so far as they are available. Of course that Mr. Potter cannot do because he does not know anything about the original information. They are not raising that question. They are simply developing this in order to straighten the thing out. Of course I know that Mr. Potter cannot testify to those things, and Judge Holt is simply developing the fact that he could not do that.

Mr. Holt: Simply indicating that we want the additional information.

The Master: Precisely, and I have instructed Mr. Potter to elaborate this schedule so it will give everything that the original sources do show on that point.

Mr. Holt: I was going to ask the names of his assistants, but that perhaps is unnecessary under the circumstances.

The Master: Not the slightest objection to that. Who are they?

The Witness: The man who worked first on this is Mr. Wallerstein, a young attorney in the Attorney General's office here, and later on I had his figures checked up by my assistant, Mr. Haddock.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Should not the quotation of November 2, 1860, 105 1-2 be 104 1-2?

A. Exchange Bank?

Q. Yes.

A. I have no knowledge whether it should be or should not be.

Q. Turn now to page 9 of the same exhibit, Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company stocks. Does your exhibit show any quotations on the stock of that company for the year 1860?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is confined to bonds?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the year 1861?

A. The quotations are of bonds.

Q. You have none for that year on stocks?

A. No, sir.

Q. And the only market quotations you give on the stock of that company are found in the year 1863?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not your assistants searched for market quotations upon the stock of this company for the year 1861?

A. I believe they did; my instructions were to do so.

Q. I see also that you have marked upon this page, all the way through, the subject of bonds, Richmond Exchange. By what authority did your assistants do that?

A. I do not know.

By the Master:

Q. Well, you assumed without investigation that there was an exchange, I suppose? Whether there was or not you do not know.

A. The assumption, if it might be called such, was based upon the figures found by my assistants. I judged that there was a Richmond Exchange, and I made some inquiries, and I was told that there was.

The Master: I will have it appear in the record that the Master has sent for the directories of Richmond for 1860 and 1866, and has examined those two directories, and is unable to find anything in the directories that indicates the existence of a Stock Exchange in either one of those years. I have looked under the head of Richmond, I have looked under the head of Stock, and I have looked under the head of Exchange, and I do not find anything to indicate that there was any Richmond Stock Exchange, in the directory, for whatever that may be worth. We do not find the directories between 1860 and 1866. A curious thing is that in 1860 we do not find the Richmond Dispatch in the directory at all. I do not understand why, exactly, but it is not there. Whether there are in existence any other directories or not I do not know.

The Witness: It is probably the Daily Dispatch.

Mr. Lilly: It is marked the Daily Dispatch in the 60's, your Honor.

Mr. Anderson: I think witnesses that we will examine will tell us about that. Mr. Williams will tell us about that. He was a broker and banker. He remembers Lancaster & Company.

Mr. Howard: May it please the Master, if the gentlemen on the other side will accept this, I was asking a son-in-law of Mr. Lancaster, of the old firm of Lancaster and Company, and he told me that Lancaster & Company came here some time in the 40's, and there was no Stock Exchange here whatever at that time, and there were several brokers representative offices here after that time, Davenport & Company, Lancaster & Sons, but my information is that there was not any Stock Exchange during the war. And if you were to examine those papers further on during the war to its close, you will find where they have sold at public auction a whole lot of stocks.

The Master: I suppose we might find out when the Stock Exchange of Richmond was incorporated.

Mr. Holt: We have sent for that information.

The Master: As the evidence stands before me now there is no evidence before me that there was any Stock Exchange in 1860 or 1866, or in the intervening years. If there is any evidence, and it is obtainable, it will be produced, of course.

Mr. Anderson: I am very sure there was no Stock Exchange in Richmond until after the war.

The Master: The New York Stock Exchange is not incorporated.

Mr. Holt: The gentleman we sent down to make the investigation will find out whether it is incorporated or unincorprated.

Mr. Howard: There were only two or three brokers here, as far as any of the records show there in the papers or anywhere else.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Turn to page 10, Manassas Gap Railroad Company. Have you set down any market quotations on the stock of that company for any year in your exhibit?

A. No.

Q. You have undertaken, however, to give the market quotations on bonds of that company for 1860 and 1863?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: There were 17 brokers here in 1860.

Mr. Howard: I had no such idea.

The Master: The directory entertains that idea. That simply shows that we cannot trust to memory away back there.

Q. Is anything said about bonds of the Manassas Gap Railroad Company in the supplemental answer of the defendant filed in this cause?

A. No, sir

Q. They are not claimed anywhere by the defendant as an asset, are they?

A. The Manassas Gap? Not the bonds; no, sir.

Q. Page 11, Richmond & Danville Railroad Company, stocks. You have given certain quotations here upon the stock of that Company, market quotations during the year 1860. They are set down as 60, 60, 60 and 58 upon various dates. Do you know whether those quotations represent sales or offers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge upon the same subject with respect to quotations on that stock set down by you during the year 1861?

A. No, sir.

Q. During the year 1863?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Holt: It is understood, I believe, your Honor, that in the amended or supplemental schedule it will give this additional information upon this stock.

The Master: Yes, the additional information inquired for is to apply to every item on that schedule so far as applicable. That is understood, is it, Mr. Potter?

The Witness: Yes, sir, I will provide that.

Q. Page 12, Richmond & York River Railroad Company, stocks. Did you find any market quotations upon the stock of that company for the year 1860?

A. No, sir.

Q. For the year 1861?

A. No, sir.

Q. You found nothing but quotations, which you have set down, during the year 1863?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any market quotations upon the stock of the Richmond & York River Railroad Company during the year 1861?

A. I don't know.

Q. Either in New York, Baltimore or Richmond?

A. I do not know.

Q. Or in any place else?

By the Master:

Q. All you can say about that is, I suppose, that you instructed your assistants to get them if they were in existence, and their reports were negative on those points?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that it?

A. That is it, yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Did you find any market quotations upon the stock of the South Side Railroad Company for years 1860, 1861, 1862 and 1863?

A. No, sir.

Q. There were none, were there?

A. I do not know.

Q. Well, if there were no market quotations they could hardly enter into the valuation of the stock as a factor, could they?

A. Obviously.

Q. Turn to page 13, please, Mr. Potter, Virginia Central Railroad Company, stocks. You have quotations here upon the stock of that company for the year 1860, the year 1861, and the year 1863. Do you know upon what transactions those quotations were based?

A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know whether they were bids, offers, or sales?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or how much was involved in the transaction?

A. No, sir.

Q. What was the quotation on that stock, as given by you, upon the date nearest to January 1, 1861?

A. January 4, 1861.

Q. What was the quotation?

A. 50.

Q. Upon the next nearest date to January 1, 1861?

A. January 11, 1861.

Q. What was that quotation?

A. 47 1-2.

Q. Upon the next nearest date?

A. January 18th.

Q. Was it January 18, 1861, or December 14, 1860?

A. January 18th would be a little nearer, one day.

Q. What was that quotation?

A. 47 1-2.

Q. What was it upon December 14, 1860?

A. 50.

Q. Page 14, Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company, stock. Did you find any market quotations for the year 1860?

A. No, sir.

Q. 1861?

A. No, sir.

Q. You only found two quotations, and they were in the year 1863?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. One was July 24th of that year, 115, and the other September 3d of that year, 135?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you search the New York papers for the purpose of ascertaining whether they contained any market quotations upon this stock for 1860 or 1861?

A. I do not think so, Judge; I am not sure.

Q. Did you examine the Baltimore papers with the same view?

A. No; we made no examination of any Baltimore papers. The quotations that I have indicated here as coming from the Baltimore Exchange are quotations found in the Richmond Dispatch.

Q. Then all of your quotations, as I understand, are derived from the Richmond Dispatch, wherein they state the New York, the Baltimore and the Richmond quotations, is that correct?

A. Well, with the exception that there was one file of the New York Times which we examined, and it is indicated there New York Times, New York Exchange. If it says Richmond Dispatch. New York Exchange, it means the quotations on the New York Exchange reported to the Richmond Dispatch or the Daily Dispatch.

Q. However, no quotations were found anywhere upon the stock of this company for the years 1860 or 1861?

A. No, sir.

By the Master:

Q. Then the files of the New York papers have not been examined for the purpose of ascertaining what the conditions were in connection with any of these stocks or bonds; that is, I mean the files in New York?

A. I had an inquiry addressed to the Financial Chronicle, but I could not get any satisfactory information from that paper.

Q. What do you mean by an inquiry addressed to the Financial Chronicle?

A. I sent to one of my partners and had him go there and see if they had files, and they did not.

Q. You mean to say that the Financial Chronicle did not have files of the New York newspapers?

A. No, they did not have their own files.

Q. They did not have any files that went back that far?

A. No, sir. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle is the full name.

Q. They did not have any files that went back that far?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not pursue the investigation far enough to go to the New York Times office or the New York Herald office or the office of any of the New York papers which were current publications of those dates?

A. No, sir, my inquiry—

Q. Your inquiry as a matter of fact did not go so far as to go through the files of the New York newspapers that were then published?

A. No, sir.

Q. Which undoubtedly contain all of the New York Stock Exchange quotations of that period?

A. No, we did not make such examination.

Q. So what that would disclose does not appear in this record, as to market values or as to quotations upon these various stocks or bonds?

A. No, sir.

Q. What is the reason?

A. I do not know that there is any reason.

Q. Well, you get it. I would like to have that in the record. I do not care which paper you go to. I suppose the Times or the Herald or the Sun or any of those papers. Take any of those papers and give us what they show over this period in relation to these stocks and bonds.

The Master: If we are going into that subject we might just as well exhaust it; don't you think so, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: I see no objection in the world.

Mr. Holt: We were just contemplating sending a man there for that purpose.

The Master: The understanding is that that is to be done, that a schedule is to be furnished—of course we do not have to stop for that. Which paper do you prefer to take, Judge?

Mr. Holt: I should be inclined to leave that to the gentlemen who make the investigation. They may take more than one.

The Master: I imagine of course, subject to typographical errors, I never have known any instance where one financial column was not a duplicate of the other.

Mr. Holt: Either one of those papers, the Herald or the Times.

The Master: I suppose the New York Herald is considered as good a financial authority as any paper in the country. Suppose we have the New York Herald.

Mr. Holt: The New York Tribune during the war seems to have been looked upon with some favor.

Mr. Anderson: I expect any one of those great dailies would give an accurate report of each day's quotations on stocks. I applied to the present president of the New York Stock Exchange, Mr. Noble, who is a friend of mine, for information with the object of getting evidence about this matter, and he told me after inquiring into the matter that there was no record kept of transactions of the New York Stock Exchange during the war, and that the only source of information was what your Honor suggested, the daily papers, the great dailies of New York. Their reports would be the only things available.

The Master: I think that is true. I suppose we would all concede that while the late lamented H. G. had charge of the Tribune, that some departments at any rate were very valuable authority. Whether H. G. knew as much about finance as he thought he knew about some other things may be a question of some doubt.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Page 15. I see you have upon that page of Exhibit 2 the heading, one column, James River and Kanawha; the second column, Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Company, and the third column, Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company, and in each of these columns you have certain years purporting to give quotations, but nothing to indicate whether they were market quotations upon bonds or stocks. Which do they represent?

A. Stocks.

Q. Take the first item, James River and Kanawha Company, what did you find to be the market quotation on the stock of that company on November 2, 1860?

A. I think it is 18 1-4, may be 18 1-2.

Q. Which is it, a quarter or a half?

A. My copy is blurred.

Q. It is a half here.

A. 1-2.

Q. What was it quoted at on November 9, 1860?

A. The same.

Q. Is it not true that all the quotations during the year 1860 on the stock of that company are the same?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It stood as shown then by this schedule as having a market value from November 2d to December 14th of 18 1-2, a value of 18 1-2?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it for March 1, 1861?

A. 18.

Q. It seems to have been pretty regular as shown by that exhibit?

A. The quotations indicate that.

Q. Would that indicate a uniform value in the market without much fluctuation?

A. I think so. We have no quotations between December 4th and March 1st.

By the Master:

Q. Why would not it indicate that the stock was inactive?

A. Yes, it would.

Mr. Holt: Would it indicate that, your Honor, or would it indicate that it just stood uniform and not subject to fluctuation?

The Master: I suppose when you get right down to it, it is probable that some stock broker would have more intelligent information about that than perhaps any of us have.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now, you have given the market quotations likewise for the stock of that company during the year 1863. What was the lowest quotation during that year?

A. 19.

Q. What was the highest?

A. 22.

Q. And what the intermediate quotations?

A. 20, 20 1-2.

Q. Then it ran from 19 to 22, did it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have given the market quotations of the Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Company for 1860?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Uniformly at 64?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in 1861 running from 57 1-2 to 64?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in 1863 at 140?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get the market quotations on the stock of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company for the year 1860?

A. From the Richmond Dispatch.

Q. Does your exhibit show that?

A. There is a foot note on that page, and if it is not on your copy, it is an oversight.

Q. I have another copy with the foot notes on it, but it is not there. From the same source during the year 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And 1863?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would like to inquire now whether you consulted the present market quotations of that road?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then you have no knowledge or information upon that subject?

A. No, sir. I have heard it stated once or twice, but I do not remember what the figures were.

Q. Is it not a fact that the stock of that company is now selling at 320?

A. I don't know.

The Master: Which one is that?

Mr. Holt: Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac. I will want to file a memorandum on that, your Honor, but it must be borne in mind that that was never disposed of.

The Master: If there is one thing surviving and seemingly healthy and vigorous, that would be a good idea to have it shown.

Mr. Holt: There is another thing that might be shown as we go along, and I will ask him that question.

Q. All of these railroad companies and other corporations whose securities have been listed in the supplemental answer, that survived the Civil War, went right out of one system of currency into another without any jar, did they not?

A. I couldn't answer that question; I don't know.

Q. Have you any evidence that any of them ever changed their securities or anything of that kind, just moved right along out of one regime into another, didn't they?

A. I don't know. I have not made any inquiry looking toward the ascertainment of that fact.

Q. Did not the report of the Auditor of the Commonwealth of Virginia indicate that?

A. I have no knowledge of any such statement in the Auditor's report.

Q. Have you any evidence anywhere or knowledge that would lead you to believe that their securities were changed or that they did anything but go right along?

A. No, sir, I have no information on that point.

Mr. Holt: Now, I do not want to take the time, your Honor, to detail all the stocks mentioned in the supplemental answer, but I will perhaps cover my point by this question:

Q. Have you set forth in this schedule all of the market quotations that you were able to find upon the stocks of the various companies mentioned in the defendant's supplemental answer?

A. To the best of my knowledge and belief, yes, sir.

Q. So quotations have not been obtainable upon the stocks enumerated in the supplmental answer save and except those set down in your Exhibit No. 2?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Holt: Of course your Honor sees our point.

The Master: Certainly. Now, I am going to give this instruction in relation to this matter of the schedules, provided it is acceded to by both sides. This schedule of course has got to be very elaborately amended. Now, my judgment is—please note what I am saying—my judgment is that the convenience of all concerned is going to be served by striking out this schedule that is now in, and putting in its place this new schedule. This new schedule must show these things: first, a column showing the amount, that will show the amount of the transaction; second, whether it is asked or bid or a sale. Now, there are four columns that must appear in the amended or revised schedule. Each one of these stocks and each one of these transactions must appear, if they do appear, under all of those four heads; amount, asked, bid, sale. Now, that will have to be done in relation to every one of these items; and when we get the new schedule, it seems to me it will absolutely supersede this old one; and my judgment is that the printing of the old one in the record will be a matter of no consequence; I shall not look at it, the new schedule is the one I shall go by, I do not care anything about the old one. And the new work that is done must be done on the same basis; there must be columns, so that when I look at it and the counsel look at it they will see right off the amount of the transaction. Of course if it is simply a bid or an offer, there is not anything under the column of the amount; if it is a sale, the amount of the transaction will appear. My own opinion is that this amended schedule is the only schedule that is worth while at all to print. Of course that renders a good deal of Mr. Holt's cross-examination entirely unnecessary, but when we get this amended schedule that will render a large amount of his cross-examination unnecessary, because it will show just exactly what he developed on the cross-examination. My idea would be to strike out the first schedule and not print it at all, and simply print this completed schedule as the original schedule, and that will cover everything that he has in here, and it will cover everything that the accountants are able to find by this examination in New York. Now, if it is agreeable to both sides, I will give that instruction. Of course, strictly speaking, you will have to agree; if they do not agree, this schedule that has been put in, you will duplicate that schedule practically with the information that we are going to have. Now, as far as I am concerned I shall never look at the original schedule, it is not worth my while. The final schedule will give me all the facts. And the Court won't look at it. Of course if you feel under the circumstances you have some advantage by having the record disclose that it is your cross-examination that has developed the necessity for amending the schedule, that you are entitled to and that you will have. Unless you do feel that, I will wipe that all out and simply put in the completed schedule.

Mr. Holt: Your Honor, the other day when Mr. Hillman was on the stand the cross-examination resulted in the correction of a schedule.

The Master: Yes.

Mr. Holt: Our friends insisted on the original schedule remaining and the corrected one going in.

The Master: That is right, they did.

Mr. Holt: And we would prefer that in this case. Because while the Master may not look at it, it may cause some comments.

The Master: You are entitled to the benefit of that.

Mr. Harrison: It is pefectly agreeable to us that that be done.

The Master: I am by no means certain that if I was in the position of the counsel for West Virginia, I would not insist on that. Of course your cross-examination led to the instructions to prepare this final schedule, and so far as that bears on any of the issues you are entitled to the benefit of it. Now, will you proceed with the cross-examination further?

Mr. Holt: And I have just been handed a little pamphlet, your Honor, of the Richmond Stock Exchange; it seems to have been organized April 8, 1873.

Mr. Harrison: I would like to ask that you suspend at this point in order that we may put on the stand Mr. John L. Williams, and one or two witnesses who have come in and who cannot remain here until after the lunch hour.

The Master: When we have the transcript printed it will be printed right along in its order, but for the convenience of the parties we will suspend here and take their testimony.

Mr. Holt: We have no objection, Your Honor. I think perhaps it is in the interest of expedition, and perhaps a matter of courtesy. And one other thing, too, perhaps I should call your attention to, Your Honor. I have just been handed a note to this effect; there is a file of the New York Herald for 1860 and 1861 in the library, upstairs.

The Master: That does not cover 1863.

Mr. Holt: No it does not.

The Master: It may be that you could work out as a matter of convenience 1860 and 1861, right here, and then finish 1863 in New York. However, consult your convenience about that.

JOHN L. WILLIAMS,

called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, being duly sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, testified as follows;

The Witness: That is a little hard thing to say, sir; I am here to give testimony about things that occurred sixty years ago. It is hard to tell whether I am telling the truth or not. I am not telling anything wrong deliberately.

The Master: You will do the best you can.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Holt: I think he exhibits enough conscience to be reliable, as far as I can see.

DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Williams?

A. Where I have lived for 83 years, sir, Richmond.

Q. The city of Richmond?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. Banker.

Q. Where is your place of business? In what community or city?

A. In Richmond.

Q. How long have you been engaged in the banking business in the city of Richmond, Virginia?

A. Lets see, 1868, I think—hold on a minute, no, it was 1858. Now you can calculate. Between fifty and sixty years, sir.

Q. Since what year have you been engaged in that business in the city of Richmond?

A. Since about 1858, I think, sir.

Q. Have you been engaged in that business alone or as a member of a firm?

A. As a clerk with John A. Lancaster & Son in 1858. After that, during the war, I was a member of the firm of Lancaster & Company. Well, then, in 1873 they broke, and I started on my own account, and have been in business more or less.

Q. Were you engaged then in the banking business in the City of Richmond during the entire period of the war?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From 1861 to 1865 inclusive?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state, Mr. Williams, what was the currency in circulation in Virginia and in the City of Richmond after 1862 and until the close of the war, between the States?

A. To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, sir, it was Confederate money.

Q. In what currency were the current transactions of that period conducted?

A. In Confederate money ordinarily, divers styles of Confederate money.

Q. With reference to what currency, as a measure or standard of value, were the transactions of Confederate Virginia conducted?

A. Say that again.

Q. With reference to what currency as a standard of value, measure of value, of current transactions, were these transactions conducted during that period?

A. Why, everything, all business was done in Confederate money; and gold was a commodity, a thing that was bought and sold, I suppose from 1861 on it disappeared pretty well; from the opening of the war gold was bought and sold.

Q. And disappeared from circulation?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. In what currency and with reference to what currency were the accounts and transactions of the banks in Virginia, in Confederate Virginia, conducted during that period?

A. There was never anything else but Confederate money, sir.

Mr. Holt: Now, what period is that, Major Anderson?

Mr. Anderson: The period of the war, the period from 1861 to 1865, inclusive.

Mr. Holt: But what time in 1861?

The Master: Major Anderson first started out with the inquiry by limiting it after 1862, during the war; and the examination developed that the witness made it broader, and stated that that was the fact practically after the war. You get it now, do you, Judge Holt?

Mr. Holt: When did the war begin?

Mr. Conrad: April 17th, 1861.

The Master: Is that the date when Sumter was fired on?

Mr. Anderson: April 12, 1861.

Mr. Holt: It goes into the record then that Virginia was out of the Union on the 17th of April, 1861.

Mr. Conrad: She tried to do it.

The Master: Under the authority of the Texas case we do not concede that she ever went out.

Mr. Holt: If she had not tried to do it the banks would have been worth something now. The Confederacy would have lasted about sixty days if Virginia had stayed in.

Q. Mr. Williams, in what currency were the asstes, liquid assets, of the banks represented during that period?

A. I never knew any currency but Confederate currency.

Q. In what currency were their dividends paid in 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864 and 1865?

A. Nothing that I know of, only Confederate currency; I never knew of any other.

Q. In what currency were the deposit accounts kept after 1861?

A. Nothing but Confederate money.

Q. For instance, if a man or the State of Virginia had a million dollars on deposit in any one of these banks, in what currency would it be payable?

A. In Confederate currency.

Q. Their accounts at the beginning of the war, of course, were kept with reference to gold and silver as the standard of value, at the beginning of the war, before the war began?

A. Except in the case of banks, you know, and then they stopped paying in gold; before the War we made no difference between gold and bank notes.

Q. Well, did those deposits and current assets of the banks just gradually drift into Confederate money?

A. Only Confederate money. There was no difference made—nothing said about gold at all.

Q. All payments then of current accounts were made in Confederate money during that entire period?

A. That is my recollection of it, yes, sir.

By the Master:

A. I suppose that would include payments to and payments by the banks?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Please state from your recollection what became of those State banks, the Bank of Virginia, the Exchange Bank of Virginia, the Farmers' Bank of Virginia and the Bank of the Valley of Virginia, if you know—what became of them at the close of the war.

A. My recollection is they all went out near about.

Q. All went to pieces? What do you mean, that they all went out?

A. What is that?

Q. You say that they all went out at that time?

A. All went to pieces, that is all. You know what that is, don't you?

Q. I understand you, I think, sir, very well. State whether they became insolvent, whether they could pay their deposits or their notes in full.

A. Major, they "disappeared like the baseless fabric of a vision, left not a wrack behind" except Confederate money.

Q. Did you have occasion to travel over the State to any extent?

A. No, sir—oh, look here, you are a little trying my memory. What is it you want to know?

Q. I want to know whether you had any occasion to observe the condition of the railroads.

A. Oh, no, I cannot tell you anything on that subject.

Q. What is the style of your present firm?

A. John L. Williams & Sons.

Q. Yourself and your sons?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. John Skelton Williams is a member of your firm, is he not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your oldest son?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: You may cross-examine.

CROSS EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. When, Mr. Williams, did the banks mentioned by Mr. Anderson go out or break up?

A. Now look here, you will have to talk a little louder, because I am deaf.

A. At the close of the war, sir.

Q. Do you recall the year, in what year?

A. Why the 3rd of April, the whole business, they broke up and went to pieces, in 1865. You recollect what the 3rd of April, '65, meant?

Mr. Conrad: He does not recollect. He was too young.

Q. Was it in 1865 or in 1866?

A. The Confeederacy went up in 1865 on the 3rd of April, sir. I thought everybody on the face of the earth knew that.

Q. When did the banks go up? If the Confederacy went up in 1865, did the banks go up that year?

A. I will tell you, you will allow me now, you are having your fun with me and I will tell you this. Soon after the 3rd of April, Mr. John Minor Botts met old Daniel London on the ruins of the banks. He says, "Mr. London, I am so happy to meet you here in the garden of the Confederacy." Mr. Botts was a great Yankee man. Then the banks were all burnt up, the buildings, and previous to that, a day or two before that, they had all gone with whatever they had left. I do not know what became of them.

Q. The only question I asked was the date.

A. On the 3rd of April, I suppose you might call it, was the day of their conclusion. Some suits were brought about them afterwards, but that was all that remained of them.

Mr. Holt: Do you gentlemen want to take the position that that is the fact, the 3rd of April, 1865.

The Witness: I would like very much to know what you want to know about.

Mr. Conrad: He was speaking of some suits which were brought.

The Witness: Some of them thought they would make something out of the shares, you know, and several suits I think were brought, but I never heard that any of them got anything from it.

Q. Did any of these banks have in their vaults at the evacuation of Richmond gold or silver?

A. How on the face of the earth could I know, sir; I do not know anything about the vaults and I could not tell you.

Q. And did not the Confederate soldiers rifle those vaults and carry the specie away?

A. You are asking me a whole parcel of questions. About that time we were all in a stir. The town was all on fire, but previous to that, I think the Sunday previous, we were informed that the Yankees—that General Pillsbury was coming, and then it was that everything broke, banks and Confederate officers, they made for Danville, just previous to the 3rd of April.

Q. The banks did the same thing, did they?

A. Yes, they did as far as I know; but why are you asking me things of that sort. I was only in the crowd, I could not tell you any particulars about those things.

Q. Did they make off for Danville too, the banks, did the banks cut out for Danville too?

A. That is my impression, sir.

Q. That is what you mean by that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you connected with the Northwestern Bank in any way?

A. No, sir.

Q. With the Exchange Bank?

A. No.

Q. With the Bank of Virginia, were you an officer or director or stockholder in either of those banks?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Were you an officer, director or stockholder of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia?

A. Knew nothing in the world about them, don't know anything about them.

The Master: Ask him if he knows who the officers of these various banks were at that time and then whether any of those officers are now living and if so where they are. Excuse me for the suggestion.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Williams, the names of any of the officers or directors of any of those banks in the year 1865?

A. 1865, that would be about fifty years ago, I do not recollect, I do not recall. I run away back in the past and I am a little apt to get things mixed. Old Mr. James Caskey was President of the Bank of Virginia, I think, and Mr. McFarlane of the what do you call it, the Farmers, and John Adam Smith of the—I cannot tell you a thing worth hearing.

Q. Are either of those gentlemen alive now?

A. I think they are as dead as Hector, sir, all of them.

Q. You then cannot tell me who the officers of these banks or any of them were in 1865?

A. I would not undertake to do it, sir, now.

Mr. Holt: I believe that is all.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Williams, you were employed by the firm of Lancaster & Company before the war, were you not?

A. Only as a clerk. During the war I was a member.

Q. There are certain quotations here in the Richmond Dispatch of sales of stocks and bonds. Of course you know nothing about them now.

A. Of course not.

Q. Do you know that the reports were made by your firm for publication in the Richmond Dispatch?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything as to the correctness of those?

A. No doubt if they are in the papers they came from our concern.

Q. Do you know anything as to their correctness?

A. No, sir.

Q. Not now?

A. No.

By the Master:

Q. Was there any such thing as a stock exchange in Richmond in 1860, 1861, 1862 and 1863?

A. Not that I recollect, sir. There was a stock exchange here that started after the war.

The Master: That is all.

Mr. Anderson: Much obliged to you, Mr. Williams.

The Master: Now can you proceed with the cross-examination of Mr. Potter or go on with any other witness?

(At this point Mr. Conrad made a statement which he requested the stenographer not to make a part of the record.)

Mr. Holt: We would be perfectly willing to have Mr. Conrad's statement go into the record as evidence, without his being sworn.

The Master: You may state, Mr. Holt, what you are willing to put in the record as a concession predicated on the statement of Mr. Conrad.

John F. Glenn, called as a witness in behalf of the plaintiff, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Glenn, where do you reside?

A. Richmond.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. One of the officers of the Merchant's National Bank.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. How old are you, Mr.Glenn?

A. Well, I suppose anywhere over forty years of age.

Q. Yes, I know, but so was Mr. Williams over forty years of age.

By The Master:

Q. What is your age?

A. 78.

Q. A native of Richmond, Virginia?

A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you resided in Richmond, Virginia?

A. Since 1864.

Q. And what business were you engaged in in 1864?

A. I was a book-keeper in a merchant house.

Q. In the same bank in which you are now an officer?

A. Oh, no; I was a book-keeper in a commercial firm.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Where were you living during the war between the States from 1861 to 1865?

A. From 1861 to 1864 I lived in Petersburg, or rather from the time I landed in Virginia.

Q. Are you not a native of Virginia?

A. No, sir.

Q. A native of Ireland?

A. A native of the north of Ireland.

By The Master:

Q. And in 1864 you came from Petersburg to Richmond?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that during the whole period of the rebellion you were living in the State of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. You were connected with business houses during that whole time as a clerk?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you come into the banking business?.

A. In 1866, first of April, 1866.

Q. Were the houses by whom you were employed during the war between the States engaged in the business of buying and selling property of what was the character of the business?

A. Well, one was a wholesale dry goods establishment and the other was a wholesale grocery and commercial business in Petersburg.

Q. Can you state, Mr. Glenn, from your knowledge of transactions during that period with reference to what currency all current transactions were conducted in during the period of the war in Virginia?

A. Well, all transactions were conducted generally in what was called Confederate currency.

Q. What were the exceptions?

A. Well, I don't know. I suppose that some people may have sold property for those. I don't know that I ever heard of any.

By The Master:

Q. Were general commercial and business transactions during that period so far as you know conducted upon the basis of Confederate currency as the medium of exchange?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what currency were accounts with banks and transactions of banks conducted at that time?

A. Confederate currency.

By The Master:

Q. Was there any other universal medium of exchange in the State of Virginia during that time than Confederate currency?

A. Well, some of the cities used currency known as the City of Richmond. debt.

Q. That would be in municipal currency?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But with the exception of the municipal currencies that may have been current, was there any other universal medium of exchange in Virginia during that time other than Confederate currency?

A. No, sir; none that I ever heard of.

Q. Do you say you never knew of any individual transactions that were conducted on a gold basis?

A. No.

Q. You don't go so far as to say that there may not have been transactions which were predicated upon a gold basis; there may have been individual transactions of that sort, but if they were they were not within your knowledge, is that right?

A. That is right, yes, sir.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Were railroad tickets paid for in Confederate money?

A. So far as I know.

The Master: Why do not these general questions cover your whole ground? Excuse me for interfering in the examination. My object was to facilitate.

Mr. Holt: I do not believe it was possible for any one man to know what four hundred million people did.

The Master: All the witness can do is to tell as far as he knows.

Q. From your personal observation what was the condition of the railroads of Virginia at that time, in what condition were they as to repair and condition of cars and tracks?

A. Pretty well worn out.

Mr. Anderson: That is all, I believe

CROSS EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Glenn, over what railroads in the State of Virginia did you travel during the war?

A. I do not think I traveled over any except between Richmond and Petersburg.

Q. What railroad did you use for that purpose?

A. That was the Richmond & Petersburg Railroad.

Q. Did you travel on the Richmond & Danville?

A. I don't remember, I think not though.

Q. How far is it from Petersburg to Richmond?

A. 22 miles.

Q. Then the extent of your travel during the war over the railroads was confined to 22 miles, is that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not there a State currency extant here during the war?

A. Yes, what they called Virginia Treasury Notes.

Q. That was in addition to and distinct from Confederate currency?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this municipal currency you have described was likewise distinct from Confederate currency, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there no gold in this country at all?

A. Oh, yes; there was some. I do not know how much, though there was some gold, some people hoarded their gold you know and treated it as a commodity.

Q. Any silver?

A. Well, I suppose there was some silver too.

Q. Most of it was hoarded up in the banks was it not?

A. Well, I do not know about that; I think probably that it was, except that the Confederate government had some gold.

Q. Well did not the Yankees bring any of their money around down here?

The Master: You mean of course prior to the rebellion?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

The Witness: What is that question?

Q. Did not the Yankee soldiers bring any of their money down here during the war?

A. Well, there were places in Virginia that they occupied during the war, and I suppose they did use some greenbacks in paying for anything that they bought.

Q. Well, McClellan's armies used greenbacks, didn't they?

A. Well I do not know, I suppose they did though.

Q. And General Butler's?

A. Yes, sir; I suppose so.

Q. And Pope and Burnside and Banks and Hooker, fighting Joe Hooker?

Mr. Harrison: Butler used spoons.

Mr. Holt: He did in New Orleans, and they were silver too. Well I believe that is all.

By The Master:

Q. Was there such a thing as a Stock Exchange in Richmond then Mr. Glenn?

A. No, sir.

Q. How long has the Stock Exchange been in existence?

A. Well I do not know really. I think it must have been started shortly after the war, a few years after the war.

Q. Well, was there any Stock Exchange during the years 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863 and 1864, in Richmond?

A. As I was not living in Richmond during the first three years of the war I do not know anything at all about it, and I never heard of any at any time during the war.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Glenn, you have mentioned that besides the Confederate currency there were Virginia Treasury Notes and notes issued by the cities. The notes issued by the cities were generally denominated shin plasters, were they not?

A. No, I think the little fifty cent and twenty five cent notes were called shin plasters.

Q. I will ask you whether that paper currency, that issued by the cities and that issued by the State of Virginia, passed interchangeably at par with Confederate money or not, or was that State currency at a premium?

A. No, I think not, I think it was on a par.

Q. With Confederate money?

A. Yes.

Q. It passed interchangeably?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What office have you held in the Merchants National Bank?

A. I have been a book-keeper and a cashier, and I am now second Vice-President.

Q. How long were you cashier of that bank?

A. From 1882 to about three years ago.

Mr. Anderson: That is all.

RE-CROSS EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. When did the Confederate currency pass out of existence?

A. Well, the Confederate currency passed out of circulation at the close of the war, but the Confederate currency never did go out of existence, because there is some of it stored away now.

Q. I do not mean in existence in the sense of this stuff that we see in the windows around, but when did they stop using Confederate currency?

A. Well, just around the close of the war.

Q. When was that?

A. The 3rd of April, 1865.

Mr. Holt: I believe that is all, your honor.

William H. Lucke, called as a witness on behalf of the Plaintiff, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. What is your full name?

A. William H. Lucke.

Q. What is your age and what is your occupation, Mr. Lucke.

A. 69.

Q. And what is your occupation?

A. I am associated with John L. Williams & Sons in the banking business at present.

Q. Where were you living during the war between the States?

A. In Richmond.

Q. How were you occupied, how were you engaged?

A. Well, at what particular dates do you want? Can you specify?

Q. Well, in 1862 and 1863 and 1864.

A. Well, part of the time I was in the employment of the Confederate Government, up to about 1863, I think; at that time I was with Lancaster & Company, brokers, stock brokers.

Q. Did you remain with Lancaster & Company from 1863 to the close of the war?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the currency which constituted the medium of exchange and the standard of value at that time within Confederate Virginia?

The Master: In all commercial and business transactions.

Q. In all commercial and business transactions?

A. Confederate money.

Q. Were the dividends of the banks paid in Confederate money?

A. I think so; I cannot say postively about collecting any dividends, but everything of the kind was in Confederate money.

By The Master:

Q. Does that mean, Mr. Lucke, that when the banks had disbursements to make they made them in Confederate money?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then when they had collections to make they also made them in the same Confederate money?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. That is all the transactions on either side, payments by parties to and payments of parties from were all made in Confederate money?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this State currency and the municipal currency, was that interchangeable at par with the Confederate currency?

A. To the best of my recollection it was.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Lucke, Lancaster & Company, what was their business?

A. Stock brokers.

Q. Did they do a general banking business too?

A. No, sir; they did not do a general banking business, just stock brokers.

Mr. Anderson: You may cross-examine.

The Master: Just one question.

By The Master:

Q. Is it not in accordance with your recollection that there was no stock exchange in Richmond during that period?

A. There was not.

The Master: That cleans up that schedule absolutely so far as the stock exchange is concerned.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. How old were you on January 1st, 1861?

A. 16 years old.

Q. What currency did you have here in Virginia then?

The Master: That is three months before the war opened, January 1st, 1861.

A. The notes of the various banks of this State, and gold and silver currency too at that time.

Q. You did not have Confederate currency then?

A. No, sir.

Q. When did Confederate money first come on to the stage?

A. I cannot give the exact date of that, but very soon after the Confederacy was formed.

Q. Was it in 1862?

A. I do not remember that. I cannot say when it first appeared in circulation.

Q. Were you, either in 1861, 1862 or 1863, connected with any bank in the City of Richmond?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know then personally whether they received gold on deposit during those years?

A. No, sir; I do not.

By The Master:

Q. What business were you engaged in, in 1861, 1862 and 1863?

A. Well, I was a boy then. First I was in an insurance office, then as I say, I was employed by the Confederate Government.

Q. In what capacity?

A. I was a clerk in the medical department.

Q. And then from that you went into the Lancaster concern?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. In 1863 you went with Lancaster, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Where was the Farmers' Bank of Virginia located?

A. On Main Street between 10th and 11th.

Q. How many branches did it have?

A. I do not know.

Q. And where were those branches, such of them as you do know about, located?

A. I do not remember.

Q. Were any of its branches located in the City of Richmond?

A. I think not. The mother bank was here.

Q. Where was the Bank of Virginia located?

A. Right next to the Farmers' Bank.

Q. How many branches did it have?

A. I do not know.

Q. You do not know where they were located either?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where was the Bank of the Valley located?

A. My recollection is Winchester; I am not certain about that.

Q. It was not in Richmond at all was it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know anything about it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where was the Exchange Bank located?

A. On Main Street between 11th and 12th.

Q. Did it have any branches?

A. I do not know, I cannot remember.

Q. And if it had of course you do not know where they were located?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know the location of the Northwestern Bank?

A. No, sir.

Q. It was not in Richmond, was it?

A. It was not in Richmond.

Q. How many branches did it have?

A. I do not know.

Q. You do not know where they were either?

A. No.

Q. Where was the Fairmount Bank located?

A. I do not know.

Q. It was not in Richmond, was it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did it have any branches?

A. No, sir; I do not know if it had any branches or not; it was not in Richmond.

Mr. Holt: I believe that is all.

Mr. Conrad: I am going to make another statement, not as a witness—the Confederate Government issued Confederate currency at Montgomery, Alabama, before Virginia went into the Confederacy.

The Master: We have reached the usual hour for recess. Now, we ordinarily take a recess for an hour and a half. It seems to me we are getting pretty close to the end of this case, and I want to close it to-night if I can. That lets us all get away. I was going to suggest that as far as I am concerned I would rather have a short recess of an hour. And even if we do not bother with lunch, if we can run along through until five or six o'clock, and with reasonable convenience clean everything this afternoon—now it may be that counsel can tell me whether we would be likely to clean up without any difficuty if we have the usual intermission. Of course I won't make this a short intermission unless it is agreeable to all concerned.

Mr. Harrison: We all share your feeling about getting away to-night, but we have some schedules that are not yet completed, and the chances are that we are going to run over into the morrow.

The Master: So far as these schedules are concerned, I think we could make this arrangement—

Mr. Robinson: Could we not have them handed in afterwards?

The Master: Yes, and go into the record, subject to their being agreed to by the other side. If that is all, I do not think that ought to delay us. Of course if you have anything that you want to explain about them, that is another thing.

Mr. Holt: We may not be able to understand their schedules. We might want to cross-examine upon them.

The Master: I do not insist on it.

Mr. Anderson: If the schedules are ready we can get through this afternoon.

Mr. Holt: I am ready to go right on now without an adjournment.

The Master: How would it do to suspend—if we can clean up everything I want to clean it up this afternoon; my own notion is, say we spend half an hour and come back and use the other hour that we would ordinarily use for lunch in the hope of being able to clean up and get through. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Harrison: Suppose you suspend for an hour?

The Master: I will make it an hour. We will suspend until two o'clock.

At this point a recess was taken until 2 P. M.

AFTER RECESS.

The Master: I place in the record the additional information that Mr. Hillman was requested to get for me this morning, in relation to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad. A copy of this has been handed to counsel on either side. This may be incorporated in the record.

The statement furnished by Mr. Hillman is as follows:

Memo to accompany Hillman Report on R. F. & P. R. R. Company.

Cost of Road & Property to Sept. 30, 1848.....$1,478,916.33
(Page 22 Report of 1848—Vol. of Reports 1835 to 1851 Inclusive.)

Cost of Road & Property to Sept. 30, 1849.....$1,483,199.94
(Page 9 Report of 1849—Vol. of Reports 1835 to 1851 Inclusive.)

Cost to Sept. 30, 1855:

Richmond to Acquia Creek.....	$1,531,238.40
Net Cost Superstructure	236,430.60	$1,767,669.00

N. B.—Observe change in date of report following:
Cost to March 31, 1858—

Richmond to Acquia Creek	$1,531,238.40
Superstructure	452,018.55	$1,983,256.95

Mr. Harrison: These schedules that Mr. Robinson has called my attention to are argumentative. He suggested to me that you had suggested that they might be handed to the other side and incorporated in the briefs. I would much prefer to have them in the record. There is nothing about which I imagine there is any necessity for cross-examining, but of course I am not undertaking to dictate to the other side how they shall manage their case. But as we have got all these in the record, I would just like to have the record complete.

Mr. Hogg: We introduced the case of Virginia vs. West Virginia, reported in 11th Wallace, and we did that for the purpose of showing when the suit was instituted and its objects, and we can stipulate on that exhibit.

Mr. Harrison: I cannot imagine that there is any occasion for counsel on either side to be stipulating authorities into the record. We may refer to a number of authorities. I think that may be done as a matter of course.

Mr. Hogg: I did that to show when the suit was instituted.

The Master: I am not going to take any time on these stipulations that may be made, because this record shows, in connection with every exhibit that has been put into this case that is susceptible of a stipulation, that the instruction is that the exhibit is in and is to be printed in extenso unless the parties themselves agree to a stipulation that will eliminate the necessity of the printing of the exhibit. Now that ends it as far as this hearing is concerned.

Mr. Holt: That is up to the parties.

The Master: That is the end of it as far as this hearing is concerned. And if the parties in the interest of narrowing up this record and reducing cost and expense, want to make stipulations about those things, they can do that after the hearing. Now, Judge Holt, the witness is ready for your cross-examination. I am advised by the other side that they have finished their oral testimony, except as they may have something additional from Mr. Potter, in addition to the schedules. That is right, is it not, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

The Master: I have this suggestion to make. Of course you do not need to follow this. Of course it is an absolute demonstration here now that there was not any stock exchange in Richmond during the period in controversy, and I would strike out all the examination and cross-examination on that subject.

Mr. Lilly: It may be that it ought to be affirmatively shown as a matter of law, your Honor.

The Master: As far as I am concerned I have affirmatively shown it from three witnesses myself. Unless there is somebody that can show the contrary, you may be certain that it will be found that there was not any stock exchange. That is all you want, is it not?

Mr. Lilly: It might be material to show that.

The Master: I am going to find on this record, if it is material, that up to 1866, which covers all these dates in controversy, there was no stock exchange in Virginia.

Mr. Anderson: That is in accordance with the truth.

The Master: You might save half a dozen or ten pages of this record by striking out all that testimony about the stock exchange, and then put in a stipulation.

Mr. Anderson: It runs through it so.

The Master: The finding will be that there was no stock exchange, and the result of that of course is that these sales were sales from brokers' offices so far as they were sales.

Mr. Harrison: Quotations that were advertised by the local brokers who were in business in Richmond.

The Master: Well, I do not know about that, I suppose the strict statement of that is that they were sales that were reported by the brokers to the papers as a matter of daily news.

Mr. Lilly: The evidence shows that it was mostly bids.

The Master: So far as they show anything they simply show that they were reports made by the brokers as a matter of current news to the newspapers.

Continuation of the cross-examination of

ARTHUR G. POTTER.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, you have filed an exhibit upon Class C and marked it No. 3. Take the first item thereon, Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company, loans, you have set down under the column marked par the sum of $745,341.48, and in the same line and under a column marked par the further sum of $129,365.83. Also under the same heading cash received $125,556.48. What do those three items represent?

A. You are talking about the first page, the summary?

The Master: Yes, the Orange & Alexandria, the first item. He is talking about the first two pages of Class C, and the item No. 1, Orange & Alexandria loan. His question is what do those three items represent.

The Witness: It represents a total of $398,670.50.

Q. It represents what?

A. If I get your figures right—

By The Master:

Q. You have not got the figures right. The question is this, that you have got under three headings, par $745,341.48, par $129,365.83, and then $125,556.48. What do those three items represent?

A. The total face value of the recovery by Virginia for the stock and the loan of the Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Where do you get your evidence that Virginia received $125,556.48 cash on that loan?

A. The total amount of cash that the State received was $188,179.26, of which a part applied to interest and the balance applied to the loan. It is a deduction from the facts shown in the exhibits of Mr. Hillman.

Q. From what book and from what page of that book do you derive the $125,556.48 cash item?

A. It does not appear on that item. There is no place in the books of Virginia where that particular item is given, but if you will refer to Mr. Hillman's exhibit under Orange & Alexandria you will find that there were $348,179.26 received in payment on this loan, part of which was in bonds, namely, $188,000, and the rest in cash.

By The Master:

Q. Where do you find that exhibit, in the printed exhibits or is it the 1863 list?

A. On page 17 of the exhibits.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. What exhibit is it?

A. Defendant's Exhibit 3, Asset 1.
Q. Is that 1863 or 1861?
A. 1861, page 17 of the printed exhibits.
Q. What page of the printed record?
A. 17 of the exhibits.

By The Master:

Q. See if I understand it. You say that you get that result of $125,556.48 by taking those items and adding them together and deducting that from the total, representing the amount of cash?

A. Yes, that gives the total amount of cash paid on account of principal and interest up to the date when the loan was $212,844.

Q. Up to the date when there was a balance left due of $212,-844?

A. Yes. Now, it is a matter of calculation to determine how much of that applied to interest and how much to principal, but it is all there in Mr. Hillman's schedules.

Q. And you get your information from his schedule?

A. No. I had practically the same information before and have verified his. I have conceded that his figures here are right.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. I know, but does that exhibit of Mr. Hillman show the receipt on that loan of any cash at all?

A. Why, yes.

Q. Well, where is it shown? I do not so understand it.

A. The first item, October 20th, 1862, $10,071, that probably applied all to interest. The next, October 20th, 1862, $20,000.

The Master: Now Judge Holt's suggestion is that exhibit of Mr. Hillman does not show that those payments were made in cash, and that is true, so that you cannot get the information from the exhibit per se that those payments were made in cash; now he wants to know any payments that were made in cash. That is right, Judge Holt?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

The Witness: This exhibit says paid, December 31st, 1864, $14,000. Next to that comes an item, or second from that comes an item, paid in State bonds and interest, $150,037.73. The first one is not designated as a payment in bonds, and I have proved that it was a payment in cash, from the original records.

By The Master:

Q. While he does not denominate it cash, you make that inference by reason of the fact that he specifies the others as bonds, and you say you have verified that from the original record?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you know that all the payments except those mentioned in bonds were payments in cash, is that right?

A. Yes, sir; the only way that this $125,000 can be derived is to apply the portion of the total amount here which is applicable to interest, and the balance of it applies to principal.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. What is the sum total as shown by you received upon that loan?

A. The sum total shown in my exhibit covers both the loan and the stock; it is not divided between the two.

Q. On your Exhibit No. 3?

Mr. Harrison: That is Class C.

The Master: Yes.

Q. What is the total of the three items to which I have called your attention? I will try it that way.

A. $441,662.98.

Q. That would be impossible, Mr. Potter, seven hundred and forty-five thousand and some dollars added to one hundred and twenty-nine thousand and something, plus one hundred and twenty-five thousand would make more than $441,662.98.

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: He wants to know where you get that figure.

Mr. Holt: What I want to know, before the reduction what the sum total at par received upon that loan was.

The Master: Add those three items right up.

The Witness: Yes, sir, $1,000,263.79.

Q. Now look at page 18 of the printed exhibits, Defendant's Exhibit No. 3, Asset No. 1, and tell me what the total received on account of that loan was, as shown by that exhibit.

A. I do not know what that means, that number 6.

Q. Does it not appear there that the sum total is $1,137,906.99?

A. Yes, but I think the difference is accounted for by the fact that there was interest accrued on the bonds, and I have not taken that up in my schedule.

Q. That is exactly what I am coming to. I have asked you what the sum total shown by the Hillman exhibit is, and what the sum total shown by yours, and then I will get at what I want.

A. On page 18 it says paid as follows—I do not know whether it is added together or not.

The Master: Do not stop to read the details. Give the aggregate.

The Witness: I cannot do it until I see what it means. 1 is $1,137,909.99; if that is the total, under the heading payments.

Mr. Holt: That is the way we understand it.

The Master: Well, it is the way I understand it.

Q. Now what is the explanation of the difference between your aggregate and his?

The Master: Something like $137,000 between the two. Now where is it and why for?

Mr. Holt: That is it.

The Witness: There is a difference in the amount of the bonds surrendered and the interest thereon, as shown by certain records of the State of Virginia. The Board of Public Works journal shows one amount, and the Sinking Fund register and the Funding register show another amount. And I referred this matter to Mr. Leitch, in Mr. Hillman's absence. He took the record of the Journal of the Board of Public Works, but I think the more accurate record is the Sinking Fund, and I think that accounts for the $37,000 difference.

The Master: It is $137,000 if I remember right. You had $1,137,000, and you have $1,000,000, so that there is a discrepancy of $137,000. If he cannot do that right off I will suspend a little later for a half hour to give him time to look those schedules over.

Mr. Holt: The discrepancy is established; I have asked him now to explain it, and he has said there are two different accounts given of it.

Q. Is not the explanation this, in part if not wholly, that you have not added into your payments the accumulated interest that was due at the time of the settlement, which was likewise settled as well as the principal? Is not that the explanation of it?

A. No, sir; that is not the explanation of it. If you will permit me I will explain how I arrived at a balance between Mr. Hillman's figures and mine. I have taken the par value of the stock and the balance of the loan as stated by Mr. Hillman, with which I agreed. I showed that there was received State bonds and interest and cash, so much, and there was a computation of interest on that loan for anticipated settlement of $116,959.62. The total of the items that I have used agrees exactly with the balance of the loan shown by Mr. Hillman and the par of the stock. I start with that point.

By The Master:

Q. Where do you separate, where do you get the $137,000 away from him?

A. I have a note here, "West Virginia relies on Journal entry of October 18th, 1872, in the Board of Public Works, Journal D, page 180, showing interest $186,548.49." The accumulated interest seems to be more accurately stated in the funding transaction on which new bonds were issued, $155,947.19, resulting in the difference of $30,601.30. There are several details in which we differ. I mean, they rely upon one record and I rely upon the other. There is no difference in the net result, I do not think, because the bonds themselves are not in dispute except—yes, the bonds are in dispute. There are some bonds that they have not included in the total recovery that I have included, and I rely upon the Sinking Fund Journals and the transactions shown there.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Were not the actual settlements made and recorded on Journal D?

A. No; I believe that Journal D was practically discontinued at the time of the war and the entries that followed in Journal D after the war were made in an effort to sort of balance up or straighten up the old books of the Iuternal Improvement Fund. They are not complete in every detail, and I do not think the books of the Second Auditor were ever balanced after the war, so that those journal entries in there are not specific in my opinion.

Q. Will you have Journal D brought in please so we can see just what it does show. Now, you have given no note on any of your exhibits, have you, to indicate the book, page or anything. We are just fighting around in the dark without data of that kind.

A. I believe that in all of these except Orange & Alexandria we are using the same figures that you are using in your exhibits, and having called the attention of the accountant on the other side to the difference in those bonds, I did not think it was necessary.

Q. My question was whether this exhibit of yours or any of your other exhibits shows the sources of your information.

A. No, sir.

Q. They do not?

A. No, sir.

The Master: That is inadvertent probably. The third page of the first exhibit does show the source, the third page of Exhibit 1, Class A, states: "Copied from Second Auditor's Report of December 1, 1871, Table B, page 9." I do not suppose that could strictly be understood not to be a reference to the source. In the main I think Judge Holt is correct.

Mr. Holt: That was our difficulty in checking last night. Mr. Potter was busy with other schedules and we had no reference to which we could go for the purpose of testing him at all.

The Master: Certainly.

By the Master:

Q. The fact is that with very few exceptions the items contained in your schedules do not indicate on the schedules the source from which they are derived. I suppose that is true, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir; that is true. I did not understand that it was necessary to have those references.

Q. It does not make any difference what you understood about it, as far as this question is concerned. The question is as to the fact in the first instance, and the fact is that as a rule and in almost every instance you did not refer to the original sources. Of course you, from your point of view, had a good reason therefor but the fact remains.

A. That is true.

(At this point Mr. Robinson made a statement which he requested the stenographer not to make a part of the record.)

Q. The only computations you intended to cover by these schedules are the figures entered in the reduction of the various items to their market value predicated upon what you found to be as to their price at which they were sold and quoted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not intend to go far enough to show the total amounts that may have been received on account of various securities? The total amount received covers of course principal and interest.

A. With the exception of interest.

Q. When a bond is received the bond and interest go to make up the amount of the payment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it that the total is the bond and interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what I mean. You did not undertake to show the total amount received?

A. No, sir.

Q. Because if you did it would have been necessary to have included the interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: That illustrates the point we make upon the schedule. It is based upon evidence of settlements made and does not show the full settlement.

The Master: That is the criticism of the schedule?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

The Master: I understand it.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Then as I understand you the accumulated interest up to the date of the settlement was paid but not included by you?

A. I don't understand that it was paid, no. The interest applied as a payment against the State's holdings.

Q. Well, I mean the loan with the interest on it was paid in that way.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if you were to put that interest in added to your principal, the statement would agree with Hillman's exhibit?

A. Yes, I believe it would in every instance.

Q. As a matter of fact, in the case of the Orange & Alexandria Railroad, would there not be a difference of about $200?

A. I don't know whether there would or not.

Mr. Holt: Never mind, we will not go into that.

The Master: If you wish it I will have him make that computation outside, that is, I won't stop now, but he may make it outside.

Mr. Holt: Very well, make it.

By the Master:

Q. Bear in mind, Mr. Potter, that you are to have that computed and figured, and you better come in with the details of it so that if they want to know what the details are you will be able to show it. Do not stop now to figure it out, but you are to figure it out.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Did you allow in these items the discounts for anticipated payments?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is another difference, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you may look now on that book we have caused to be brought in a moment ago, and we will see what the interest there is.

Mr. Holt: I am not going to pursue that detail. This is illustrative.

The Master: I understand. I understand the real question to be whether these are the original entries or whether this was written up afterwards; is that the point?

The Witness: This entry is dated October 18, 1872.

By the Master:

Q. And relates to a transaction of what date?

A. Under an Act of March 28th, 1871, entitled an Act directing the Board of Public Works to sell the State's interest. That is a general Act covering all of this. I presume that this October 18, 1872, is the date approximating the date of this settlement, which reads as follows: "The amount on the 28th of March, 1872, was as follows, balance of principal due on account of loan, $212,844.94; interest on same to date $43,510.92; 17,490 shares of stock $874,500; total $1,130,855.85." The account on the 18th of October 1872, adds the interest from the 28th of March, 1872, to the 28th of October, 1872, on the $212,844.94, total $7,050.11, brought down

$1,137,905.97. That is the grand total of the claim.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. That is principal and interest?

A. Principal and interest.

Q. Now, turn to page 18 of the exhibits, printed record, and tell us whether or not that same total does not appear in the Hillman exhibit.

A. Yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. Except the discrepancy of $1.02?

A. He shows that exact figure, $1,137,905.97.

The Witness: (Reading). In consideration of the above sum the following State securities were received. In State bonds and other certificates of debt, old coupons, $74,500; new coupons, $53,000; old registered debt, $665,016.48; new registered debt, $41,882.40; total, $834,398.88. Interest due to 1st July, 1871, $151,715.87; interest due from 1st July, 1871, to date, October 13th, 1872, $34,832.62. Rebate or discount allowed for anticipated payment, $116,957.58.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Coming now to the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company, you have under the same headings to which attention has been called in the case of the Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company: $58,200, $460,017.98, $16,000, $31,960.41, $352,399.46 and $33,600. Do those six items represent the full amount that was paid to the State of Virginia for her ownership in the stock of the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell me what those items aggregate?

A. As we have computed it, it is $460,777.85.

By the Master:

Q. Those six items do you mean?

A. That cannot be right.

Q. You must be mistaken about the question. Two of them amount to more than $800,000.

A. I was relying on my assistant to take them down, and he did not get them down right.

Mr. Robinson: Then, if Your Honor please, we concede that in every case here there is no interest taken into consideration in these computations. That was not the basis on which the schedule was made up. The schedule was made up on the market values only, and the market value is computed on the par, and in every instance no interest is taken into account at all.

The Master: That has already been stated. Of course if it is so it is open to them to cross-examine upon it from their point of view.

The Witness: $952,177.85.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Turn to page 20 of the defendant's exhibits and see what the total there appears to be.

A. Under column, disposed of for?

Q. Yes, that is right.

A. $1,085,636.57.

Q. What is the difference in amount between the two?

The Master: Do you wish to go through the schedule in the same method?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

The Master: Because I will have some accountant make the computations so that we don't have to wait.

Mr. Holt: I will ask a general question as to the others.

The Witness: The difference, I have not got the exact figure, Judge, I would have to sit down and work it out. But I am sure the difference is the interest and the recovery for abated interest. I have balanced my figures with Mr. Hillman's total.

Q. Then the discrepancy between the two is accounted for by the failure to include the interest settled and the interest abated—the failure to include them in your schedule?

A. Yes, sir.

The Witness: May I amend that answer please?

The Master: Yes.

The Witness: The difference is the exact amount of interest on the bonds, the abated interest—or rather the bonds received for the recovery under the law suit for this abated interest are included in my total bonds here in this schedule.

Q. So that in this particular item the difference is the omission of interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the abated interest you have included?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, turn, under the head of loan, to the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company and tell us, please, where you get your $126,903.34.

A. The total amount of bonds surrendered by the Richmond & Danville for that loan was $565,803.34, of which $126,903.34 are stated in the Sinking Fund records—I have not the page here—to be past due coupons, and $438,900 are State bonds.

Q. Who turned the $126,000 item into the Sinking Fund?

A. The Richmond & Danville Railroad.

Q. Could you give us the page for that transaction?

The Master: That is the page of the Sinking Fund account.

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

A. No, I cannot give you that.

Q. Give it to us a little later, please.

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: Look that up and put it in the record. And hand it to the other side when you find it.

Q. Mr. Potter, coming to the third item, Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Company stock, under the column par, $869,486.67, and under the other column of par $161,771.03, neither of those items, as I understand you, include the interest that was settled?

A. No, sir.

Q. And it is likewise true in the case of the Virginia Central Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you did not include interest?

A. Nor, sir; no interest included.

Q. Was interest included in the Blue Ridge Railroad Company items?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Interest included?

A. Interest was included in the settlement.

By the Master:

Q. No, but in this statement, in this schedule.

A. In this statement, no, sir.

The Master: Pay better attention then to the question. You have already stated that it was not included in any of these items. Now, you are asked about the item in detail, and you did not get the question, Mr. Potter. The question was whether interest was included in this statement.

The Witness: It is not.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Can you tell me what the interest settled was, what it amounted to?

A. $50,714.64.

Q. That is the Blue Ridge Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see you have under the head of cash in the Blue Ridge Railroad Company, $8.96. How was that paid?

A. It is described in Mr. Steger's report in 1864 as uncollected check now on hand, $8.96.

Q. In showing the amount received by the State of Virginia for its stock in the Alexandria, Loudoun & Hampshire Railroad Company, did you include interest? That seems to have been, Mr. Potter, a single cash item of $50,682.40.

A. This cash is the face of the three notes given by the Alexandria, Loudoun & Hampshire. The accumulated interest is not shown in this case.

Q. The accumulated interest is not shown?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is interest that had fallen due at the date of the settlement?

A. That is true.

Q. Is the same true with respect to the loan by the State of Virginia to the Winchester & Potomac Railroad Company?

A. There is no interest included in my schedule with respect to that.

By the Master:

Q. Is there any interest included in any of this schedule?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Do you know what the interest was in the case of the Winchester & Potomac Railroad Company loan?

A. $7,387.22.

Q. Do you know what the interest was as settled upon the loan to the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company?

A. I do not understand that the Virginia & Tennessee settled for this loan.

The Master: That is not the question. If you know anything about the interest, answer the question.

The Witness: Do you refer to the million dollar loan?

The Master: Yes.

Mr. Holt: Yes, that is item 8.

The Master: If you know anything about the question of interest, say what you know about it and all about it.

The Witness: No, I do not know anything about the question of interest without referring to my papers. I cannot testify from memory as to it.

Q. Then I believe that it is admitted by you, as stated by Mr. Robinson, that in stating upon this schedule the amounts received by the Commonwealth of Virginia, either for the stocks therein sold by her—described as sold by her—or in the settlement of the loans made by her, you did not embrace the accrued interest.

A. No, sir.

Q. That is true with respect to the whole schedule?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the loan on this schedule anywhere made by the State of Virginia to the United States Government?

A. No, sir; the amount of the claim is there; the amount of the loan is not.

Q. Well, what do you mean by the item $581,800?

A. That is the par of the bonds, Virginia State bonds, received back from the United States Government.

Q. In settlement of that loan?

A. In the adjustment of this counter account.

Q. What was the total principal and interest involved at the date of the settlement between the Virginia and the United States Governments?

The Master: He means by that in 1894, although the settlement was not made until 1903.

A. The account is stated in the records of the Auditor as $1,723,583.73, that is the total of principal and interest of this claim.

The Master: As of that date?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, the United States Government at that time settled that claim with Virginia, both principal and interest, did she not?

A. She did.

Q. And yet you have set the matter down there as being $581,800 instead of $1,130,821.31.

A. I do not concede the instead of, but I put down $581,800 as bonds received.

Q. The $1,130,821.31 shows the full amount of the claim of Virginia of that date, principal and interest, does it not?

A. Yes, sir; to February 11th, 1894.

Q. I am mistaken about the $1,130,821.31; that is calculated upon 1861. The total of principal and interest of the claim of Virginia against the United States as of the date of settlement seems to have been $1,723,582.53.

A. That is what I have just stated.

Q. Yes, but it was my mistake. Now, instead of setting that sum down you have put down $581,800?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you fastened upon that as I understand your exhibit a market value of $151,268?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then in the last or total column you carried forward the same amount, $151,268?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you mean by that entry?

A. The market value of the old unfunded bonds at the nearest date I could find a quotation was 26, under date of January 1st, 1893, and the $581,800 is reduced at 26.

Q. Well, now, Virginia received bonds, received her own bonds as I understand it from the Government of the United States in settlement of that loan, principal and interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: The fact is, Judge, that one claim was set off against the other.

Mr. Holt: I understand that.

Q. She owed the Government of the United States the bonds, didn't she?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Government of the United States owed her the principal and interest of the loan?

A. Well—

The Master: Virginia owed the bonds with accrued interest, that is right, isn't it?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: There is a difference about the facts.

The Master: He understands about that, but he has asked it for another purpose. Virginia owed the United States at that time those bonds with the accrued interest thereon.

Mr. Holt: That is it, exactly.

The Master: Which amounted roughly to $1,700,000 in round figures.

Mr. Holt: Yes, and the Government of the United States owed her at the same time a loan and interest thereon amounting to $1,723,582.53.

The Master: And the little balance of cash which the United States paid to balance the matter up, $5.50.

Mr. Anderson: There is this difference between the two claims, that Virginia recognized that she owed the United States $581,000, but the United States denied that she owned Virginia a cent of it for thirty or forty years.

Mr. Holt: I would rather not be interrupted at this point with an argument on the matter, because I want to get the facts.

The Master: That is right.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Then each Government paid its debt, that is, they offset one against the other, did they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, Virginia by surrender of this loan to the Government of the United States settled an equal amount of her own bonds, principal and interest?

A. An equal amount did you say?

Q. Yes, an amount equal to the loan.

The Master: An equal amount of the bonds, principal and interest.

The Witness: An amount in excess.

The Master: Well, $5.50.

The Witness: You mentioned as to principal.

Q. Principal and interest, the question is, whether Virginia did not settle an amount of her bonds, principal and interest, aggregating that amount except this $5.50 cash.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, Mr. Potter, if you owed me a thousand dollars and I owed you a thousand dollars and we should meet and settle and offset the one against the other, why should you then thereafter in making up an account or statement showing the amount of money that you received from me or anything else discount it in any way by showing the market value of the security that evidenced my debt to you?

A. I would not.

Q. You would not?

A. No.

Q. Well, you have done it in this schedule, haven't you?

A. No, sir, because the $298,000 is not a recognized claim; it was not recognized by the Government as a claim.

Q. The Government of what?

A. The Government of the United States.

The Master: They recognized it when they paid it.

The witness: By settlement.

The Master: That does not make any difference. They recognized the liability when they paid it.

The witness: The Second Auditor's report states that the United States would never have paid it unless they had these bonds in their possession.

The Master: That all may be, but they paid it, and they recognized the claim when they paid it. We are not to understand that the United States made somebody a present of $1,700,000.

Mr. Anderson: It was a compromise settlement, there is no doubt about that.

The Master: Yes, but that does not change the fact that the United States recognized that amount of liability to Virginia and they paid Virginia in Virginia bonds with accrued interest, and now of course Mr. Potter is to explain why he makes this entry here under these circumstances.

Mr. Robinson: It is the market value of the securities, that is all.

Mr. Holt: I understand that.

Mr. Lilly: Those very bonds and accrued interest were charged in the debt, January 1st, 1861.

Mr. Harrison: No interest was charged on those bonds on the debt.

The Master: The suggestion is that these bonds were made at par a part of the aggregate of thirty million dollars indebtedness.

Q. I will ask you whether or not the Virginia bonds received by the State of Virginia in the settlement of her claim against the Government of the United States were not embraced in the debt at par that the Supreme Court of the United States has said we should pay a part of at par.

A. Yes, sir, it is so stated in our schedule.

Mr. Harrison: It is so stated in the record.

The Master: Is there anything that appears here that shows when the United States acquired these Virginia bonds? Does anybody know anything about that? Non constat the United States may have paid one hundred cents on the dollar and Virginia may have paid twenty-five cents on the dollar. I simply suggest that. Proceed.

Q. So then your exhibit is intended to show an account of your market value calculations that Virginia only received for this asset in the shape of a claim against the Government of the United States the sum of $151,268, is not that the object of the exhibit?

A. That is the intent, to show the par value, the market value at that time.

Q. And West Virginia if a settlement should finally be had upon that basis, upon the statement of our contention, would be entitled only to 23 1-2 per cent. of $161,268, instead of 23 1-2 per cent. of $1,723,582.52, isn't that true?

A. That is the intent of the schedule. Personally I would not admit it at all.

Q. That is the object of the schedule.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I know you would not agree to it, as far as that is concerned. Would you deem that equitable to make us pay par on bonds and get credit where we happened to own some of the same bonds not for par but for ten cents on the dollar?

Mr. Harrison: If your Honor please, we object to that question. There is no use of addressing an argumentative question to the witness as to what his opinion may be about a thing.

The Master: I allowed a question of that same character to be propounded to Mr. Hillman.

Mr. Harrison: I do not remember propounding any question of that sort to Mr. Hillman. The schedule is made up as he was instructed to make it up. He has put it in at the market value for whatever it may be worth, and whether we will contend for the market value or——

The Master: I think on cross-examination I am not going beyond the limit to allow him to answer that question. There was more or less general examination of that character with reference to Mr. Hillman on that line; but whether there was or not, I would not want to say it was beyond the legitimate scope of the examination of an expert witness for what it may be worth.

Q. (Question repeated.)

A. I do not know that I can answer that question; I do not understand it.

Q. Would that be common sense or justice is what I mean?

The Master: I do not suppose that makes your question any more clear.

Mr. Holt: We will let the answer stand as it is.

The Master: Were you going to pass from that item?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

By the Master:

Q. What did you do with the interest that was accumulated on these bonds, on the basis of reduction to par value, the interest being in the neighborhood of $1,200,000. I do not see any mention made of interest, but as a matter of accounting, if you predicated the bonds on this par value what do you do with the accrued interest of this $1,200,000?

Mr. Holt: Throw that away altogether?

The witness: I did not understand that you were addressing the question to me.

Q. Oh, yes. What did you do with the interest?

A. Nothing. I have not considered it.

Q. Well, what would you do with it in this case as an accountant?

A. In this case I do not think it ought to be treated at all. It is a counterclaim.

Q. That does not answer the question at all. In stating this account if you predicated a market value upon the stock that is a factor that enters into the settlement, and on that stock about $1,200,000 of interest was computed, what would you do as an accountant with that interest on that same general theory?

A. I cannot answer the question because there was interest on the other side of the account of almost an equal amount. It is perfectly true that it covered a different period, but in view of the circumstances and what I have seen reported in connection with this claim, I would not consider such a claim at all. I think it ought to be turned out of this calculation altogether.

Q. That does not answer my question, it does not come within a hundred miles of it.

A. I want to answer your question if I can.

The Master: If that is the best you can do I will leave it right there.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. You would not consider it at all, but as a matter of fact all this indebtedness of Virginia, covered by this claim of hers against the Government of the United States, constituted a part of the debt prior to 1861, of Virginia, did it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: We have to do something with that, is what is troubling us. It does not seem to be worth anything on the credit side, but a tremendous amount on the debit side.

Mr. Anderson: He said he would not either charge it or credit it.

Mr. Holt: I think we have all the facts on the subject, your Honor.

The Master: Yes, I think we have all the light we can get.

Q. Now we will turn back a little ways to some of these we inquired about a moment ago. We find that in the case of the Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company, Virginia received in settlement of the loan she had made to that company $745,341.48 and $129,365.83, exclusive of interest, and $125,556.48; and she received in payment of that loan as I understand you, her own bonds issued outside of the cash indicated by you?

A. Yes.

Q. Then that amount of her public debt was cancelled, was it not?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. And that was a part of her debt existing prior to January 1st, 1861?

A. The $745,341.48 was.

Q. And it was treated as a payment by her, was it not, on that debt of hers? She gave up the loan in payment of it, didn't she?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you, instead of taking those bonds at par, as she did, reduced them to 57 cents?

A. 44 cents.

Q. No, reduced them to 44 cents. And upon the theory of market value you make it appear in this schedule that she received much less than the par value of her bonds caused to be cancelled by her, is not that so?

A. That is the intent of the schedule, yes, sir.

Q. The object being to show that although West Virginia may have to pay 23 1-2 per cent. of those same bonds at par, as being a part of Virginia's debt prior to January 1st, 1861, yet when you come to the credit side she is only to receive 23 1-2 per cent. of a much less sum, is that the object of the schedule?

A. I do not—

Mr. Robinson: If your Honor please, I object to that question. If they want to argue this case here we are prepared to do it now. Joint Exhibit No. 1 of the old record shows on its face clearly that these bonds, as they existed in 1861, included the bonds received from the United States and bonds subsequently received by Virginia, surrendered to Virginia in exchange for the stock of the Board of Public Works; and on the face of that statement West Virginia admitted that she was to be charged with these bonds, and that finally was found on her admission. I do not understand that the filing of a supplemental answer revokes that admission made by West Virginia, and in the face of that admission I do not see how the amount of bonds outstanding is to be cut down. The only other theory with which Virginia could be charged with the value of these assets received is their market value, and their market value is found by multiplying their par by the market quotation.

The Master: The only question before me is whether or not this question submitted by Judge Holt is a proper question on cross-examination.

Mr. Robinson: In the light—

The Master: Yes, in the light of everything. And the proper light on this question is that Mr. Potter produces a schedule, the purpose of which he is supposed to know. Now Judge Holt wants to know what its purpose was, and he wants to probe his purpose, as I understand, for the purpose of discovering what the whole purpose was.

Mr. Holt: Of course.

The Master: Here is his schedule. If it is not his purpose, if somebody else instructed him, I do not know anything about that. But he has a purpose and he has made the schedule, and the Judge has a right on cross-examination to probe that purpose clear to the end. I think the question is competent for that reason.

A. I have prepared the schedule at the direction of counsel, the purpose of which I possibly anticipate, but I am not absolutely clear as to what use will be made of it.

The Master: The question is directed to you as to what your purpose is; is not that so, Judge Holt?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

The Master: That is a perfectly proper inquiry. He wants to know what your purpose was, and if you have answered it fully why that covers the ground, unless the Judge wishes to pursue it further.

The Witness: My purpose was to show the total par value of the securities received by Virginia in payment of debts due her, and the net value of such payments.

The Master: Of course I have got to pass on the testimony of the witness, it is not the ultimate effect on the case itself. And I am going to be extremely liberal as I have already indicated, on these rulings. I want counsel on both sides to feel that they have all the decent latitude that they need or could under any circumstances be entitled to.

Q. In the case of the loan made by the State of Virginia, Item No. 7, to the Winchester & Potomac Railroad Company, you show at par that she received thereon the sum of $45,000. Is that correct?

A. $45,000 of the bonds—of issues prior to 1861.

Q. Prior to 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how much as par of other bonds?

A. $36,130.90.

Q. Making a total of how much?

A. $111,130.90.

Q. Then by taking the quotation of the old bonds, at 53 1-4 I believe it is, you ascertained the market value of the bonds aggregating $45,000 to be $23,962.50?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. $66,130 of the new bonds, at 53 cents, to be $45,039.48.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those two amounts you added together and got your total of $59,011.88?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As the real value of the bonds that at par aggregated one hundred and eleven thousand and some dollars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those bonds were the debt of Virginia, were they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And she took them up, settled them, and cancelled them, did she not?

A. I cannot state positively that she cancelled them. Some bonds were taken into the Sinking Fund and funded, and were in the possession of the Sinking Fund Commissioners, but the effect would be the same I suppose.

Q. In other words they were not out in the hands of other people?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, there would be considerable difference between them, making a calculation between 23 1-2 per cent. of one hundred and eleven thousand dollars and fifty-nine thousand dollars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now the same process of reduction of value has been indulged in by you in the case of the Norfolk & Petersburg Railroad Company loan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Roanoke Navigation Company stock?

A. No, that was sold for cash.

Q. That was sold for cash?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. The same thing is true, so far as bonds and stock exist, in relation to every item on this schedule, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: That covers that point.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now what is the date of the market quotations that you have used here on these bonds of Virginia?

A. Those dates are shown in the sub sheets, for instance Orange & Alexandria, October 17th, 1872.

Q. Is the quotation of 44 in the case of Orange & Alexandria a quotation of 1872?

A. Yes, sir, the nearest date that I can find to that date is October 17th.

Q. Well what is the date of the quotation given opposite Richmond & Danville Railroad Company?

A. December 13th, 1870.

Q. Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Company?

A. I beg your pardon, there are three dates under Richmond & Danville, 1870, 1871 and 1877.

Q. Richmond & Petersburg, the quotation being 66.

A. We have used an average of the market quotations between March and September, 1871, on there.

Q. Now the date, please, of the quotation with reference to the Virginia Central Railroad Company, which is 73.

A. 1871.

Q. Without detailing any further, do any of those market quotations relate to the years 1860, 1861, 1862 or 1863?

A. No, sir.

Q. Turning now to that portion of the exhibit under discussion, No. 3, that falls under the heading bonds; that treats, as I understand it, only of the bonds of the railroad companies named therein?

A. The State bonds surrendered by the railroad companies.

Q. They were surrendered at their par, were they not?

A. Yes, sir, they were.

Q. And you have reduced them by the same process on the subject of value?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom were they surrendered?

A. I believe they were actually surrendered to the Board of Public Works, and later on turned over to the Sinking Fund.

Q. They were surrendered, however, to the Commonwealth of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: Have counsel for Virginia any additional schedules other than those that have been handed to the other side?

Mr. Robinson: We have some typewritten exhibits.

The Master: Are they schedules?

Mr. Harrison: Here is one schedule.

The Master: Hand it to the other side.

Q. Mr. Potter, turning now to the residue of this exhibit No. 3, under the heading of cash, I suppose you mean by that cash paid by the various railroad companies therein named to the Commonwealth of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have reduced all of those cash payments to a lower level by the same process of market quotations, have you not?

A. No, only those that antedated the close of the war, only those received during the Confederate period.

Q. What proportion of those cash payments were made by those roads to the Commonwealth after 1865 or the close of the war?

The Master: Roughly speaking, give the percentage.

The Witness: I should say a little more than half was received after the war. That is very rough, I have not been able to compute.

Q. The reason I asked the question was because this schedule at least does not show the date of the payments.

A. I beg your pardon, Judge, it does in every instance.

Q. Then I have overlooked it.

A. The dates are put down below as to the first one. There are two stars in front of the $125,556, and carried down below.

By the Master:

Q. Nearly fifty per cent. were received after the war period?

A. Yes.

Mr. Holt: I thought he said more than fifty per cent.

Q. What did you say?

A. I cannot tell without going over it.

Q. In the neighborhood of fifty per cent. were received after the war period, and as to those items you have made no reduction to the gold basis?

A. No, sir.

Q. And that appears in your schedule, is that so?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now why didn't you reduce those to a gold basis, would not greenbacks have satisfied you?

A. I do not quite understand that there is any object of satisfying me in the matter.

The Master: If you have any personal reason state it. Just answer that question; it is up to you. You have made the schedule, and it is a perfectly proper question. Now then, why did you make that reduction? You had some reason.

The Witness: Because, when this money was received by the State it was worth in gold a certain amount, a certain amount less than its face, as is shown by an exhibit in the former case.

By the Master:

Q. The further question is why you did not make the computation in greenbacks instead of gold, greenbacks being at that time a legal medium of exchange. Answer that.

A. I do not think greenbacks were a medium here, I think Confederate notes were about the only medium. There was some gold and silver.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Gold does not seem to have been a medium here then, does it?

A. Not a very common one.

By the Master:

Q. Neither was a medium of exchange, is not that true?

A. I believe Confederate currency was the only medium of exchange.

Q. Neither gold nor greenbacks was what we have been denominating here a medium of exchange within the Confederate lines or within the State of Virginia?

A. I think not.

Mr. Holt: He has denominated both as real money.

The Master: Does that conclude that schedule, Judge?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

The Master: I am going to suspend for half an hour in order to give the counsel for West Virginia an opportunity to examme the schedules that have just been submitted to them by the other side; and if half an hour is not enough I am going to wait so that they can with satisfaction to themselves and intelligently cross-examine in relation thereto. I do not want you to feel that you have got to rush about it, but if you can do it in half an hour and make the examination you may, and if not take more time. We will resume, unless Judge Holt is not ready to complete his cross-examination, in a half hour.

Is there any detail you can put in while they are having the intermission for this purpose, because if there is I would like you to get it together. As far as your exhibits are concerned, he will come along with those.

Mr. Harrison: We will have some things to put in.

The Master: What I mean is to be ready to put it in as soon as we finish the cross-examination of Mr. Potter. I want to say this, that the mere fact that the accountants may not have an opportunity to check up these schedules will not in my judgment constitute a justifiable occasion for delaying the whole hearing, because it can be done later.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, we will now briefly take up Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 4. As I understand it, you simply take the claims made by the defendant in its schedule covering Class D in the supplemental answer and reduce those amounts to a gold basis; is that true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The tables for the accomplishment of which appear on page 647 of the original record?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not those were at a premium on the 1st day of January, 1861?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. I notice that you make no reduction of these claims of ours as stated for the year 1861 or as of the date of January 1, 1861; is that so?

A. All payments in 1861 were taken at the State's values.

Q. They were not reduced then to a gold basis?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, if gold were at a premium on January 1, 1861, why would not you reduce them to a gold basis the same as you had reduced them on such premiums in subsequent years?

A. Because the premium was very small in 1861, and I believe the quotations that went in the record began in the latter part of that year.

Q. You say now they were very small, and you just told me a moment ago you didn't know whether gold was at a premium in 1861 or not.

A. I am speaking now to the subject of whether the Confederate notes were at a discount, not whether gold was at a premium.

Q. Well, there were no Confederate notes on January 1st, 1861?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any way of telling us whether or not gold was at a premium on January 1st, 1861?

A. I might ascertain. I believe I could, but I have no knowledge at this time.

Q. Does not page 647 of the original record show a premium on gold in 1861?

A. I do not know: I would have to refer to the record.

Q. Please look at it and see what it does show for that year.

The Witness: There does not seem to be one in the court room. I will get one.

(Book produced.)

Q. (Question repeated).

The Witness: In answer to your question, Judge, I believe this table you refer to is the table of Confederate values in gold. Is that what you have reference to?

Mr. Holt: No, I had reference to the premium on gold in another currency before Confederate currency came into being.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Do you find it on the page that you refer to?

A. No.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Does not the page 647 referred to show a premium on gold as compared with Confederate currency in the year 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, if you are going to reduce us to a gold basis in 1863, on account of gold premiums, why didn't you reduce us for the year 1861 in the same way?

A. There is no particular reason, except that the premium was so slight that we did not consider it.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Weren't you taking the account as of the 1st of January, 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any gold reduction on January 1st, 1861?

A. No, sir.

The Master: The question was as to whether or not there was some premium on Confederate money during the year 1861, and the answer was that there was, and then Judge Holt wanted to know why he did not apply that reduction to the figures in 1861; isn't that it?

Mr. Holt: Yes. I mixed Mr. Harrison or myself up by first inquiring of the particular date January 1st, 1861, and I subsequently undertook to change January to the year 1861.

Q. What is page 647 of the old record, is it an exhibit?

A. It is called Plaintiff's Exhibit E-2.

Q. Is there anything in that record showing a verification or proof or admission of the truth of that exhibit?

A. It is signed by H. Stewart Jones, Clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, in which he certifies it.

Q. What does he certify it as being?

A. "I, H. Stewart Jones, Clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, certify that the foregoing is a true extract from the record of Dearing's administratrix vs. Rucker, decided by the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia at its April Term, 1868, and that the table therein copied showing the value of Confederate States Treasury notes at various times during the war, is the only table filed, or to be found in the record of said cause. Given under my hand this the 1st day of July, 1909. H. Stewart Jones, Clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia."

Mr. Holt: We submit that that does not establish the premiums set forth there.

The Master: You take the ground that it is not competent evidence?

Mr. Holt: It is incompetent evidence for that reason.

The Master: Then the other side can take note of that and govern themselves accordingly. I shall let it stand of course for the time being, and if the other side think it necessary to bolster it then it is up to them.

Mr. Harrison: We do not propose to debate the question.

The Master: They take the ground that it is not competent evidence tending to show the value of Confederate money at that date.

Mr. Harrison: That question we do not propose to debate.

The Master: Very good.

Mr. Holt: I am simply saving the point, and if it is worth anything will discuss it later.

The Master: Precisely so, and if the other side see fit they can rest on the case as it is, and that they say they will do, so we do not need to take any time discussing it.

Mr. Harrison: I do not see any use discussing it.

The Master: Not the slightest on earth.

Mr. Anderson: I think it is too late to raise the question.

The Master: That is a matter that you will take up later.

Mr. Anderson: You will find that has been established again and again in Virginia.

Mr. Holt: That may be, Mr. Anderson. Our point may be worth nothing, that may be true, I don't know.

The Master: That gives the other side notice that you raise it.

Q. In this Exhibit No. 4, as I understand it, you have not embraced any of the items of interest, but have taken simply principal sums and reduced them?

A. No; this exhibit shows all of the items taken up in your Class D, income, it is all interest, as I understand, interest and dividends.

Q. Well turn over to page 2 of the exhibit and see whether or not you embraced under item 13 interest on loan collected by Virginia from the Government of the United States.

A. I will have to acknowledge that I did not. With that exception my former statement stands, I believe.

Mr. Holt: I believe, your Honor, that our accountant tells us that the amounts in these columns as taken from our Exhibit D are correct.

The Master: Well, I am not going to hold the parties today or require them to agree to a verification of the schedules that have been recently submitted by Virginia, because I think it is fair to give the accountants on the other side more time to make the examination if they desire it. The understanding will be, when we suspend, that these schedules that have been submitted by Virginia are subject to verification by the accountants on the other side at the convenience of the accountants within the next few days. If it should turn out that they do not agree on any of these items, why the items in disagreement will have to be submitted to me at the time of final argument, with such comments or testimony as the parties may have, and I will pass on them at that time. I do not think I would be justified in delaying the hearing for the purpose of getting at the result of the verification by the accountants. I assume they will probably agree. Of course if the verification by the accountants of West Virginia results in the change of any of the items, those changes of course can be made by the accountants, and it can be done in any way that West Virginia desires. If they wish the schedule to simply be corrected without it appearing that the change has been made, after the inspection by their accountant, that can be done. If on the other hand they prefer to have the record show that fact, that after the inspection by their accountants it became necessary for the accountants for Virginia to make a change in the schedule, that may be appear, if they want it to appear. Do I make that all clear now? Are you through with Class D, Judge?

Mr. Holt: Yes, that is Exhibit 4.

The Master: This cross-examination goes into the transcript in its chronological order, although taken out of its chronological order. When the examination is printed I want the cross-examination and the items put in their chronological order.

Q. No. 9 seems to be a statement of interest due October 1st, 1914, upon West Virginia's share of the debt of the undivided State of Virginia, unpaid and outstanding January 1st, 1861, computed from January 1st, 1861, according to the terms written in the bonds. As I understand the exhibit, Mr. Potter, you computed the interest to date.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Upon all bonds that were payable at the pleasure of the Commonwealth?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you computed interest upon those bonds, payable at a fixed date, to that date?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: That is to the fixed date?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir, to the fixed date.

Q. Do you recall what the percentage of the whole debt payable by West Virginia was decreed by the Supreme Court of the United States to be?

A. 23 1-2 per cent.

Q. I note in the last line on the first page of this exhibit you have this statement, percentage of whole debt payable by West Virginia, 21.2 per cent.

A. Yes, sir, that is true.

By the Master:

Q. Why is it?

A. The $7,182,507.46 as applied to the whole debt, $33,897,073.82, is only 21.2 per cent.; the original debt having been scaled or reduced somewhat by the Supreme Court in their decision. The seven millions would be 23 1-2 per cent. of the original amount.

Mr. Robinson: If your Honor will recall, under the decision of Chief Justice Holmes, he scaled West Virginia's share because he said Virginia had scaled hers. This seven millions is only 21.2 per cent.

Mr. Holt: If Mr. Robinson will permit me I will get what I want there and make it plain.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. What was the total indebtedness as found by the Supreme Court to be apportioned between the two States, was it not $30,563,861.56?

A. I have not a copy of the decree before me. I do not know.

Mr. Anderson: Here it is, Mr. Potter (handing paper).

The Witness: What page is that on?

Mr. Holt: I have the official report, page 35 of this volume.

(Question repeated by stenographer.)

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. And they further found that West Virginia's part thereof was 23 1-2 per cent., did they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, why do you change the ruling of the Court?

A. I have not changed it.

Mr. Robinson: I would like to ask Judge Holt, if he concedes that they are liable for any interest, that they are liable for 23 1-2 per cent., because we would be very glad to take 23 1-2 per cent. rather than 21.2 per cent.

Mr. Holt: You would like to take anything you could get.

A. I made the computations at the request of counsel.

Q. If you were to take 21.2 per cent. as her proportion of the debt instead of 23 1-2 per cent., and the same rules should be applied to the credits, it would make a very considerable difference, would it not?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: Does that finish that schedule, Judge?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

The Master: Now you have three schedules, as I understand it that have not yet been put in; and they have been submitted to the other side. Now, let us have the first one. What number will it be?

Mr. Robinson: This exhibit will be No. 4-A, and this is a summary of defendant's Class D as of June 20th, 1863, reducing the income therein mentioned to a basis of gold as per page 647 of the original record at the reduction as stated in the schedule and as of the time stated in the schedule. The amounts are taken from defendant's Class D, and the computations are verified by Mr. Potter and are correct. Is that right, Mr. Potter?

The Witness: Yes.

The Master: Make that Exhibit No. 4-A.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 4-A, September 11th, 1914, C. B.

Mr. Robinson: The next schedule is a summary of West Virginia's claim under Classes B, E and G as of January 1st, 1861, on the basis of the market value of the securities, with the exception of the Manassas Gap Railroad Company under Class G for which no quotation has been found. Attached to that is a summary entitled total amount of West Virginia's claim as of January 1st, 1861, taking cash at face, securities under Class C as per Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 3, income as per Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 4, securites under Class F at $500,000, and Classes B. E and G at market as per preceding page. We do not concede that these are proper measures of value. The object is merely to show the income, how West Virginia's claim would work out on this basis. Attached to that is a sub-schedule marked XX, in which the banks are figured at their market quotations as of January 1st, 1861, the Farmers' Bank, the Bank of Virginia, and the Exchnge Bank, taken at the quotations as per our Exhibit No. 2. No quotation was found of the Farmers' Bank, and the value of the quotation is taken at par because two of the other banks were at par and one at 101. My inquiry of Mr. Potter is whether he has verified these computations from the sources as stated in his exhibit.

The Witness: I have.

The papers were admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit, No. 7, September 11th, 1914, C. B.

Mr. Robinson: Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2 of West Virginia's claim under Classes B, E and G, as of June 20th, 1863, is based on the market value of the securities with the exception of the Manassas Gap Railroad Company in Class G, for which no quotation has been found.

The Master: Is that the same class of schedule as to 1863 as you have already filed as to 1861?

Mr. Robinson: Yes.

The Master: If that is so you need not go into detail about that.

Mr. Robinson: With this exception, in 1861 in our total summary we have annexed as the value under C, the market value that we found in our Exhibit, No. 3, and as regards schedule F, we have put in $500,000. In making up this summary of 1863 we have only put in values where we found quotations; in other words, we do not even concede that the sales and market values that we found are the values as they existed on June 20th, 1863.

The Master: And your question of Mr. Potter is whether these computations have been accurately and correctly made.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 8, September 11th, 1914, C. B.

Mr. Robinson: Now, we introduce No. 16, statement of the old unfunded bonds of Virginia for which Virginia issued her new bonds in full without setting off one-third as West Virginia's share. The details are taken from the Second Auditor's manuscript record of school and college bonds. This shows the interest paid from January 1st, 1872, to October 1st, 1914, on these bonds and is a supplement to our Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1.

The Master: And your question to Mr. Potter is whether these computations have been correctly and accurately made.

The witness: They have.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 16, September 11, 1914, C. B.

Mr. Robinson: The next is the copy of that deed of trust which was marked in yesterday as Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 6. The signatures are omitted from the copy.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 6, September 11, 1914, C. B.

The Master: Have the verifications and the signatures added to that exhibit. That takes care of that. Have you any other exhibits?

Mr. Robinson: Yes, we have.

We read in yesterday Exhibit No. 5, the statute of March 2nd, 1866. The stennographer can get that and copy it into the record, because it is only a page and a half long.

Chapter 9—An Act to provide for Funding the Interest upon the Public Debt.

Passed March 2, 1866.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That the holders of the registered bonds of the State of Virginia, issued before the seventeenth day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, be and they are hereby authorized to invest the interest due upon said bonds in registered bonds of the State, bearing the same rate of interest as the principal of the bond bears, and payable at any time the holder may elect, not less than ten nor more than thirty-four years from the date. Such bonds shall bear date on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-six, and may be issued for sums of one hundred dollars, or any multiple thereof, and shall be in the form and executed in the mode prescribed by law for the issue of the certificates of registered debt of the State. But the interest upon the bonds so issued shall not be payable before the first day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

2. The holders of the coupon bonds issued by the State before the seventeenth day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, are hereby authorized to invest the interest due upon said bonds in either coupon or registered bonds of the State, bearing the same rate of interest as the principal of the bond bears; and the interest thereon, if the bond is a coupon, shall be payable at the place where the interest on the principal bond is provided to be paid; and such bond may be payable at any time the holder may elect, not less than ten nor more than thirty-four years from its date. Such bonds shall bear date on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-six; and if coupon, may be issued for sums of five hundred dollars, or any multiple thereof, or if registered, in sums of one hundred dollars, or any multiple thereof, and shall be in the form and executed in the mode prescribed by law for the issue of the certificates of registered or coupon bonds of the State. But the interest upon the bonds so issued shall not be payable before the first day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

3. For any fractional sums of interest which cannot be invested under the two preceding sections of this act, certificates shall be issued in the form and mode prescribed by law for the issue of certificates of the registered debt of the State, payable in two, three or four years, with such interest thereon as is provided in the case of the bonds hereinbefore authorized to be issued.

4. The holders of any of the bonds of the State issued before the seventeenth day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, may, after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, invest the interest which shall be then due thereon, and not invested under the first and second sections of this act; and may also invest the certificates of debt, mentioned in the preceding section, in bonds of the State, bearing date the first of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, in all respects similar to the bonds provided for in said first and second sections; and for any fractional sum of interest which cannot be so invested, certificates shall be issued as is provided in the preceding sections.

5. The holders of bonds of the State issued by the restored government of Virginia since the creation of the State of West Virginia, are hereby authorized to invest the interest now due thereon, or which may become due up to the first of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, in the same manner as is hereinbefore provided for the interest due or to become due upon the debt of the State of Virginia incurred before the seventeenth of April, A. D. eighteen hundred and sixty-one.

6. The auditor of public accounts shall have the bonds which shall be required, prepared, and shall perform all the duties under this act which are required by law to be performed by the second auditor in the issue of the certificates of debt of the State.

7. This act shall be in force from its passage.

The Master: That has gone in subject to the stipulation. If the parties see fit it may be stipulated out, and if not it will be printed in full.

Mr. Robinson: I think the stipulation would be longer than the Act.

Mr. Anderson: In connection with the last exhibit, which is as I understand an assignment of the State's interest in the several railroads which constituted the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio Railroad Company, we desire to put into the record as Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 17, Sections 9 and 10 of the Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved June 17, 1870, entitled An Act to authorize the formation of the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio Railroad Company, found at pages 183 and 184 of the Acts of Assembly of Virginia, 1869 and 1870.

The same was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 17, September 11, 1914, C. B.

The Master: What is the next exhibit?

Mr. Harrison: I offer an extract from the annual reports of 1866, annual report of Auditor of Public Accounts, September 30, 1866, page 12. And also a copy of a journal entry, internal improvement journal, D, page 172. The extract from the Auditor's report relates to the condition of the banks after the war, as showing their worthless condition, and the extract from the journal of the internal improvement company is an entry showing that the stocks of those banks were charged off in 1872. Is not that right, Mr. Potter?

The Witness: Yes.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 18, September 11, 1914, C. B.

Mr. Harrison: I offer now a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of the Board of Public Works, dated February 11, 1868, in relation to the repudiation of the alleged payments by the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company on its million dollar loan made by the State, and also from the minutes of the Sinking Fund, page 188, dated December 5, 1864, relating to the same subject, beginning "Present all the Commissioners. Whereas it appears that the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company has paid," etc., and ending, "And then the Commissioners adjourned."

The Master: Counsel for Virginia must notify counsel for West Virginia within five days after the adjournment of this hearing as to how much of the original record they will rely upon in the argument.

Mr. Harrison: I would not like to be put under that limitation, or under any limitation, because I expect to make whatever use, at the argument of the case or in the preparation of a brief, I find it necessary to make of the original record. I do not expect them to give me notice of what they rely on.

The Master: If you do not want notice on either side, and you refer to the original record, and at the argument either side thinks they are taken by surprise and ask for time—

Mr. Harrison: I do not expect to be taken by surprise by any citation made from the original record.

The Master: I wanted in the beginning to have indicated what parts of this original record the parties intended to rely on.

Mr. Harrison: I could not state. There may be other matters in this record that we will find necessary to refer to. I have no doubt of it, and I have no doubt they will too.

The Master: If either party is taken by surprise, as to anything that is taken out of this original record, and they have to dig it up, they will have to have time, that is all there is about it.

Mr. Harrison: I do not see why anybody should be surprised by anything in this old record.

The Master: But I cannot see why notice should not be given by each side to the other as to what they rely on.

Mr. Harrison: The depositions I am referring to are the depositions of Colonel John P. Branch, page 753 of the record—

The Master: Suppose you put it this way. You intend to rely on all of the depositions that relate to Confederate currency and its use as a medium of exchange, and you give notice now you may comment on them in your argument.

Mr. Harrison: Yes, we rely on them. Now, here is an exhibit that we want to file, an extract from the report of the Second Auditor of Virginia, dated the 30th day of September, 1904, relating to the settlement of the claim of the Commonwealth of Virginia against the United States.

The Master: Has a copy of that been submitted to the other side?

Mr. Holt: We have it.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 20, September 11, 1914, C. B.

Mr. Anderson: If your Honor please, we desire to put into the record as Exhibit No. 21, a report of E. R. Leland, Special Commissioner of the Circuit Court of the City of Richmond, Virginia, in the suit of Tirill and Bocock, trustees, and Alexander and Ellyson, as trustees, against the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company, found at pages 198 and 199 of the second volume of the Court proceedings of those causes.

Mr. Hogg: What Court was that in?

Mr. Anderson: The Circuit Court of the City of Richmond. Secondly, the decree of the Court confirming that sale, found at page 202 of the same volume of the same record; and third, the deed from Leland, Commissioner, to Davis, Cox and Tod, the purchasers of the property of the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company, from page 229 to page 235 of the same volume. We wish to file all these as one exhibit.

The Master: That may be done.

Mr. Anderson: And also this stipulation, to save putting in a number of extracts from that record:

It is agreed by counsel for the plaintiff and defendant and for the bondholders that the recitals contained in the deed from Special Commissioner Leland, of date May 20, 1889, to Erwin Davis, Charles F. Cox and J. Kennedy Tod, correctly recites the facts shown by the record of the Chancery suits of Tirill and Bocock, trustees, and of Alexander and Ellyson, trustees, against the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company, lately pending and heard together in the Circuit Court of the City of Richmond, under decrees in which cause the property of the said railroad was sold.

Mr. Harrison: I have not had a copy of this made, but I want to offer a letter dated July 30, 1914, of Decatur Axtell, first vice-president of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, to Mr. Potter, Mr. Arthur G. Potter, on the subject of the James River and Kanawha Company, which was taken over by the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company. I would have had Mr. Axtell here as a witness, except that he is on the line, as they call it, more or less of the time, and I could not tell when we could use him. But he could not state, as far as I know, anything more than is contained in this letter. I will either read it or hand it to these gentlemen.

Mr Lilly: We feel constrained to object to such evidence as that.

Mr. Harrison: Very well, then, we will examine Mr. Axtell. We have heretofore been stipulating a good deal in this case, and all the agreements to stipulate seem to have been confined to this side. I have not yet found our friends ready to stipulate to anything that we want to stipulate to . If they are not willing to stipulate that Mr. Axtell, if he were present, would say under oath what he said in that letter, why we can adjourn and I will get him here whenever I can.

The Master: Let us see what he proposes to say.

Mr. Holt: Let it be read without taking it down.

(Mr. Harrison then read the letter.)

Mr. Harrison: I would like to know if you gentlemen have any objection to it.

The Master: He really does not know much about it, when you get right down to it.

Mr. Lilly: I do not think we will agree to that. If he can prove it is insolvent, let him come here and do it and let us go into that.

The Master: What do you say about that?

Mr. Holt: So far as the purchase price is concerned, our complaint was that they did give away a valuable property in which we were interested.

The Master: The condition is this, is it not, that the State of Virginia was a stockholder in the James River & Kanawha Company; the Richmond & Alleghany bought the property of the James River & Kanawha Company; they dealt, I suppose, with the James River & Kanawha when they made the purchase. I presume there is enough in this record to show what that transaction was. It would be very extraordinary if a stockholder in the James River & Kanawha was receiving some consideration that the James River & Kanawha Company did not receive itself. I do not know about the insolvency, but I have not seen anything in this record yet that goes beyond a transaction between one corporation and another corporation. In the first corporation it happened that the State of Virginia was a stockholder. The consideration between the James River & Kanawha and the purchasing company, so far as I am concerned, unless something appears in this case to the contrary, will be the whole transaction. How far that goes I do not know, but I think that is the legal situation.

Mr. Harrison: If these gentlemen won't consent to it, that is all right.

Mr. Lilly: We cannot agree that the company is insolvent.

Mr. Harrison: I will make no further effort to induce you to agree to any stipulations that we ask. I will say that.

The Master: You are not obliged to make a stipulation because they have. The only obligation about a stipulation here is to reduce the expense. What have you got, Brother Harrison, besides this statement of Mr. Axtell?

Mr. Harrison: I want to examine Mr. Axtell.

The Master: Here is a question pending then. Mr. Robinson wants to prove by Mr. Axtell, so far as he can, the statements he makes in this letter. Do I understand that West Virginia is not willing to concede that he would so testify so far as is admissible?

Mr. Lilly: We would want to cross-examine him.

The Master: What else have you by way of testimony of any kind, exhibits or otherwise?

Mr. Harrison: This thing of trying to rush through is rather unsatisfactory. The Treasurer of Virginia, for example, has been sick for three or four days, and we have expected to examine him on some very important matters.

The Master: Where is he?

Mr. Harrison: He is home, sick.

The Master: What do you expect to prove? Perhaps they will admit it.

Mr. Harrison: I would not like to ask them.

The Master: I am not embarrassed about it; I will ask them.

Mr. Anderson: We wish to prove by him what is really the cash book of Virginia, in which all of the receipts of money are recorded, that go to the treasury of the State—the deposit of that money is shown there. In that book is entered every one of these payments made to Virginia on account of dividends in the different corporations, on account of dividend obligations on account of indebtedness of those different corporations to the Commonwealth. They are all recorded there. And that book shows where those funds were deposited, and practically what became of them and what we want to show is that they went into these banks, were mixed up with the other receipts of the Commonwealth from taxes and so on, and remained there until the close of the war.

The Master: What is the significance?

Mr. Anderson: That these funds were paid in Confederate money and lost.

The Master: You have got this case all full, without any contradiction or impeachment of the fact that every commercial transaction and every business transaction in the State of Virginia during the war period was handled upon the basis of Confederate currency being the medium of exchange. You have proved it and there is not a word of contradiction about it. Now, does this add anything?

Mr. Anderson: It only shows that this Confederate money was absolutely lost and perished to the extent of $1,700,000.

The Master: Do you add anything to your existing proof?

Mr. Harrison: There are some other features that we want to examine him about. But we can take their depositions, and any others that we see fit to take. We will give the other side notice and take them between now and the argument.

The Master: Is there anything else?

Mr. Robinson: I stated this morning that there were some bonds issued in January, 1861, and Mr. Potter would check that up and furnish to the other side computations as soon as he could do it. As a supplement to Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, I also stated that Mr. Potter would compute the bonds of 1866 and 1867 on the basis of the various refunding acts and furnish the other side with that, and that would go in as a supplement to Exhibit No. 1. In regard to Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 9, which is our interest schedule, we propose to have a computation made showing the interest on the amount that West Virginia would pay upon the sum found by the Court on the basis of the refunding acts of Virginia, and that will go in as a supplement to Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 9. As soon as Mr. Potter can make the computations he will furnish the other side with a copy. The only other computation that we have will be Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 22 and will be a computation of the amount of Virginia's bonds now outstanding and the amount thereof which Virginia has paid to date, paid off, and the amount of interest which Virginia has paid from 1861 to date on account of her share of this debt and what she now owes.

The Master: Is there anything else?

Mr. Robinson: That ends us.

The Master: And all these computations are to be submitted to the other side as soon as made in order that their accountant may verify them. Can you proceed, Judge, with your cross-examination, because that will be the only thing left now except what you may have in rebuttal.

Mr. Holt: We have several exhibits here, your Honor, I suppose half a dozen, that we want to examine. I have gone over them, but not in a satisfactory way, and I can proceed and go as far as I can, but I doubt very much whether we can complete our cross-examination this evening on the residue of these exhibits. I regret very much to say that, your Honor.

The Master: You need not be embarrassed about that. As far as I am concerned, of course if we can get through I will go home to-night, but if not, I am not going home until we get this case finished and finished in a way that counsel on both sides feel is the proper way, and if you do not feel that you can complete this cross-examination this evening—if we could clean the case up by half past six except this matter of Mr. Axtell, as to that I will see what we will do about it, and I would like to go on and do it, but I am not going to ask Judge Holt to close this cross-examination if he has any feeling that he is not making it as complete and adequate as he wants to make it. I do not think that is a proper thing to do and I shall not do it, and I am going to rely altogether on his judgment upon that.

Mr. Holt: Then upon the subject of taking depositions, your Honor—

The Master: As to that I will say this, I have not heard any adequate reason stated so far why if I stay here to-morrow Mr. Axtell cannot be here as a witness.

Mr. Harrison: If you will be here to-morrow, I will try and get him up here.

The Master: I do not know that they contend that he cannot be gotten here to-morrow.

Mr. Harrison: I will say that I did not make any special effort to have him remain over here or anything of that sort, because I did not have any doubt but what we would agree to let what he writes go in as a statement which he would make if he had been here.

The Master: That is a pretty vigorous letter that he writes, and I do not think they are the subject of criticism if they do not want to concede that he would so testify and deprive themselves of the opportunity for cross-examination.

Mr. Lilly: He seems to make the statement offhand, guess work.

The Master: It is a pretty vigorous statement and I do not want to criticize the other side if they think they ought to have an opportunity to cross-examine. Under the circumstances, Judge, you do not feel that you would like to conclude the cross-examination to-night?

Mr. Holt: I would rather not.

The Master: Suppose we have an understanding that Mr. Axtell is to be produced here to-morrow morning at half past eleven o'clock, at which time I should hope that Judge Holt would be through with his cross-examination, and that will give us ample time to take his testimony. When I suspend I am going to suspend until half past nine, and that certainly ought to give counsel on both sides an opportunity to examine everything they care to take up, and fag ends, and clean their case up without any difficulty to-morrow forenoon or to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. Holt: I do not believe we will have any difficulty about it, your Honor.

The Master: Have you anything by way of rebuttal?

Mr. Holt: We have two or three memorandum statements here that are matters of record; they are very short.

The Master: We will suspend until half past nine to-morrow morning, at which time Judge Holt will go on with his cross-examination of Mr. Potter, and meanwhile so far as is feasible, I do not want to tax Mr. Potter too much, because he is very tired, but so far as is feasible I would suggest that the accountants for West Virginia proceed with their checking up. Before we suspend, is there anything that occurs to either of you that you want to suggest in the line of getting everything cleaned up to-morrow, anything that you want from me or anything that you want from the other side?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir; I do not know of anything.

Mr. Robinson: How about that stipulation on account of eliminating acts from the record, Judge Holt?

Mr. Hogg: I will dictate this stipulation now:

It is hereby stipulated between counsel on behalf of the Commonwealth of Virginia and of the State of West Virginia and counsel representing the bondholders that the suit of Virginia against West Virginia relating to the question of the territorial boundaries of the latter was instituted in the Supreme Court of the United States on the —— day of February, 1866, and was pending until the 6th day of March, 1871, before it was finally ended, and that the object of said suit was to determine the question whether or not the counties of Jefferson and Berkeley constituted a part of the territory of West Virginia the State of Virginia claiming that the said counties constituted a part of her territory; and the stenographer is hereby directed not to copy the report of the case appearing in 11th Wallace.

The Master: Before we adjourn of course I want to have an understanding as to when this case is going to be argued, and I want the counsel upon either side to think the matter over so that when they come in here in the morning, or some time before we adjourn to-morrow, they will be prepared to give me their judgment as to what they can do and how they can get along.

Mr. Harrison: We would like to have a suggestion from the other side now.

Mr. Holt: Here is another stipulation that was presented by Mr. Robinson to this side, the tail end of which we have cut out, but the fore part of it we are willing to agree to. I will read it as far as we subscribe to it:

It is hereby stipulated that all copies of Acts of Virginia, opinions of the court and reports of committees read into the record by West Virginia on September 9th and 10th, shall be copied directly into the printed record without having the same transcribed into the typewritten record.

We are perfectly willing to agree to it that far. That would save some expense.

The Master: There are some practical conditions involved in printing things, and printers do not take a book and print from the book, because they cannot do it that way, and somebody has got to present to them a typewritten copy of whatever is going to come out of these books and documents. Somebody has got to make the copies.

Mr. Holt: We had already made the typewritten copies ourselves and intended to furnish them to the stenographer so that he under this condition would not embrace them in the stenographic report but would place them with the printer.

The Master: If they have got typewritten copies—have you got duplicates?

Mr. Robinson: We will take their typewritten copies; we do not care for duplicates.

Mr. Harrison: What is the last part of the stipulation?

Mr. Holt: This is the part that we do not agree to:

And that so far as any of said papers appear either in the original record in this case, the appendix to the original record, or in the West Virginia compilations, Volumes 1 and 2, they shall not be printed in this record.

And our reasons for that are these. First, I have not a complete set of the old record; secondly, a part of the old record was never printed; thirdly, I would like to have such of these acts as we rely upon printed in a convenient form together. Some of them may have appeared heretofore and some of them may not.

The Master: I have already stated that there will have to be an agreement between the parties on both sides.

Mr. Holt: If it be desired by these gentlemen to make the first part of the stipulation I will agree to it.

The Master: That stipulation need not be made part of the record, that simply shows how the record is being made up.

Mr. Harrison: What suggestion have you to make about the argument of the case?

Mr. Lilly: We will take that up to-morrow.

Mr. Holt: I would like to inquire of the Master where he would expect us to argue.

The Master: In New York, and unless otherwise arranged, in my office. Or if you prefer to take a room at the Bar Association, that is agreeable to me.

Mr. Holt: I had hoped that the Master might like to visit White Sulphur Springs at that time.

The Master: That is of course only a matter of a night's travel. I will say this. My own personal preference is, the arguments are to be confined to two counsel on each side, one counsel to represent the bondholders if they desire, two counsel on the part of West Virginia, that is what I suggested in New York, I think, unless of course there is some good reason that you think is important why somebody else should take a hand in it, that is all right, but on general principles I thought I would make that modification.

Mr. Harrison: Major Anderson and I will argue the case on behalf of the plaintiff.

The Master: If they desire I shall hear someone representing the bondholders. And if West Virginia feels that there are three men on the other side, and therefore want three men to take part in the argument, I should agree to that of course. As to the limit of argument, why I am inclined to think that I shall let each man take his own time. Personally I always feel mean if I have got to cover a certain amount of ground, and I sometimes feel worse if I have to keep within a certain limit.

Mr. Harrison: I doubt the wisdom of going to White Sulphur Springs to argue this case.

Mr. Holt: On account of books?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, especially on that account.

The Master: If the case is argued in New York at the Bar Association, why everything that is in existence from a legal standpoint is conveniently available.

Mr. Harrison: When shall we have this argument?

The Master: How long do you want to make your preparation?

Mr. Harrison: We would like to have West Virginia's brief.

Mr. Anderson: And they would like to have ours before they make their argument. How is that, Judge?

Mr. Holt: It would be very desirable.

Mr. Harrison: Suppose you get the printed record on Monday the 21st, how long would you want to prepare your brief.

Mr. Lilly: It ought to take a month to prepare a brief, but of course I understand we would not have that long.

Mr. Hogg: Why not the plaintiff's counsel confer and we will confer, and come in, in the morning.

Mr. Holt: How much time would your Honor want after the argument in which to prepare your report?

The Master: I ought to have probably two weeks.

Mr. Lilly: The briefs have to be printed after they are prepared.

Mr. Harrison: Do you expect us to use before you printed briefs?

The Master: Yes, I would like to have each side submit me a printed brief.

Mr. Harrison: We did not do that before.

The Master: There were some printed briefs before. Of course it would be a very great convenience to me if the briefs were submitted in printed form.

Mr. Hogg: We ought to have as much time as we could possibly get.

Mr. Holt: I would like to make one inquiry, and I would like the gentlemen on the other side to hear it. Is it expected that the Master will be back in Washington with his conclusions on the 13th of October?

The Master: I shall do it if I can, but that will depend upon when I get the briefs. I took about six weeks or nearly two months on the other case.

Mr. Holt: If the Master could give us until about the 10th of October before he would require argument, that would give us about 22 days in which to prepare and file and print the briefs. Then we could argue it before the 13th, and at that time he would report to the Court that the evidence had been taken, briefs filed, and the matter in his hands, and that he would be ready to report say on the 10th of November.

The Master: You would have to get around earlier than that. The 10th of October is Saturday, and there is an intervening Sunday.

Mr. Anderson: Suppose we hold the matter over until tomorrow.

Adjourned to September 12th, 1914, at 9:30 A. M.

BEFORE THE MASTER

Richmond, Va., September 12, 1914.

PRESENT: Same Counsel as on Yesterday.

Continuation of the cross-examination of

ARTHUR G. POTTER.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, your Exhibit 4-A seems to be a summary of Defendant's Class D, 1863, reduced to actual values as per page 647 of the original record. What is meant by reduced to actual value?

A. Reduced to the quotations in gold on Confederate currency on the dates of the receipt of the items embraced in that schedule.

Q. In other words it is reduced to a gold basis?

A. Yes, sir. There is a slight typographical error in that statement on the first page.

Q. I will call your attention to one of them directly. Look at page 8, South Side Railroad Company. You have an item here of $8,400. Is that correct?

A. No, sir, that should be $84,000. The extension, however, is correct. It is a typographical error.

Q. The extension is correct, and you discovered that sum would even it up.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now as I understand you, in this exhibit you take the claim of West Virginia as set forth in her schedule covering Class D, reducing the amount, treating it as if paid in Confederate money and reducing it in amount to its value in gold?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is true of the first item?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see you have Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Company marked the third item. How does that come?

A. There is no claim for income of the second item.

Q. What is it?

A. That is an extension on the same basis.

Q. I understand that, but you have jumped from 1 to 3. You are numbering these items Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company 1, and next the Richmond & Petersburg Railroad 3 instead of 2. Is anything omitted from our schedule?

A. I think that there is nothing extended on your schedule for No. 2, Richmond & Danville—that is true, on page 36 of the blue prints, there is no extension.

Q. That is the explanation then is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because no claim was made on account of that class by West Virginia to the Richmond & Danville you have omitted it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Turn to page 2, Mr. Potter and see whether or not you have carried out anything on account of item No. 13, United States Government.

A. No, sir, nothing extended.

Q. Well, West Virginia in her schedule made a claim on that item, did she not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This exhibit is entitled summary of Defendant's Class D, 1863.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Reduced to actual value as per page 647 of the original record?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you have not taken our schedule on Class D, the whole of it, and reduced it to a gold basis?

A. No, sir.

Q. What was the claim made by West Virginia on account of that item, United States Government, in the Class D?

A. 1863, $872,260.07.

Q. Therefore in taking up this schedule of ours and reducing it from our claim to a gold basis you have not included all the items or claims set forth in our schedule?

A. No, sir, that is the exception, United States Government.

Q. Why did you omit it?

A. At the direction of counsel.

Mr. Holt: I believe that is all of 4-A, your Honor.

The Master: Let me have duplicates of these various exhibits Mr. Robinson. I have not had a copy of this.

Mr. Holt: Now, the next exhibit we have, I believe is No. 7. I want, Mr. Harrison, to get the numbers straightened out in my own mind, if I can. We have gone over now No. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 4-A as well as 9. Now after 4-A what comes, No. 7? I mean in the shape of schedules, or was it a statute making 5 and a deed of trust being 6, and then we come to the schedule No. 7?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. No. 7 is the next schedule, is it Mr. Potter?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: These are really computations; neither one of them introduced any new factor in the case as I understand it?

Mr. Holt: Well, that is practically the situation. I want to see if I understand it.

The Master: Yes.

Q. Your No. 7, Mr. Potter, seems to be a summary of West Virginia's claim under Classes B, E and G, as of January 1, 1861, on the basis of the market value of the securities, with the exception of the Manassas Gap Railroad Company, under Class G, for which no quotation has been found?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now Class B, as I recall it related to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Class E to the banks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. While Class G is the last one and the one in which you find the James River & Kanawha Canal Company and the Manassas Gap Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the item under Class B, Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company, is a calculation, taking the market quotation upon the stock of that company for 1861, of 76½ cents, and multiplying it by what?

A. $75,200, the par value of the stock held by the State.

Q. And that gives you $210,528., which is how much less than par?

A. 23½ per cent.

Q. Well, it would be about $64,000.

A. About $64,600.

Q. Now then, if that market quotation of 76½ was not taken from any stock exchange but from a mere unaccepted bid on the stock at the date covered by it, the calculation would not give much idea of the total value of the stock at that time, would it?

A. I think it would be an indication of the value.

Q. Well it would not be a strong indication, would it?

A. I think it would.

The Master: I suppose the original books of Lancaster & Company and Sutton Brothers & Company are accessible and available.

Mr. Anderson: I fear not. The places where their offices were, were burnt down.

The Master: Do you know anything about it?

Mr. Anderson: No, I do not.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. John L. Williams would know if anybody would.

The Master: You may be up against the proposition as to whether or not a report of somebody to a newspaper and published in a newspaper is legal evidence of the sale. I have not examined that at all and do not express any opinion about it. My suggestion is that if there is in existence a set of original books which show actual sales it may turn out that that is the best evidence.

Mr. Harrison: If there are, we will see if we can get them.

The Master: I simply suggest that.

Mr. Holt: Especially a private report of one sale, I think the books do hold that it is not evidence.

The Master: I am not intimating anything about it one way or the other. I am simply saying that you might have that point raised on you at the final argument, and if there was in existence legal evidence tending to show these facts you might feel as though you ought to have it. Of course it is understood that it is open to either side to raise any question as to the competency of the testimony upon either side and as to its admissibility, even though they raise it for the first time at the argument. The case has been tried on that basis. You get my point, Mr. Harrison, I simply suggest this.

Mr. Harrison: I understand.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. The market quotation taken in Exhibit No. 7, upon the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company, of 76½ cents is of January 4, 1861.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was taken, as I recall, and put into your Exhibit No. 2 from the Richmond Dispatch?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were unable to say whether that represented a single transaction or many transactions, a sale, a bid or an offer?

A. No, sir.

By The Master:

Q. What is your answer to that, no, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, your answer is yes, sir, that you are not able to say?

A. I am not able to say.

Q. All of these quotations that have been used in these subsequent computations involved in these exhibits are subject to the same testimony that you gave in relation to Exhibit No. 2?

A. They are, sir.

Q. In other words you have no original information as to those schedules, and all that you know about them is what appears upon the schedules themselves?

A. That is true.

Q. That simply shows that you have no knowledge as to any of the details as to any of those items, is that right?

A. That is true, yes.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. The Schedule 7, so far as market quotations are concerned, is based, as I understand it, solely upon the market quotations in your Exhibit No. 2?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: The point I was getting at, your Honor, was that this was marked a summary of West Virginia's claim on the basis of the market value of the securities with the exception of the Manassas Gap Railroad Company under Class G, for which no quotation has been found. It does not indicate upon its face that it is based upon Exhibit No. 2.

The Master: I understand that it is based upon Schedule 2, and that all the other computations are based upon Schedule No. 2.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. Class E, transfer as per sub-schedule XX, as I understand that now, turning to sub-schedule XX, you take the market quotations on the Farmers' Bank of Virginia as of January 4, 1861, from your Exhibit No. 2, and the market quotations on the Bank of Virginia as of the same date from the same schedule, and then take the amount of the claim made by West Virginia in Class D, and make your calculation?

A. Well, there is no calculation to be made there because it is par, Judge. The market quotation is par.

By The Master:

Q. Well, you have put down the results?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Then you don't rely upon any of our exhibits for any of these amounts?

A Excepting par of the stock as stated in your schedules.

Q. I mean it is not taken from any claim made by West Virginia?

A. No, sir.

Q. You took the Farmers' Bank of Virginia and the Bank of Virginia and treated the stock held by the Commonwealth of Virginia therein at par because you found the market quotations taken from your Exhibit No. 2 to be par at that date, is that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you took the Bank of the Valley and treated it at par because the market quotations taken from your Exhibit No. 2 did not show it to be par as of that date, isn't that so?

The Master: Did not show any quotations.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, when the market quotation put it at par you utilized it, and when it does not put it at par or anything else you put it at par anyhow?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: That only applies to one bank?

Mr. Holt: Yes, that is the Bank of the Valley.

The Master: And that bank is located in Winchester as I understand?

Mr. Holt: Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the Exchange Bank is treated in the same way as the Farmers' Bank of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And based upon the market quotations for that date from Exhibit 2?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I notice that in treating the Northwestern Bank on your sub-schedule XX you have not carried forward any amount at all, neither have you carried forward any amount on account of the Fairmont Bank in arriving at your total of $3,294,375. Why did you not enter something on account of those banks?

A. The entire schedule was made at the direction of counsel and I was instructed to leave them out.

Q. The stock held by the Commonwelth of Virginia in the Northwestern Bank was just as much its property as the stock held by it in the Farmers' Bank of Virginia, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the stock held by the Commonwelth of Virginia in the Fairmount Bank was just as much its property as the stock held by it in the Farmers' Bank of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, why would you omit that, why did you out of these six banks embrace four and exclude four?

A. I have just answered that it was done at the direction of counsel, Judge.

Q. You have no reason at all—

By The Master:

Q. Is that all you know about it?

A. That is all, yes. sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. If you were seeking to make a settlement between West Virginia and Virginia, and the settlement depended upon the common assets, in order to get right as an accountant you would consider all the assets, would you not, Mr. Potter?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. Don't you know so?

A. Well, there might be some special circumstances surrounding it. If this went to West Virginia why no, I would not.

Q. Well, suppose only a part of it went to West Virginia?

A. I would extend only the part that Virginia retained.

Q. Do you know how much West Virginia received out of the Northwestern Bank?

A. I have not the figures before me, no, sir.

Q. Do you know how much Virginia got out of it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would it make any difference, so far as the statement of this account is concerned, at this point, whether West Virginia got any part of the Northwestern Bank or not? Is not the effort here to total the assets first, the common assets?

A. Do you mean in this schedule?

Q. Yes.

A. I do not know what the effort is here.

Q. Well is not the effort here to show the value of all the assets that Virginia had in the shape of bank stocks at that time, based upon market quotations?

The Master: You mean the effort generally in the hearing, or do you confine that to this exhibit?

Mr. Holt: I am speaking of this exhibit.

A. No, sir, not in this schedule.

Q. What is the object of this schedule?

A. To show the market value, or as near the market value as it is possible to get, of the four banks, the stock held in four banks by the State of Virginia. The other two are omitted.

Q. Well, she held stock in the Northwestern and in the Fairmount just as well as in the others. That brings me right back to the question, why would you make a partial statement of the value of her assets represented by bank stock?

A. I made the statement at the request of counsel, sir.

Q. Very well, we will let it go at that. Class G, turning back to the first sheet, No. 7, is Manassas Gap Railroad Company; and you have no entry opposite that item at all, because you found no market quotation thereon?

A. That is true, sir.

Q. Then so far as the Manassas Gap Railroad Company is concerned, that schedule means nothing, does it?

A. That is true, sir.

Q. I did not ask you, I believe, anything about the James River and Kanawha Company on that?

A. No, sir.

The Master: You mean in relation to this schedule?

Mr. Holt: In relation to this schedule. Well, that will do for No. 7; I see it does give the market quotations on that stock.

Q. No. 8 is a summary of West Virginia's claim under Classes B, E, and G as of June 20, 1863, on the basis of the market value of the securities with the exception of the Manassas Gap Railroad Company under Class G, for which no quotation has been found. What is the difference then, Mr. Potter, between No. 7 and No. 8?

A. That in the Exhibit No. 8, the market quotations, which are taken as Confederate quotations, are reduced to gold.

By The Master:

Q. Is that exactly like the preceding schedule with that exception?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Well, you have different market quotations for 1863, have you not?

A. Yes, sir, different market quotations.

By The Master:

Q. I understand that, but it is on exactly the same plan with that exception?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. In other words you take the same number of shares of stock in the different companies in both schedules?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you take different market quotations on account of the difference in dates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in 1863, Confederate currency being then rampant, you reduced your result to a gold basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what this means?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you take as the market quotation on James River and Kanawha Canal stock in 1863?

A. 22.

The Master: Are you going to examine Mr. Axtell?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir. He left town last night.

The Master: Do you want to examine him?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir, I want to take his deposition.

Mr. Holt: I think that is hardly fair, your Honor. I do not want to be running over to this town.

The Master: Do not let us discuss that now. We will take it up in its order.

Q. Will you turn now to sub-schedule 3-X and look at the items Northwestern Bank and Fairmount Bank?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see you have made no entry to be carried into your sum total after either of those banks.

A. That is true.

Q. Unless you do embrace those banks the title to your exhibit would scarcely be correct, would it?

A. The title is an indication of what is contained. It is not all embracing, I think; I did not read it that way.

Q. You say in your title as I understand it that the exhibit is a summary of West Virginia's claim on account of certain classes. West Virginia made a claim on account of the Northwestern Bank, did she not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And she made a claim on account of the Fairmount Bank?

A. She did.

Q. And yet you have omitted from this amended summary both of these claims?

A. Yes, sir.

By The Master:

Q. To that extent it is inconsistent with the title, isn't it?

A. To that extent, yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Why did you omit them in this schedule, for the same reason that you omitted them from the corresponding schedule in 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Turn to your exhibit No. 16, Mr. Potter, being a statement of old unfunded bonds of Virginia for which Virginia issued her new bonds in full without setting off one-third as West Virginia's share.

The Master: Is that the one that you do not have a copy of?

Mr. Anderson : We have copies of it.

The Master: I do not know how significant this all may be, but it is not particularly intelligible to me unless I have something to trace it up from. However, go on and do not delay it on my account.

Q. Tell us briefly what this schedule is intended for and what it means.

A. The schedule lists under seven groups the old unfunded bonds of the State of Virginia, or issues prior to 1861, which were held by the various schools and colleges in the State of Virginia. In—I have not the date before me, but I think it was in 1892, the State took up these old unfunded bonds and issued certificates for them. The State has been paying six per cent. interest on these bonds ever since the war, and this schedule groups them the same as in our Exhibit No. 9; and the interest is figured in accordance with that grouping, at six per cent. on each group, and the total extended to the right, showing that between January 1, 1872, and October 1, 1914, the interest would be $2,218,319,81, all of which has been paid except that portion which applies from July 1st, I believe, this year, to October 1st.

By The Master:

Q. The judge wants to know what the purpose of that schedule is. What is the object of it, so far as you know?

A. The schedule was prepared at the request of counsel; I do not know what the object was.

Q. That is, the use to be made of this you are not able to state?

A. I am not informed, no, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. What was the aggregate of these bonds?

A. $864,842.03.

Q. So the principal is eight hundred and sixty-four thousand dollars and the interest thereon is two and a quarter millions practically?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what per cent. would that be?

A. About 250 per cent.—260 per cent.

Q. Is it not nearer 300 per cent?

A. Well, about 275 per cent.; I have not figured it.

Q. That is one place where the shadow is much deeper than the substance, is it not?

A. Referring to it in those terms, yes.

The Master: It extends over a greater space.

Mr. Holt: It seems to be thicker too.

The Master: Now, are there any other schedules showing computations that have not been handed to me?

Mr. Robinson: You have all that we have prepared. He has some other dates that he is going to prepare.

Mr. Holt: When are we going to get them?

Mr. Robinson: You will have to ask Mr. Potter that.

The Master: If these schedules are matters of computations really, and are really going to be used by counsel in their argument—this particular schedule, for instance, does not shed any great light on this controversy just now, because we do not know what purpose this is put in for—I am not intimating of course that it has not a legitimate purpose—but if these schedules are simply matters of computation, I doubt whether it is wise for me to delay this hearing simply to have the computations put in here.

Mr. Harrison: That is what they are.

The Master: Strictly speaking they are not evidence, when you come right down to it. If you have anything of that sort, —this hearing is closing.

Mr. Robinson: But we only began our case on Friday.

The Master: But you knew about it six weeks ago. I am not going to sit here and let witnesses compute all the time, because strictly speaking that is not evidence, and we all know it. If you were trying this case in court you could not sit in here and ask the witness to make computations and figure things. The Court would say that the witness would state facts and the Court could make the computations. I have given you immense latitude on this question of computation, on both sides.

Mr. Holt: I think so, but I believe it was a good thing to do, your Honor.

The Master: I am not finding fault about it, except that I do not want to be delayed beyond today.

Mr. Robinson: The only computations that we are making are the computations that we were asked to make by the other side on the question of refunding these bonds. The other things are things that we have got to investigate, and Mr. Potter has got to have a couple of days to look at the record after we get through, to get the facts.

Q. Who owned and held these bonds aggregating $864,842.03?

A. The colleges and educational institutions shown at the left of this schedule.

By The Master:

Q. Under group No. 1?

A. No, the names are at the left of group No. 1.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. They were all Virginia educational institutions, were they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Virginia Military Institute that is set down there is a State institution, is it not?

A. I do not know.

Q. Don't you know, Mr. Potter, that it is supported by the State?

A. No, sir, I do not know.

Q. Well, don't you know that the University of Virginia, another one of them, is a State institution?

A. Judging from the name I should say that it was likely to have State support, but I do not know anything about it.

By The Master:

Q. Well, that exhausts your knowledge on that subject?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Every one of these institutions is a Virginia institution, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how those institutions collected the bonds?

A. No, sir, with the exception one, I know one instance.

By The Master:

Q. Which one is that?

A. Washington and Lee acquired one block of bonds through it; they were presented.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now, you have the University of Virginia set down here at $23,200. If she held that many bonds and was a State institution, then the State must have provided her with those bonds, must she not?

A. I don't think that conclusion is necessary, no, sir.

Q. If she is supported by the State of Virginia would she not get these bonds through the one who supports her?

A. I cannot testify to that, I don't know.

Q. As I further understand your exhibit, when Virginia sat down and undertook to apportion this debt between the two states by legislative enactment or otherwise, she set apart one-third to West Virginia and assumed responsibility for the remaining two-thirds except in the case of these bonds?

A. Yes, sir, that is true.

Q. She did not undertake to apportion these at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. But because they were held by educational institutions within her own limits and territory she thought she would take care of those bonds herself?

A. I don't know the motives that actuated this arrangement.

Q. Well, she did this then thereafter, did she not, took care of them by issuing new bonds or certificates and delivering the certificates to these educational institutions in lieu of the bonds held by her?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And none of the bonds were ever affected at all by any of the scaling acts which we have heard so much about in this case.

A. No, sir.

Q. I will repeat the question, Mr. Potter. You do not know whether any of these educational institutions were supported by the State of Virginia?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. You have no personal knowledge derived from records or otherwise on this subject?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Holt: We are through with Mr. Potter. Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 20 reminds us that we offered here a certificate of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, dated August 13, 1914, and another certificate upon the same subject, dated August 14, 1914, of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States Government, relative to the settlement of the loan made by the State of Virginia to the Government of the United States; but something was said about a stipulation at the time, which stipulation has never been made, nor have these two certificates gone into the record. We would now like to have them put in as of the place where we first presented them.

The Master: They may be so inserted, so that they will appear at the precise place where they were apparently offered, and they will be printed just exactly as they read, unless the parties agree on a stipulation that will be satisfactory to West Virginia, giving their effect. In my judgment you ought to strike out these formal certificates.

Mr. Lilly: Has not that been printed?

The Master: It has not been printed in the final print. There is no reason why this formal certificate should go in, simply say certified—that is if you follow my judgment. Those go into the record. There is no occasion for this colloquy this morning to appear in the print. These will go into the record at the place where they were offered, and they will be printed just exactly as they read, certificates and all, unless the parties after this hearing adjourns agree on a stipulation that will shorten the record. I think that takes care of that.

Mr. Holt: My suggestion would be that these certificates be marked Defendant's Exhibits Y and Z.

The papers were admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibits Y and Z, September 12, 1914, C. B.

[These exhibits appear in Volume II at their proper place.]

The Master: Now, that completes the cross-examination of Mr. Potter. Has Virginia anything further to submit?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir. In the examination of the defendant's accountant reference was made and some testimony given from the report of the President and the Engineer and Superintendent of the Orange & Alexandria Railroad for the year 1861. I want to file at this point the President's report and the Chief Engineer and General Superintendent's report which are found in Document No. 17 of the Board of Public Works, beginning at page 35 and down to page 39 inclusive, and I will ask the stenographer to copy them into the record.

The same was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 21, September 12, 1914, C. B.

Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 21 is as follows:

ORANGE AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD COMPANY.
PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

In presenting the usual and annual statement to the stockholders, of the operations of the company for the fiscal year ending 30th September last, the directors regret their inability to make it more full and comprehensive as regards details.

The invasion of the territory of the state, and occupation of the city of Alexandria by the federal troops on the 24th of May last, deprived the company of its established general offices, disturbed its regular system of auditing accounts, and necessarily produced much confusion in the management of its business. The inconvenience caused thereby, as regards the records, will be only temporary, as sufficient data can hereafter be procured to supply any omissions or errors in the accounts. and the proper corrections can be readily incorporated in a subsequent report, if upon examination the necessity therefor should exist.

The accompanying letter of the general superintendent, H. W. Vandegrift, Esq., exhibits briefly the condition of his department, and the appended tabular statements of the treasurer (marked A and B) will show in detail the financial state of the company.

Receipts from transportation for the past year amount to the sum of $604,025.44.

The working expenses for the same period cannot be precisely stated at this time, but are estimated by the general superintendent at thirty-seven per cent. of the earnings.

At the last annual meeting the monthly receipts from May to October 1860, inclusive, showed an average return of $50,000 per month. If these receipts per month could have been maintained up to the 1st of May last, the aggregate revenue of the road for the year just past would have been exceedingly large; but unfortunately for the finances of the company, the result of the presidential election last fall, and the political alienation of the sections of the country, arrested the accustomed intercourse and travel between the north and south, and reduced the receipts for the months referred to down to the previous minimum amount.

The transportation of troops and military stores since the act of secession has afforded a very large business, and taxed to its utmost capacity the somewhat limited equipment of the road. This class of transportation, however, is only charged at half rates, and from its extent and peculiar quality, causes much wear and tear, both of roadbed and equipment. Such precautions in the way of reduced rates of speed in running trains, and the most economical modes of transportation, have been adopted as would best protect the interests of the company under the circumstances.

Since the 24th of May last the road has not been operated by the regular passenger trains beyond Manassas station, its present eastern terminus.

Shortly after the evacuation of Alexandria by the state troops, sections of the track were destroyed and the bridges burned from Cameron to Bull Run, and twenty-two miles of the railroad in the direction nearest Alexandria surrendered to the control of the enemy, or rendered useless to the company.

After the battle of the 21st July, the streams between Manassas and Fairfax station were temporarily bridged again, by order of our military authorities, for the use of the army only; but recently this part of the line has been again abandoned.

This, together with the loss of the work shops and their furniture, and other property unavoidably left behind in Alexandria, will constitute a large account, which in justice ought at the proper time to be paid by the state or confederate government to the stockholders of the company.

Notwithstanding all the damage incurred, it is some satisfaction to the stockholders of the company to know, that but for the construction and existence of this railroad, the state could not have been defended as it has been, or its military requirements so efficiently supplied.

About one hundred and twenty-two miles of main line and the branch to Warrenton are now in daily operation by the trains. Some limited arrangements have been provided for shops at Gordonsville, which, with such facilities as are afforded at Lynchburg, will enable the company to repair and keep in order its rolling stock.

In maintaining repairs of roadbed, it is in contemplation of the directors to employ for another year slave labor upon a part of the line.

FINANCES.

The financial condition of the company may be briefly stated as follows, viz:

Total funded debt	$2,609,000.00
Total temporary debt	572,673.79

Of the debt and bills payable due by the company, it appears that the sum of $52,759.99 is owing to northern parties.

As this matter will be brought to the cognizance of the courts under the law of Congress, the company ought to set up its equitable right to retain this small amount, in view of the heavy losses incurred by the war, at least to that extent.

Against its indebtedness, the actual resources of the company may be stated as follows, viz:

Cash in banks, &c.	$ 40,637.42
Due by government,	161,903.72
Freight bills and accounts due by post office department and by express company,	22,183.38
Total	$224,724.52

To this add:

Individual subscriptions of stock uncollected	$ 23,437.09
Mortgage bonds of the several issues either hypothecated as collateral security, or on hand and unsold	691,000.00

Of this last all are of the last issue except $73,000.

The amount of debt paid during the past fiscal year, in cash, $185,918.38.

The new issue of mortgage bonds to the amount of $700,000 authorized at the last meeting of the stockholders to pay off the heavy existing floating debt of the company, has been duly prepared, but only a small amount so far disposed of. The company has paid up all the interest due upon its bonds of the several issues, where the coupons have been presented, except that part held at the north, the payment of which was arrested by Act of Congress, and public policy.

It may be proper to state in this connection, that the delay in paying the coupons of the company during the past summer, arose from the fact that the government failed to pay its bills of military transportation for several months after their maturity and the company had no other resource. The interest was promptly met as soon as the collection referred to could be made of the government at Richmond.

In conclusion, the directors take pleasure in bearing testimony to the zeal, industry and efficiency with which the officers and employees of the company generally have discharged their ardous and responsible duties of the past year.

The transportation of troops and supplies for the army of the Potomac has entailed upon the company, since May last, a labor of vast difficulty and importance, the exigencies of which have been fully and faithfully met by those charged with its execution.

The general superintendent, Mr. Vandegrift, whose fidelity was most unjustly assailed, has, from the beginning to the present time, performed his whole duty.

The annals of railroad operations do not anywhere exhibit examples of such continuous laborious services as have been performed for months together by the men who have run the trains to and from Manassas station, and transacted the business of the road at that place, without a house to shelter them from the weather, or for purposes of rest, poorly supplied with necessary food, and the impossibility of obtaining assistance for their relief; by day and by night they have stood to their posts without complaint, and performed an amount of work scarcely to be conceived as within the compass of human efforts.

The thanks of the stockholders are especially due to the general agent at Manassas, Mr. James A. Evans, for the faithful and satisfactory manner with which he has discharged his ardous and responsible duties at that point. Much credit is due also to another agent of the company, Mr. W. A. Duncan, who rendered especially most valuable service, by the spirit and address which he displayed in reclaiming some valuable books and records of the company from the possession of the enemy, into whose hands they had casually fallen at Alexandria.

The directors indulge the hope, that before another annual meeting, the stockholders will again assume possession of all their property, and be able to assert authority over their entire line to the city of Alexandria.

Respectfully sumbitted, on the part of the directors, by JOHN S. BARBOUR, Jr., Pres.

Stockholders O. & A. R. R. Co.

ENGINEER AND SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

Office Orange and Alexandria R. R. Co.,
Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 5, 1861.

SIR:

It is not possible for me to make a report in detail of the operations of the road in my department for the past fiscal year, or to give you the aggregate working expenses, owing to the fact that important books, containing that information from the 1st of October 1860 to the 1st of May following, are not in my possession. I can only estimate them from recollection, and by the operation since made, for information in a general way, and to show a comparison between them and the revenue.

I am quite confident that when the books are obtained, that they will not increase them over my estimate of two hundred and twenty thousand ($220,000) dollars; which gives a ratio of working expenses to revenue, of thirty-seven per cent., the revenue being six hundred and four thousand and twenty-five dollars and forty-four cents ($604,025.44), made up from the following sources, viz.:

From passengers	$206,668.85
Government troops	194,520.35
Government freight	67,104.34
Individual freight	92,137.43
United States mail	22,600.79
Confederate States mail	6,108.33
Southern Express	7,071.33
Adams' Express	6,846.95
News agency	305.00
Telegraph	662.07
Total	$604,025.44

We have sixteen locomotives belonging to us. One of them was undergoing repairs in the machine shop at Alexandria at the time of the invasion, and was in such condition that it could not be removed; and another, the "Fairfax," was regarded only valuable as old iron; a third, the "Fauquier," though brought out of Alexandria, has been of no service owing to her light weight and general uselessness—so that we have thirteen locomotives in actual use; and at this time they are all in running order. Since the 17th day of April these engines mostly have been without shelter, and depending upon a lathe and a blacksmith's forge for repairs.

It almost seems that they felt it to be their duty to keep themselves in order for the occasion, though much credit is due to those connected with the machinery and running department, for their skill and watchfulness.

Of course they are wearing considerably, and whenever we shall have time, will require both work and expense to place them in the condition they were in, at the commencement of the extraordinary demand upon them.

The road department has not been placed in as complete a condition as it would have been, had we been able to supply ourselves with iron rails and ties; but I consider it in good order, and with the materials on hand and procurable, can keep it so.

Three accidents have occurred to the trains during the year; one at Orange courthouse, on the 25th of May, caused by the passenger train running into a standing troop train on the main track, causing the death of one person, and injury to two persons: one between Gordonsville and Madison, caused by breaking of a coupling on a descending grade, and a collision between the two parts of the train, causing the death of two persons; and the third was near Rappahannock station, to an empty freight train, caused either by the breaking of a cord or a small bridge, or by some derangement of the cars upon the bridge, resulting in the breaking of three freight cars, but no injury to any one.

Great credit and praise are due to officers and men in our service, for the manner in which they have performed their several duties, enduring the hardships of their various posts, without faltering or murmuring.

I regret that for the want of material I am obliged to make you so meagre a report; but I am gratified that the result of the operations of last year is the best that we have had since the opening of the road.

Respectfully,

H. W. VANDEGRIFT,
Ch. Eng. & Gen. Supt.

J. S. Barbour, Jr., Esq., Pres.

Mr. Harrison: In the original record in the testimony of Major Robert W. Hunter concerning the conditions of property in Virginia in the war period he referred to an article that would soon appear, it had not then been published, but was about to be published from Professor John W. Mallet of the University of Virginia.

Mr. Holt: That is the old chemist, is it?

Mr. Harrison: Professor of Chemistry of the University of Virginia, a great scientist with an international reputation. Professor Mallet was ordnance officer during the war with the rank of Colonel. The article that Major Hunter referred to he said contained data and information bearing upon the subject that he was then testifying to. We have that article which was published in the Richmond Dispatch on Monday, June 13th, 1909. Dr. Mallet has been dead for two or three years, and we would like to read into the record an extract from it, which I will read without it being taken down at this point.

Mr. Lilly: I would like to suggest that the other day Mr. Glenn swore to the conditions of the roads, and on cross-examination he had never been more than twenty miles. It is unfortunate that we do not know how much Professor Mallet traveled.

The Master: Is there any objection to this extract?

Mr. Harrison: It is part of the history of the times.

Mr. Lilly: We feel constrained to object to that. It is a newspaper article.

The Master: I am going to do this about this piece of evidence. Of course I have not my mind fresh about the rules that relate to testimony of this character, and we are all familiar with the general situation. My impression is, Mr Harrison, that it is not admissible, but I am going to admit it de bene with notice to you that if when my attention is called to the authorities my judgment is it is not admissible, I shall simply exclude it from consideration. You will have to take that chance.

Mr. Harrison: All right.

The Master: Of course it is not doing me any harm, if I exclude it from consideration. I make this suggestion. It is not final, I shall admit it with the understanding that if I ultimately decide that it is not competent within the well recognized rules, I shall exclude it, and I simply make that suggestion so that if you want to cover the ground in any other way anticipating that it may be excluded, you have an opportunity to do it.

Mr. Harrison: All right.

The Master: But I will admit it with that suggestion.

Mr. Holt: Your Honor, in order to illustrate that character of evidence—

The Master: It is all disposed of, Judge. We won't take any time.

Mr. Holt: This is only two lines in a morning paper under the title of "What was news fifty years ago," taken from the Richmond Dispatch, September 12, 1864, "The net earnings of the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad Company for the year ending June 3rd was $1,157,551.33."

The Master: Do you want to offer that? If you do I shall admit it, subject to the same suggestion. Of course this case is not being tried by a jury.

Mr. Harrison: Let it go in with the date.

Mr. Holt: One other line from the same news of fifty years ago. "Gold was quoted in New York on September 7th at 241."

The Master: What year?

Mr. Holt: 1864.

Mr. Harrison: The date is very material. What is the year?

Mr. Holt: It is from the Richmond Dispatch of September 12, 1864.

The Master: It is one of these familiar columns of "Fifty years ago today."

Mr. Holt: That is it.

The Master: Now, do the West Virginia people offer it?

Mr. Holt: Not now.

Mr. Harrison: We would be glad to have it in if you want to have it in.

The Master: Now, proceed.

Mr. Harrison: I want the stenographer to get this.

The Master: Just hand it to the stenographer and he will put it in.

Mr. Harrison: We offer from the Times-Dispatch, Richmond, Virginia, Sunday, June 13, 1909, to be known as Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 23, the following extract from article headed "Work of Ordnance Bureau of the War Department of the Confederate States, 1861-1865. By J. W. Mallet, Ex-Lieutenant Colonel of Artillery and Superintendent of Confederate States Ordnance Laboratories:

"Besides the immediate work of the Ordnance Bureau it had to undertake a great number of most onerous outside tasks rendered necessary by the disorganized condition of society. While indispensable help was obtained from the railroads, they had in turn to be helped, and largely, in making repairs to their rolling stock and tracks. In fact, a silent partnership grew up, and materials and labor had to be used almost in common for a common end. It is easy to see how vitally necessary it was that the railroads should be kept going, but few people now seem to be aware how nearly exhausted at the close of the war the railroad system of the south had become. Almost every yard of siding that could be spared had been taken up, to patch the main lines, less important roads had been despoiled to help out the greater ones, fractional parts of wrecked locomotives had been built up into new ones of more or less feeble constitution, cars had been mended until they would hardly hold together, and it may not unreasonably be doubted whether, aside from other sources of weakness, this alone might not in a few months more at furthest have put an end to the maintenance of Confederate armies in the field."

Mr. Harrison: I want to ask Mr. Potter a question.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Mr. Potter, please refer to the original record, beginning at page 1053 and continuing from that page to page 1065 inclusive, being an exhibit denominated Defendant's Exhibit, and headed summary of cash receipts and disbursements of the Commonwealth of Virginia from March 19, 1823, to January 1, 1861. Please state what that exhibit contains with reference to the assets.

The Master: Don't you cover everything when you give notice that you rely on that exhibit? Have you got any further examination? This is in the case, it is not necessary to prove it by Mr. Potter.

Mr. Harrison: I want to prove that that exhibit contains the assets that are enumerated in the supplemental answer.

The Master: Does not the exhibit show it?

Mr. Harrison: I think it does.

The Master: Just give notice that you propose to refer to it. Mr. Potter cannot strengthen that exhibit any. Don't that cover your ground?

Mr. Harrison: I think it may be well to have him answer that question.

The Master: All right, go ahead.

By The Master:

Q. The question is, does it cover the items referred to in the supplemental answer?

A. It covers the cost of all of the assets treated in the supplemental answer.

Q. The exhibit shows for itself, does it not, what it covers?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. It does not show the value or the disposition?

A. No, sir.

The Master. That exhibit will be read by everybody. You cannot add anything to it and you cannot take anything from it.

Mr. Holt: Well, I was asking for information.

The Master: Anything else, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: No.

The Master: Of course it is understood that this original record can be used by either side at the argument.

Mr. Harrison: Yes. I have nothing further to ask Mr. Potter, but I would like to know—are you gentlemen through?

The Master: It is up to you. Are you through.

Mr. Harrison: Would it be agreeable to you to take the deposition of Mr. Axtell?

The Master: Have you anything else?

Mr. Harrison: I do not think we have.

The Master: Then the only thing left is this question about the testimony of Mr. Axtell. What is your suggestion about that, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: We will take his deposition, fix a date at some time that will suit the convenience of the other side, as soon as possible.

The Master: What have you to say about that on the other side?

Mr. Harrison: I hoped they would be willing to save themselves the trouble by letting this letter go in.

The Master: They have stated they will not admit that letter without cross-examination.

Mr. Lilly: I do not think we ought to be expected to.

The Master: You need not discuss that part of it. The only question now is what have you to say as to the suggestion about the deposition.

Mr. Holt: My feeling about that is this: We have been here for several weeks. It is a pretty long journey, for a sick man at least, and Mr. Axtell has been in this town to my personal knowledge frequently during this inquiry. And why we should be dragged back here simply to take his deposition, when it could have been taken here during this time, I am unable to understand.

Mr. Harrison: I can explain that, Judge. It is true we have been here several weeks. But all of that time has been occupied by your side, by the putting in of your evidence, and we have had barely two days, and have gone under whip and spur to expedite matters and to save ourselves and you the trouble of prolonging this investigation beyond this week. And under such disadvantages have we labored in order to do that that we have had to receive schedules prepared here at the bar, without any opportunity for previous examination. It was an embarrassing thing to examine the witness, because of the lack of opportunity first to familiarize ourselves with the details. Now, I do not think in fairness we are subject to criticism for not having rushed Mr. Axtell in during the two days that we have been rushing to get in all of our testimony. We have done the best we could. We have occupied two days, where you have had several weeks. Now, we are in this situation; we want his testimony. And as much as we regret the necessity of having to trouble ourselves or you to take it, I do not see how we can avoid it.

The Master: Of course the testimony of Mr. Axtell, as indicated by that letter, must have been as obvious after this supplemental answer was filed as it is now, because it relates fully to this James River and Kanawha Canal Company. It certainly is not dependent upon any schedule that anybody has put in. He does not know anything about the schedules, and his information is not of that character. Now, there cannot be any doubt about that fact, as it seems to me, because on the basis of preparation, his testimony must have been known to be as significant then as it is now. Of course if he had been here I suppose we could have had his attendance almost at anytime; we could have arranged that. I suppose you have not been able to get in touch with him since we adjourned last night?

Mr. Harrison: I called his office up the first chance I had, and I was told he left town last night.

Mr. Lilly: May I ask the date of that letter, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: I think it is July 30th.

The Master: It is rather an embarrassing situation. I do not want to leave either party here in a position where there is going to be lacking of something that they think is material. How does this suggestion take care of the situation, what is the reason Mr. Axtell cannot be brought to New York and examined when we get there for argument? Everybody knows what he is expected to testify, and it relates to simply one item. Can you do that?

Mr. Harrison: Anything the Court suggests.

The Master: If the other side are willing to agree to that, I think that under the circumstances the plaintiff ought to accede to it. Of course I know the difficulties about a case of this size and magnitude, but when you come to this specific concrete proposition it is pretty difficult for me to find that Mr. Axtell could not have been discovered.

Mr. Harrison: If your Honor please, there is no question about the discovery of Mr. Axtell and the accessibility of Mr. Axtell. I did not know until ten days ago that he had written a letter and made some report in connection with the James River and Kanawha Company. I did not see the letter until about ten days ago, and then I made up my mind that the first opportunity I would get, if these gentlemen would not admit his letter, I would get him here. My mind has been occupied and all of us here have been occupied with other things. It was a mere incident in the examination.

The Master: I do not want to give a direction that is going to deprive the Virginia people of the opportunity to adduce this examination.

Mr. Harrison: If your Honor thinks we are not entitled to examine him, that is all right. Let it appear on the record.

The Master: I have not intimated that I do not think you are entitled to examine him.

Mr. Holt: I think we can relieve the situation by a suggestion. One suggestion by way of introduction, first. Of course any time that they would have brought Mr. Axtell in here your Honor would have stopped and heard him, whether in place or out of place, just as our cross-examination was stopped yesterday for the purpose of examining Mr. Williams and the other gentlemen. The Master has accommodated us in every respect and we have made no objection to the order of proof at all. But we are perfectly willing, and this entirely removes the objection I have to coming back here and taking this testimony—we are willing if they will bring him to New York at the hearing to let his deposition then be taken, giving us an opportunity to cross-examine. I am given to understand that Mr. Axtell is frequently in New York.

Mr. Harrison: I will bring him to New York if he will come. Mr. Axtell is a busy man.

The Master: Of course he is a man of substance and business and I do not think you will have any trouble in that respect.

Mr. Harrison: I do not know whether I will or not. I cannot answer for that except to say that I will do it if I can.

The Master: My judgment is that there is not going to be any doubt about his being accommodating enough to be there. We will leave the matter in that way, that Mr. Axtell will be examined prior to the beginning of the argument in New York.

Mr. Harrison: I do not want to be confined to this proposition, that we cannot examine him unless we can examine him in New York.

The Master: Of course when we reach that condition if you are in a position of embarrassment I will take that up then, but Mr. Harrison will do everything that he reasonably can do to get Mr. Axtell there. Have you anything more, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: It is understood that these other exhibits are being prepared?

The Master: Yes, absolutely. I will have the printers keep the case in type so that when we get there and get Mr. Axtell's examination I will have it put right in, so that so far as the record is concerned there will not appear to be any hiatus and it will be part of the original record.

Mr. Robinson: Some arrangement will be made so that we will be given copies of this record as quick as it will be ready?

The Master: I am going to try to make that arrangement.

Mr. Holt: Now, your Honor, we are ready in about five minutes to complete.

The Master: Go ahead then.

Mr. Lilly: If your Honor please, we have the blueprints and maps showing the dock property and towpath, etc., of the James River and Kanawha Canal and also the location of the Richmond & Allegheny Railroad Company with reference to that, and it consists of something like two hundred maps, and of course we do not want to encumber the printed record unless it is insisted on, but we want to introduce it and let the Master inspect it, and use it for argument.

Mr. Holt: I suspect the gentlemen will agree that it may be omitted.

The Master: It is admitted for that purpose, and if Mr. Anderson says they are genuine blueprints, that is all that is necessary.

J. K. ANDERSON,

recalled for further examination in behalf of the defendant, testified as follows:

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. Mr. Anderson, I note you have some blueprints here with reference to the Richmond & Allegheny Railroad. Where did you get them?

A. I received them from the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company through their chief engineer in August, 1914.

The Master: All that is necessary for him is to say that they are genuine duplicate blueprints of what they purport to show.

Mr. Lilly: They are the original blueprints.

The Witness: They are the blueprints taken from the original map tracings or tracing of the map entitled "Property Maps of the Richmond and Allegheny R. R., Richmond to Clifton Forge, including the Buckingham R. R. and the Lexington Branch. Property acquired by the R. & A. R. R. Co.—yellow."

The Master: They are what they purport on their face to be?

The Witness: With these exceptions, your Honor, that they only show the line of road from Richmond to Buchanan and up the Lexington Branch to Lexington or close to it.

Q. These are the original blueprints that you got from the Company, are they?

A. Yes, sir; I compared them with the tracings and they were made from the original tracings in the possession of the company.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. You made the blueprints?

A. No. sir, they made the blueprints and furnished them to me.

Q. They are the blueprints that the railroad furnished you?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Lilly:

Q. What are the first two sheets of the blueprints? Just tell the Master what the first two sheets are.

The Master: Don't they show for themselves?

Mr. Lilly: I want to get it in the record.

A. I think that perhaps a word of explanation would be better. Sheet No. A shows the lower end of the dock property in the city of Richmond, Virginia. Sheet No. B shows the upper end and a portion of the basin or lower end of the old canal property. Sheet No. O shows the lower end of the canal property.

Q. Just file those three and mark them Exhibits AA, BB, and CC.

The Master: These will be placed in the custody of Mr. Bonynge and he will take care of them.

Mr. Lilly: And we also wish to file the title page as DD.

The maps were admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibits AA, BB, CC, and DD, September 12, 1914, C. B.

Q. What are the rest of these blueprints, Mr. Anderson?

A. The remainder of these sheets show the alignment of the old R. & A. from the first mile post or station O to Buchanan and up to Lexington on the branch line.

Q. Do they show the amount of new right of way that it was necessary for the R. & A. to acquire in order to construct this line?

A. They do. The amount which they acquired is simply checked off in yellow check marks, the old James River and Kanawha right of way being left uncolored, but originally colored red.

Q. I understand these blueprints show the original canal and towpath and the location of the Richmond and Allegheny Railroad center line, and any additional right of way that was necessary for the R. & A. to purchase in order to construct its road?

A. Yes, together with the locks and other structures.

Mr. Lilly: We will file those, marked R. & A. Exhibits from O to 195 inclusive.

The Master: An exhibit consisting of pages from O to 195, one exhibit.

The Witness: And on the Lexington Branch, from 174 to 195.

Q. Mr. Anderson, on page 1240 of the typewritten record you were asked certain questions with reference to the Manassas Gap Railroad, and you have extended your answers. I wish you would submit a copy to the gentlemen on the other side, and we would like to have these two sheets placed in the record where they should have been the other day, simply asking the amount invested at certain times in the construction of the road and when it first began construction and its progress up to 1860.

A. I find in Senate Journal & Document 1852-53, filed in the Virginia State Library at Richmond, Virginia, Document 24 on page 8, which is a report of the Senate Committee of Finance & Claims relative to the debt of the State from September 30, 1850, to September 30, 1852, and to the receipts and disbursements of the Treasury during years 1852 and 1853, and under a separate heading in said report, entitled "Funds & Resources of the State on 30th of September, 1851, stocks in improvement companies not completed—

Manassas Gap Railroad Co. .....$38,981.00."

I also find in this same document, on page 9, loans obtained by the Board of Public Works to pay subscriptions which have been made to the following companies:

Railroad Companies: $2,043,144.00
Manassas Gap Railroad Co. 176,775.54

I also find in said library, Document No. 17 for the years 1853 and 1854, page XXII, Report of the Board of Public Works to the General Assembly, dated January 28, 1854, the following data:

Manassas Gap Railroad
Length 112
Completed 42 1-2
In progress 69 3-4.
Capital stock authorized $2,400,000.00
Payment made by State 502,000.00

I also find in the same document No. 17, page 287, which is a report for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1853, the following extract from the proceedings of a meeting of stockholders:

"Pursuant to public notice, the stockholders of the Manassas Gap Railroad Company met at Liberty Hall, January 12, 1853, and organized."

Also in the same Document No. 17, page 304, I quote from the President's Report to the stockholders:

"The trains have been running to Markham, 38 miles, since 10th of December last, and for a day or two past to the Summit Cut. Some few days will elapse before the obstacles in the way of access to the station at the Summit, Linden, can be removed. This station is at the summit of the Blue Ridge, the point of diversion of the eastern and western waters, distant 42 miles from the junction and 70 from Alexandria on the east, 8 miles from the river, and 18 miles from Strasburg on the west.

Provision was made for the completion of the road to this point as early as May last."

Delay caused by failure of delivery of rails from England and a riot in June last among the hands at Summit Cut, which was suppressed by armed patrols and those remaining were kept at work by guard since the riot.

The road from Linden to Strasburg is all under contract and some sections completed. Mr. Goldsborough calculates to have the road bed ready for superstructure by June first next and track ready for trains to Strasburg by the first of September, or sooner."

And on page 312, Document No. 17, I quote as follows:

"Expended on construction from its organization on the 1st day of August, 1850, to the 30th day of September, 1853—

Total amount expended.....	$1,166,573.84
Less other items—
$59,565.08
92,000.00
4,021.59	155,586.67
Actual Cost Expenses.....	$1,010,987.17"

And on page 313, Document No. 17, from August 10, 1852, to September 30, 1853—

"Disbursed on construction, etc.....	$470,925 72
Spent on construction, etc., from August 1, 1850, to August 10, 1852..	540,061.45"

From this I conclude that the work of construction began in 1850, or early in 1851.

Mr. Holt: I will ask you to refer to the report of the president of the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad for the year 1882, and will then ask that it be read into the record, the annual report, Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company, ending September 30, 1881.

The Master: Hand the duplicate of it to the other side.

Mr. Holt: I will do so.

Mr. Anderson: We object to the competency of this evidence. I do not know how he can say anything that is evidence.

The Master: There is quite a good deal of the same character of testimony in the record. There are a good many reports of presidents. All these are subject to objection. Of course all these reports of presidents and anything else, if you can satisfy me that it is not competent evidence, out it goes. This is open to every objection. If the report of the president is admissible for one purpose, probably it is for another.

Mr. Holt: The report is as follows:

ANNUAL REPORT

THE RICHMOND & ALLEGHANY RAILROAD CO.

Ending September 30, 1881.

This printed volume is in the possession of Mr. Decatur Axtell, Vice-President of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, of Richmond, Virginia. I quote as follows from page 5, &c.:

"To the Stockholders:

The Board of Directors respectfully submit herewith their report for the fiscal year of the company ending by law of State, 30th September, 1881, with the accompanying statements.

The report of the General Manager is added. The fiscal reports of the James River & Kanawha Company, and the Buchanan and Clifton Forge Railroad Company, are presented herewith, and will be published by this Company.

The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company acquired the properties, works and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company, and the Buchanan and Clifton Forge Railway Company, at a cost, in stock and cash, of $6,389,511.93, thus securing legal right of way for its railway lines, basin and docks in Richmond, and other property, including liens of $1,537,381.42.

The Company acquired rights of way needed by improved location at a further cost, in cash, of $199,097.83. These disbursements have been arbitrarily divided "Distributed" between Richmond dock property, valued at $1,000,000, and rights of way and franchise, $5,588,609.76. Total $6,586,609.76.

Under an agreement between the trustees of the first mortgage and this Company, provision was made out of proceeds of first mortgage bonds for existing liens, which liens were to be acquired by the trustees and held uncancelled as a muniment of title and for further assurance.

The amount of these liens outstanding was	$1,537,381.42
Of which the Trustees on the 30th September, 1882 had acquired	1,393,637.66
They have since delivered to the State of Virginia	74,743.04
	$1,318,894.62

The amount of liens outstanding has been diminished by State bonds for maintenance of convicts employed on B. & C. F. Ry	79,128.15
County of Rockbridge bonds acquired by completion of road	50,000.00
City of Lynchburg bonds acquired by water works contract	35,000.00
	$ 164,128.15

The amount of liens now outstanding, as held by First Mortgage Trustees	$1,318,894.62
Held by others	54,358.65
Total outstanding	$1,373,253.27

CONSTRUCTION.

The main stem, Richmond to Williamsons (with arrangement for temporary use of track of Virginia Midland through Lynchburg, as contemplated by statute), was completed 12th

September, 1881; the branch to Lexington 14th October, 1881.

The road was opened under the auspices of the Board of Public Works of the State of Virginia on 15th October, 1881, and upon certificate of the consulting Engineer, in presence of passengers brought to Howardsville by trains from Richmond, Williamsons and Lexington, the final instalment of U. S. bonds, deposited as pledge for fulfillment of statutory contract, of 5th March, 1880, was delivered to the Company. The statutory period for completion of 50 miles west from Richmond, and 56 miles from Williamsons to North River, in all 106 miles was 5th July, 1881; these sections were completed 13th April, 1881, at which date 146½ miles on both sections had been completed.

The date of completion of 250 miles was 15th October, 1881.

OPERATION AND INCOME.

During period of construction neither canal nor railroad could be operated profitably, as the energies of the organization and its equipment were largely engaged in hastening construction. The severity of the winter of 1880 greatly retarded the work, and the canal from a source of revenue became one of expense, the result showing a charge of more than ten thousand dollars on this account. On the other hand, the facilities for the transportation and distribution of material afforded by the canal may be safely estimated to have saved the construction account a much larger amount. The receipts for water power were nine thousand dollars.

These accounts present only sums received from the public, and no constructive charges against 2,702,000 mile-tons of construction material transported have been credited as earnings. The materials have been charged only with the sums disbursed for transportation and labor.

The resulting balances show a net profit, from operation of the railway, of seventeen thousand dollars during the period of constructions, and of nearly thirty-eight thousand dollars from the Richmond docks. The total general expenditures from acquisition of the property were sixty-one thousand dollars, leaving a final charge to construction account of $6,002.92.

WATER POWER.

An engineer of water power has been appointed and under careful supervision it is believed that this department of the property will become an important one. Little has been done, or could be done, while the pressure of building absorbed attention and resources. When the property was acquired rents were in arrears, obsolete methods prevailed in use of water, and litigation and claims impaired the value of existing grants. Measures are under consideration for the material improvement of the power of Richmond.

The power owned by the City of Manchester has been acquired by this Company.

The difference between the authorities of Lynchburg and the canal company, as to their several rights and liabilities at that point, have been happily adjusted—The Company builds a substantial stone dam, toward the cost of which the city contributed by releasing the debt and lien of $35,000 upon that level, and the rents, held as collateral, come to this Company.

One dam (Varneys Falls), not needed for water power has been destroyed, others will follow doubtless. Those whose maintenance will be justified by the power supplied, must under requirements of law be furnished with fish-ways.

CONSOLIDATION.

The important events in the history of the Company are, first, the contract entered into with the Ohio Central Railroad Company, of Ohio, the Atlantic & Northwestern Railroad Company, of West Virginia, and this company, for the consolidation of the three companies; the subscription of five million dollars, secured for completion of existing lines; extension of the Ohio Central to the Ohio River; bridging of the Ohio and construction of railroad to Charleston, West Virginia.

The special meeting of Stockholders, held in Richmond on 23rd June, ratified this contract by a stock vote of 47,231 shares of the 50,000, all in favor of the proposition.

The projected route of the extension is from Eagle Rock, seventeen miles north of Buchanan, following the valley of Craig's Creek, and by tunnel of one mile to the valley of Sinking Creek, a tributary of New River. The route admits of a line with maximum grade of thirty feet. The length of the entire lines, consolidated and to be constructed, may be stated at 800 miles.

The basin property in Richmond is the site selected for local freight and passenger stations. Application has been made to this company for accomodation for other railways, and a union station may be conveniently located here.

The connection between this basin and the docks by trestles and bridges is in progress, and will be completed about May 1, 1882. The dam at Lynchburg, above referred to, it is hoped will be completed by August 1, 1882. Both are expensive structures.

CONSTRUCTION.

(p. 10)

Excepting along Maiden's Adventure Pond, Tye River Pond, and about a mile on the south side of James River, near the Joshua Falls Bridge, the track was everywhere laid upon the tow-path between Richmond and Lynchburg.

It has since been removed from the tow-path in several places where the curvature was excessive, and placed upon unobjectionable alignment. This work could only be done economically after the suspension of navigation upon the canal.

Between Lynchburg and Buchanan and Lexington newly-graded roadbed is almost continuous and is nearly everywhere higher than the tow-path. From Buchanan to Williamsons this road was built upon the unfinished work of the Buchanan and Clifton Forge Railroad. The character of the work has been commended by competent critics, and there is no doubt that after the new embankments become settled the expenses of maintenance can be kept at a very low figure. Experience with the maintenance of the track upon the tow-path has fully sustained the expectations of those who have asserted its advantages as a roadbed.

At Richmond a commodious freight building with necessary track is under construction in the basin. A timber trestle has been decided upon, extending from Eleventh Street to Nineteenth Street, upon property owned by the company, excepting the station near to the Richmond & Danville R. R., across which right of way has been obtained under an agreement requiring this company to span the yard with two iron bridges resting on three masonry piers.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A series of maps are being prepared which will, when completed, show the complete alignment of the road as well as the boundaries of the rights of way and other real estate belonging to the company.

Much attention has been given to the work of collecting and arranging the evidences of title to the rights of way and the numerous outlying pieces of real estate that belong to the company; when it is remembered that some of these titles date back a century, and that many of the original papers were destroyed by fire at the time of the evacuation of Richmond in 1865, some idea may be formed of the amount of painstaking labor involved.

Nearly everywhere below Lynchburg the canal intervenes between the track and the hills and thus affords protection. The tow-path has proven a most excellent roadbed, which is greatly conductive to economy in maintenance. Free from undulating grades the road admits of steady rates of speed by passenger and freight trains and enables quick time to be made without the dangers and discomforts of rapid descents and slow and expensive ascents of gradients, advantages seldom possessed by railroads as ordinarily constructed. The only drawback to these advantages is the sharp curvature in a number of places.

To meet the obligation of existing losses the water must be maintained in the canal for about seventy miles between Richmond and Lynchburg and for about eight miles above the latter city. The dams furnishing water and the canal banks have needed but slight repairs during the past year; but maintenance of a supply of water for such a distance involves much risk to the road bed, and aside from the risks it is unprofitable to keep up long levels to supply the wants of small consumers. The conditions are very different from those which obtained when the canal was used for navigation. The supply of power to wayside mills was incidental and the revenue therefrom clear gain; now the petty rentals cut a small figure in the added cost of maintenance which they involve. For these reasons the Receivers have decided to grant new leases at points near the dams only, a conclusion further warranted by the fact that manufacturing enterprises of importance, such as should be fostered, must needs locate near the source of supply.

(P-58.)

The Receivers have caused inducements to be offered to manufacturers to the end that some of the vast amount of power now idle at the numerous dams may be put to some good work that will aid in the development of the country and of the road: but thus far no results have attended the efforts, except in the re-opening of the large iron and nail works above Lynchburg.
(P-59.)

In the minds of the promoters of the road and the early investors, the value of the Richmond docks, the water power and the minor outlying parcels of real estate, was rated very high. It is probably safe to predict that, if rightly managed, these properties will ultimately justify the early expectations; but it should be kept in mind that, like any large estate, the value of which is largely potential, they will require time, watchful care and a sacrifice of immediate gains, if they are to be made to realize their best possibilities.

CROSS EXAMINATION

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Anderson, do you know anything as to the condition of the Manassas Gap Railroad in 1861?

A. Nothing at all.

Q. Do you know anything at all as to its condition on June 20, 1863?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether in fact it was completed until after the war, to Harrisonburg?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do not the facts which you have discovered indicate that it was not completed to Harrisonburg?

A. I so stated in my testimony, that it was completed to Mount Jackson, from such information that I could obtain and was under construction to Harrisonburg, from Mount Jackson to Harrisonburg.

Q. You have no personal knowledge as to its condition or whether it was completed to Harrisonburg in 1861 or 1863?

A. No, sir.

The Master: He was not born at either of those dates, so he could not know anything about that.

Mr. Anderson: That is all.

Mr. Holt: We read into the record, your Honor, an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, an Act to convert the branch of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia at Jeffersonville into a Separate and Independant Bank, passed March 13, 1862, and found in the Acts of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, passed in 1861-2, found at page 90 of the book referred to, as follows:

Chap. 75.—An Act to convert the Branch of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia at Jeffersonville into a Separate and Independant Bank.

Passed March 13, 1862.

Whereas the armed occupation of Northwestern Virginia, by lawless enemies of this state, has entirely destroyed all business intercourse and relations between the Northwestern Bank of Virginia at Wheeling and its branch at Jeffersonville, to the great detriment of the state and loyal stockholders, and it seems proper under the circumstances to dissolve the connection heretofore subsisting between said bank and its branch at Jeffersonville, and of authorizing the latter to transact business as a separate and independent corporation:

1. Be it therefore enacted by the General Assembly, that the branch of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia at Jeffersonville be and the same is hereby constituted, created and incorporated a separate, distinct and independent bank, under the corporate name of Graziers Bank of Virginia; and all the power, control, direction, supervision, relation and connection of said Northwestern Bank of Virginia over and with the said branch at Jeffersonville, are hereby dissolved, abrogated and annulled.

2. All the assets held by said branch (embracing all bills and notes discounted, whether the same be in suit, protested, due or maturing, all judgments, balances due on accounts current, all money, either in coin or currency, all evidence of debt or other securities, all real estate, and every right and interest) are absolutely vested in the said Graziers Bank of Virginia; and in every case where suit has been instituted in the name of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia for the recovery of money or other thing, to which said branch is entitled the suit so brought shall be prosecuted in the name of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia, for the use and benefit of said Graziers Bank of Virginia; and in every case where suit shall hereafter be instituted for the recovery of money or other things belonging to said branch, the suit shall be in the name of said Graziers Bank of Virginia.

3. The said Graziers Bank of Virginia is subject to all the liabilities of the said branch, except so far as the said liabilities are modified by the following sections of this act.

4. The said Graziers Bank of Virginia shall in no event be required to account to the said Northwestern Bank of Virginia for any portion of the net profits or contingent fund of the said branch, nor to contribute to the payment of, or pay out of the assets of said branch, or otherwise, to any stockholder, billholder or creditor of the said Northwestern Bank, any sum or sums of money which any such stockholder, billholder or creditor may be entitled to demand and have of said Northwestern Bank of Virginia.

5. At any time within three months from the passage of this act, any loyal holder of stock in the Northwestern Bank of Virginia, whose stock in said bank was purchased through the said branch, or whose dividends have usually heretofore been credited to him at said branch, may return and assign to said Graziers Bank of Virginia such stock, and demand and receive in lieu thereof a certificate for a like number of shares of stock in the said Graziers Bank of Virginia.

6. As soon as may be after the expiration of the said three months from the passage of this act, the governor of the state shall cause certificates of the stock held by the state in the said Northwestern Bank of Virginia, for an amount equal to the balance of the capital stock of said branch, not exchanged under the previous section, to be in like manner returned and assigned to said Graziers Bank of Virginia, for a like number of shares of the stock thereof.

7. The Graziers Bank of Virginia, hereby established, shall be required to redeem, from loyal citizens of the Confederate States of America, in notes of its own issue, all such notes of said branch as may be in their possession at the passage of this act; provided the same be presented in six months after notice of this provision shall have been published for one month in some weekly newspaper published in the city of Richmond; and provided further, the amount offered for redemption shall not exceed one hundred and eighty thousand dollars.

8. The legislature reserves the power to provide, after the termination of the war with the United States, the extent, mode and time of redemption by said Graziers Bank of Virginia, of any outstanding notes of said branch, with which, according to the principles of equity, justice and right, it is chargeable. But as it is represented to this general assembly that the said branch has a special deposit of twenty-four thousand dollars in gold with the said Northwestern Bank of Virginia, heretofore made by said branch to meet the redemption of its notes; and as notes payable at said branch may have been issued by the said Northwestern Bank of Virginia, which have not been reported to said branch, nor charged to said Northwestern Bank of Virginia, and which it would be evidently unjust to require the said branch to redeem, it is hereby expressly provided and enacted, that the whole amount of circulation of the said branch, which the said Graziers Bank of Virginia shall be required to redeem, under the provisions of this act, and of any subsequent act of the legislature, taken collectively, shall not exceed the balance of the circulation of said branch, after deducting therefrom the sum of twenty-four thousand dollars on account of said special deposit, and also any amount or amounts of circulation payable at said branch (if any such there be), issued by the said Northwestern Bank of Virginia, of which the said branch has not heretofore received notice from said Northwestern Bank of Virginia.

9. The cashier shall forthwith, after the expiration of three months from the passage of this act, out of the surplus or contingent fund of the said branch, pass to the credit of the stockholders of the said Graziers Bank of Virginia and to the state, a dividend of ten per centum upon their stock issued under the provisions of the fifth and sixth sections of this act.

10. The said Graziers Bank of Virginia shall be located and transact its business at the town of Jeffersonville.

11. The said Graziers Bank of Virginia may, by sales of new stock, increase its capital to two hundred thousand dollars.

12. The present board of directors for the said branch shall continue to act as a board of directors for the said Graziers Bank of Virginia until a new board shall be appointed under the general law.

13. Except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act, the general banking law of the state shall apply to the said Graziers Bank of Virginia: and the general law of joint stock companies shall apply to the said Graziers Bank of Virginia, so far as the same is applicable to it, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

14. This act shall be in force from it passage, but may be repealed, altered or modified, at the pleasure of the General Assembly."

Mr. Holt:

We read into the record another act upon the same subject, of the General Assembly of Virginia, entitled "An Act amending and re-enacting the 5th and 6th sections of the act passed March 13, 1862, entitled an act to convert the Northwestern Bank of Virginia at Jeffersonville into a separate and independent Bank, passed March 11, 1863, and found in the Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed at a called session, 1862, found at page 84 of the volume of Acts referred to, as follows:

Chap. 51.—An Act amending and re-enacting the 5th and 6th sections of the act passed March 13, 1862, entitled an Act to convert the Northwestern Bank of Virginia at Jeffersonville into a separate and independent Bank.

Passed March 11, 1863.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, that the fifth and sixth sections of the act passed March thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, entitled an act to convert the branch of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia at Jeffersonville into a separate and independent bank, be amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"3. At any time within three months from the passage of this act, any loyal holder of stock in the Northwestern Bank of Virginia, whose stock in said bank was purchased through said branch, or whose dividends have usually heretofore been credited to him at said branch, may return and assign to the said Graziers Bank of Virginia such stock, and demand and receive in lieu thereof a certificate for a like number of shares of stock in said Graziers Bank of Virginia: provided, however, that if before the first day of July eighteen hundred and sixty-three, satisfactory reasons shall be shown to the board of directors of the Graziers Bank for the failure of any such stockholder to avail himself of the benefits of the foregoing provision, the said board shall certify such reasons, with their opinion on the same, to the governor.

"6. As soon as may be after the expiration of the said three months from the passage of this act, the governor of the state shall cause certificates of the stock held by the state in the said Northwestern Bank of Virginia, for an amount equal to the balance of the capital stock of said branch, not exchanged under the previous section, to be in like manner returned and assigned to said Graziers Bank of Virginia, for a like number of shares of the stock thereof: provided, however, that on the certificate authorized in the preceding section being received by the governor, it shall be his duty to transfer to the stockholder to whom the same shall be given, out of the stock herein directed to be transferred to the state, a quantity thereof equal to the amount held by such stockholder in the Northwestern Bank, together with any dividends thereon which may have accrued to the state under the sixth section of said act.

2. This act shall be in force from its passage."

Mr. Holt:

In that connection we will have to show by some one that Jeffersonville, unless these gentlemen will admit it, was in the County of Tazewell which is now a part of the State of Virginia.

The Master: And always has been?

Mr. Holt: And always has been.

The Master: Is that conceded, that Jeffersonville is in the County of Tazewell which was then and is now in the State of Virginia?

Mr. Anderson: That is a fact of which the Court will take cognizance.

Mr. Harrison: I have no knowledge on that subject at all.

Mr. Holt: Of course if this Court will take judicial cognizance of it when we call its attention to the fact, that will be satisfactory.

The Master: I will try and do that. If the map shows it is now in Virginia, it will be so held by me when the time comes.

Mr. Holt: We read into the record an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia entitled An Act authorizing the receipt of the treasury notes of the Confederate States in payment of taxes and other public dues, and regulating when and how the same shall be received, passed March 2, 1864, found in the Acts of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, passed at called session, 1863, on page 8 thereof, and is as follows:

Acts of Assembly of Confederate Virginia 1863-4.
On page 8 of said volume will be found the following:

Chap. 3.—An Act authorizing the receipt of the treasury notes of the Confederate States in payment of taxes and other public dues, and regulating when and how the same shall be received.

Passed March 2, 1864.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, that the non-interest bearing treasury notes of the Confederate States, issued after the first day of April eighteen hundred and sixty-four, shall be received in payment of taxes and other public dues, and the non-interest bearing notes of the Confederate States, issued prior to the first day of April eighteen hundred and sixty-four, except the notes of the denomination of one hundred dollars, shall in like manner be received in payment of taxes and other public dues, after the first day of April eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and until the tenth of December eighteen hundred and sixty-four, but only at the rate of sixty-six and two-thirds cents for one dollar of such notes. No sheriff or other collecting officer shall have credit for the notes issued prior to the first day of April eighteen hundred and sixty-four collected by him, unless he shall pay the same into the treasury on or before the twenty-fifth day of December eighteen hundred and sixty-four. Notes of a less denomination than five dollars, issued by said Confederate States, shall be received without abatement at any time.

2. It shall be lawful for sheriffs and other collecting officers of taxes and other public dues to receive, without abatement, until the first day of April eighteen hundred and sixty-four, the non-interest bearing treasury notes of the Confederate States, issued prior to the first day of April eighteen hundue prior to the first day of April eighteen hundred and sixty-four. But no sheriff or other collecting officer shall receive credit But no sheriff or other collecting officer shall receive credit, unlesss he shall pay the same into the treasury on or before the twenty-fifth day of June eighteen hundred and sixty-four, nor until he shall make oath that the notes offered in payment by him were severally and actually received by him in payment of taxes and other public dues, at the times and rates specified in this act.

3. The non-interest bearing treasury notes of the Confederate States of the denomination of five dollars, issued prior to the first day of April eighteen hundred and sixty-four, may be received without abatement in payment of taxes and other public dues until the tenth day of June eighteen hundred and sixty-four; provided the same shall be paid into the treasury on or before the twenty-fifth day of June eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

4. The act passed September fourteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, entitled an act amending and re-enacting the one hundred and ninth section of an act entitled an act imposing taxes for the support of government, passed March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, is hereby repealed.

5. It shall be the duty of the keeper of the rolls to cause this act to be published immediately after its passage, in at least five newspapers published in Richmond, for a period of four weeks.

6. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. Holt:

For the purpose of showing that the stocks in these banks that appear in the supplemental answer of the defendant, owned by the State of Virginia, really became a part of the Sinking Fund of that State, we read into the record an Act of the General Assembly of Virginia entitled "An Act to amend and re-enact the 4th section of an act entitled an act to separate the state from the banks, by a sale of its stock therein, and the application of the proceeds to the redemption of the public debt passed March 18, 1856, was passed April 3, 1858, and found at page 9 of the acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, 1857 and 1858," as follows:

"Chap. II.—An Act to amend and re-enact the 4th section of an act entitled an act to separate the state from the banks, by a sale of its stocks therein, and the application of the proceeds to the redemption of the public debt, passed March 18, 1856.

Passed April, 1858.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, that the fourth section of an act entitled an act to separate the state from the banks, by a sale of its stocks therein, and the application of the proceeds to the redemption of the public debt, passed March eighteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six be amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"4. The proceeds of the sales of the bank stocks hereby directed to be sold, shall be paid into the Sinking Fund, to be applied to the payment and redemption of such part of the state debt as may be redeemable; and if no part thereof be redeemable, then to purchasing and canceling such outstanding bonds or certificates of the debt of this commonwealth as were issued prior to the first day of January eighteen hundred and fifty-two. In purchasing such bonds or certificates of debt those which are redeemable at an early date shall be bought in preference to those which are redeemable at a later date: provided they can be bought at the same price."

2. This act shall be in force from its passage.

The Master: These are all public acts I understand, referable to by counsel on either side, whether they are put in or whether they are not put in.

Mr. Hogg: That is true.

Mr. Robinson: And already a part of the record.

We now read into the record report of the Virginia Debt Commissioners of 1871, addressed to his Excellency J. J. Jacob Governor of West Virginia, and signed J. J. Jackson, J. M. Bennett and A. W. Campbell together with the schedules accompanying same.

REPORT of the
VIRGINIA DEBT COMMISSIONERS OF 1871.

To His Excellency,
J. J. Jacob,
Governor of West Virginia:

Sir: Under the joint resolutions passed by the West Virginia Legislature on the 15th and 24th days of February, last, the undersigned were appointed Commissioners by you "to treat with the authorities of Virginia on the subject of a proposed adjustment of the public debt of that State prior to the first day of January, 1861," and were directed by the Legislature "to make report thereof to the Governor," which we have the honor to do as follows:

On the 9th day of August last the Commissioners met in Parkersburg to confer together upon the subject matter of their appointment and to organize a programme of procedure in respect thereof. They addressed a letter to your Excellency notifying you of their meeting and organization and also the following letter to Governor Walker, of Virginia:

Parkersburg, W. Va.,
August 9, 1871.

To His Excellency, the Governor of Virginia:

Sir: The undersigned have the honor to inform you that under the joint resolutions passed by the Legislature of West Virginia on the 15th and 24th days of February last, they have been appointed Commissioners by the Governor of West Virginia to treat with Virginia in regard to the debt as it stood on the first day of January, 1861.

Also that they met in this city today for the purpose of entering upon the discharge of their duties, and to this end have designated General John J. Jackson as their chairman, through whom they propose to receive such communications as your Excellency may be pleased to submit.

Will your Excellency be pleased to indicate at your earliest convenience what action, if any, has been or is likely to be taken by Virginia in the matter of appointing commissioners, or, in the event of no such appointments, what channel of communication will be open to us.

We have the honor to be,

Your Excellency's most Obedient servants,

JOHN J. JACKSON,
J. M. BENNETT,
A. W. CAMPBELL.

After forwarding this letter, together with the one to your Excellency, the Commissioners adjourned to meet in Richmond on a day to be agreed upon later in the season, there to confer with the authorities of Virginia, and to make such examination of public documents as might enable them to carry out the objects of their appointment.

Meanwhile they received from the Governor of Virginia, in answer to their letter of August 9th, a letter dated September 7th, the same purporting to be a copy of a letter addressed to your Excellency, and which is as follows:

Executive Chambers,
Richmond, Sept., 7, 1871.

His Excellency,
J. J. Jacob,
Governor of West Virginia:

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 17th ulto., notifying me of the appointment of Messers. Bennett, Jackson and Campbell as Commissioners on behalf of the State of West Virginia to treat with the authorities of this State upon the subject of the State debt. I have also received a certified copy of the joint resolution empowering you to make these appointments. Absence from the capital has prevented an earlier response to these several communications.

On the 18th of February, 1870, an act was passed by the Legislature of this State, and approved by me, authorizing the Governor to appoint three Commissioners on behalf of this State to treat with the authorities of West Virginia upon the subject of a proper adjustment of the public debt of the State of Virginia, due or incurred previous to the dismemberment of the State, and a fair division of the public property.

Commissioners were promptly appointed under this act, and notice of their appointment, together with an authenticated copy of the act, were at once forwarded to the Governor of West Virginia. No response whatever to my communication was made by the Governor of West Virginia, but I learned through other sources that the matter was promptly submitted to the Legislature then in session, by which, either by act or resolution, the Governor was authorized to appoint Commissioners to meet and confer with those appointed from Virginia. I have never been informed, however, of the appointment of any Commissioners under the authority thus conferred.

A history of these proceedings, together with a statement of my own views upon the subject, was submitted to our Legislature in my annual message of December last, a copy of which I herewith enclose. The Legislature, acting upon the suggestion of the message, on the 11th day of February last, by a joint resolution, authorized the Governor to tender to the State of West Virginia "an arbitration of all matters touching a full and fair apportionment between said States of the said public debt," an authenticated copy of which joint resolution, together with the tender of an arbitration as therein authorized, was promptly forwarded to the Governor of West Virginia.

This joint resolution, while it does not in terms repeal the act of February 18, 1870, was intended to supersede it, and therefore I do not feel authorized to appoint Commissioners. Our tender of an arbitration has not been withdrawn, and I regret exceedingly that the authorities of West Virginia declined to accept it. I cannot understand what reasonable objection can be raised to this fair and equitable mode of adjustment so frequently resorted to by individuals and nations, and I trust that West Virginia will reconsider her action and accept the more speedy and satisfactory mode of settlement proposed by Virginia, to the end that prompt justice may be done to the creditors of the Old State, and that harmony and good feeling may prevail between the people of the two States.

Very respectfully,

Your Excellency's Ob't servant,

G. C. WALKER.

Governor of Va.

(P. S.—Accompany the above.) "The foregoing is a copy of the original letter mailed to Governor Jacob."

From this letter we at once understood that so far as a conference with Commissioners or other persons authorized to represent Virginia in that capacity was concerned, our mission was at an end. But the joint resolution under which we were acting, copies of which you had forwarded for our guidance, directed that we should "ascertain and report the amount of the debt of Virginia on the first day of January, 1861, and what said debt was incurred for, and what amount of this State debt was then held by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, and by the Board of the Library Fund." Also that we should "ascertain and report the amount of all investments then held by the State, their respective amounts and character, and what thereof were then productive, and the dividends therefrom, and whether any of such investments then held by said State have since been donated, changed, converted or disposed of by the authorities of said State, and, if so, the amount and how disposed of." Also that we should "ascertain and report the revenue derived from the fiscal year ending on the 30th of September, 1860, from all sources by the State of Virginia within the present territory of Virginia and the amount derived from all sources from the territory now comprising the State of West Virginia;" and also that we "report any other relevant matter deemed proper" by us.

In addition to the foregoing duties thus devolved upon us by the terms of the joint resolution passed on the 15th day of February, we "were further empowered," in the language of the additional joint resolution passed on the 24th of the same month, "to proceed as soon as practicable to adjust, award and determine upon fair, just and equitable principles what proportion of said public debt of Virginia should in their opinion be paid by West Virginia, and what part thereof should be paid by Virginia, subject, however, to the approval and ratification of the Legislature of West Virginia and the General Assembly of Virginia."

Under this authority and direction, thus minutely specified to us, we felt called upon to take substantially the same steps after the receipt of Governor Walker's letter of September 7th as we would have taken had we expected to meet Commissioners representing Virginia, viz; to go to Richmond and endeavor to gather the information expected and required under the terms of our appointment.

Accordingly we met in that city on the 9th of November last and after spending several days in the examination of such public documents as were available to us at the Capitol, and realizing the necessity for further and more explicit and official information than we could gather of ourselves unassisted from said documents, we addressed the following note to the Second Auditor of Virginia :

Richmond, November 14, 1871.

To the Second Auditor of Virginia:

Sir: I am directed by the Commissioners representing West Virginia in the matter of the public debt of Virginia prior to the first of January, 1861, to procure from your office points, viz:

1. The actual amount of the public debt of Virginia on the first of January, 1861. And under this head the amounts of said debt owned by the Sinking Fund, the amount owned by the Literary Fund, and the amount owned by the Library Fund.

2. What portion of the bonded debt was invested, and how invested on the first of January, 1861. Also what portion of the investment was productive, what were the dividends or profits arising therefrom for the year 1860, and whether any such investments have since been donated, changed, converted or otherwise disposed of.

3. What portion of the appropriations expended in West Virginia for public improvements came from the sales of State bonds and what portion from the revenues or taxes of Virginia.

4. A copy of the advertisement for the redemption of a portion of the public debt on the first day of January, 1861.

5. A statement of the amount of public debt actually redeemed on the first of January, 1861, pursuant to said advertisement.

Upon these points the Commissioners desire to hear from you at your earliest convenience.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. CAMPBELL,
Secretary.

In reply to the foregoing communication we received the following note at 5 o'clock on the evening of the 16th of November, after a lapse of two and a half days, and after we had abandoned all hope of assistance asked for in our letter, and after, in fact, we were on the eve of our departure for home:

Second Auditor's Office,
Richmond, Nov., 16, 1871.

A. W. Campbell, Esq., Secretary, &c.:

Dear Sir: Yours of the 14th was received. You ask me for a report upon a variety of questions connected with our public debt, the transactions of the Board of Public Works in regard to it, and the financial affairs of the State, which it is understood, of course, you propose to us in the contemplated adjustment of the portion to be paid by West Virginia of the debt.

To answer the questions propounded would involve an amount of labor which we could not bestow on the subject.

But, apart from this, I presume at an early day this office will be called upon by the Executive or the General Assembly of Virginia for detailed reports of all the matters referred to, which will be available to you.

The books and records of this office are open to your inspection.

I trust that in failing to respond to your inquiries you will not regard me as in any wise wanting in official courtesy to you or your associates. None, certainly, is intended.

I have the honor to be,

Most respectfully yours,

ASA ROGERS.

With the reception of this note the Commissioners closed their labors in Richmond, finding that a further stay was not likely to add to the scant information already gleaned by them from the public documents.

It is proper to say in connection with the Second Auditor's communication that we, in delivering our own communication to him, caused it to be verbally understood that we were ready and willing to pay for the services of an expert, competent to to obtain for us the information requested, and that we did not desire or intend to trench upon the services of any one with whose duties the labor required might seriously conflict.

After this termination of their visit to Richmond, the Commissioners agreed to meet again on the 12th of December following, at Parkersburg, there to prepare and transmit to your Excellency such information as they had been able to obtain, and such as they might still further obtain, and along with it such an expression of opinion as is called for in the joint resolution of February 24th.

Accordingly we met in Parkersburg at the date named, and after nearly two weeks of examination and comparison of all the sources of information accessible to us, agreed upon and drew up the facts and statements hereinafter presented.

Previous to this meeting we had just recieved copies of the Richmond papers of December 7th, containing Governor Walker's message to the General Assembly of Virginia at its meeting on the 6th, in which we observed that among other allusions to the debt question pending between the two States, and after reference to our correspondence with him of August last and his answer thereto, as already quoted, he proceeds to arraign the good faith of the authorities of this State as follows:

"Now if the authorities of West Virginia entertained an earnest desire to make a speedy and final settlement of this matter, why did they not accept our tender of arbitration? A mode of settlement of such controversies universally recognized by both nations and individuals as right and appropriate. Suppose an equal number of Commissioners appointed by each State, and that they should meet and disagree upon any or all points involved, who is to decide between them? And yet, beyond a doubt, they would radically disagree upon the first or chief point to be settled, viz: the basis or principle upon which the settlement should be made. But suppose that the Commissioners should finally agree, does any one suppose that their finding would be ratified by the legislatures of the two States disagreeing as the people do radically upon the merits of the question at issue? Of course not."

This quotation from Governor Walker's message fairly exhibits the spirit in which he has seemed to view not only our own efforts to carry out the objects of our appointment but likewise the sincerity and good faith of the Legislature of West Virginia in providing for the appointment of such a commission by your Excellency.

And yet while this is the case it is not to be forgotten that Virginia herself initiated this method of attempting to adjust the debt question. And the language of the Governor would seem to be all the more gratuitous in such a connection from the fact that in his annual message of December 7, 1870, he considered it worth while to allude to the political change that had taken place in this State at the preceding October election, and bespoke in so many words for the "new administration" an "opportunity of manifesting its intentions and its appreciation of honesty and fair dealing." And yet notwithstanding this language by himself thus voluntarily employed on our behalf, and notwithstanding also the fact that one of the early acts of the "new administration" was to respond to the policy that Virginia herself had initiated, and before it was known in this State that she had changed that policy, and while the appointees under the response were in Richmond seeking in vain from the proper authority of Virginia for such information as every debtor is entitled in law to receive from his creditor, saying nothing of that spirit of "fair dealing" that was so conspicuously spoken in our behalf, Governor Walker proceeds in his late message to asperse the good faith of the State of West Virginia after the manner and in the words that we have quoted.

The authorities of West Virginia have never assumed to themselves any right of precedence in the matter of a policy for adjusting the difficulties surrounding the debt question. But in the joint resolution passed on the 24th of February last they did assume the modest right of adhering to the policy already inaugurated by the State of Virginia, and by her so freely tendered heretofore for their acceptance, and therefore they respectfully declined to adopt a new and different proposition from her until they could test the merits of the one already adopted.

Apparently the present Executive of Virginia from an enforced familiarity with the workings of "personal government" which he so much deplores, has acquired ideas as to the right of the initiative between equal contracting parties that are scarcely consistent with the delicacy of the issue pending between this State and his own. For instance, in his letter of September the 7th, he tells us that the legislature of Virginia, upon his suggestion, has tendered an arbitration to this State, and he trusts "that West Virginia will reconsider her action and accept the more speedy and satisfactory mode of settlement proposed by Virginia." And again in his late message, he says that "the better course to be pursued is for the two States to submit the whole question to arbitration," and West Virginia is arraigned as heretofore shown, for not concurring in his opinions. Apparently it did not occur to the Governor that since Virginia had proposed both modes of settlement to this State, the latter might make her choice between them without subjecting her motives to imputation. And yet all that she had assumed to do is simply to choose between the policies initiated by Virginia. Unless, therefore, it can be shown that it is the prerogative of that State to prescribe the terms upon which the debt shall be adjusted the question should hereafter be discussed in a spirit better calculated to allay all sectional irritation.

But we pass from this incidental reference to Governor Walker's strictures upon the attitude of this State towards the debt question to the action of the Virginia legislature upon the same question as embodied in the act approved on the 30th of March last, and known as the Funding Bill. This act is in keeping with the initiatory legislation in regard to the debt to which we have just referred. It assumes to apportion the debt of that State arbitrarily, notwithstanding her authorities had six weeks before the passage of the act received notice of the joint resolution of the West Virginia Legislature providing for the appointment of Commissioners. It assumes, also, to apportion the debt, not as it stood on the first day of January, 1861, but as it would stand on the first day of July, 1871, after the interest had been twice compounded, once in 1866, and again at the date last named; and to apportion it, too, upon the basis of territory and population, and without any reference to the equities that should always govern an assignment of debt between sections that were so notorious in our own case. In other words it assumes to apportion to West Virginia one-third of the debt as it now stands, simply on the ground that she has one-third of the territory and population formerly belonging to Virginia, and without reference at all to the question of resources and values. This is apparently the practical result which Governor Walker hoped to reach when he urged upon us the "more speedy and satisfactory mode of settlement proposed by Virginia," inasmuch as he tells us in his late message that this is the "plan for a reorganization of the State debt," which he "had recommended twelve months before."

But without reference to the authorship of this or any other "plan" for adjusting the debt question, we propose to consider as briefly as possible the real cause now pending between Virginia and West Virginia as we understand it.

The tables or statements which we annex as part of our report show, among other things, the following facts:

That the funded debt of Virginia on the first day of January, 1861, was $31,778, 867.32, after all reductions.

That all or nearly all, of this debt was incurred for and actually expended in works of public improvement, such as canals, railroads, turnpikes, plank roads and bridges.

That this vast sum, upwards of $30,000,00 was expended for improvements in the present State of Virginia, and only about two and a half millions in the present State of West Virginia.

That the present State of Virginia contains 41,352 square miles and West Virginia only 20,000 square miles, or less than one-third.

That the counties composing what is now Virginia contained by the census of 1860 a population of 1,220,829, and those composing West Virginia only a population of 374,985, or less than one-fourth.

To these exhibits we append others, under our instructions from the legislature, but they are such as do not enter into our argument here, which is to show that no just apportionment of the debt can be made upon the basis of population and territory alone, which is the basis upon which the Virginia Funding Bill is confessedly predicated.

This theory of apportionment is apparently quite current among the people of that State, and is defended with ability by Judge Meredith, of Richmond, in a carefully prepared paper on the subject. His position is that West Virginia should pay one-third of the debt because, as he says, it is a principle of international law governing the division of nations that "the obligations which had accrued to the whole before the division are, unless they are the subject of special agreement, ratably binding upon the different parts." This he gives as a quotation from Phillimore. Two inquiries present themselves in connection with it, First, was Virginia a nation in the sense intended by Phillimore? and, second, what are we to understand by a ratable part of a debt? We presume that it will not be contended that the general rights and obligations of a nation, as defined by international law, belonged to Virginia prior to the division of the State, and therefore we cannot admit the applicability of the quotation in that particular. Neither can we admit Judge Meredith's construction of the word ratable. He applies it exclusively to territory and population and excludes everything in the shape of resources and value, such as public works, buildings and institutions, which, as we all know, vitally affected the equity of a division of territory.

Judge Meredith next adduces the following quotation from Chancellor Kent to sustain his position:

"If a State should be divided in respect to territory, its rights and obligations are not impaired, and if they have not been apportioned by special agreement those rights are to be enjoyed and those obligations fulfilled by all the parts in common."

This quotation is much more intelligible and just, and we think will tend to sustain the conclusions we have reached, as hereinafter stated.

In addition to the two quotations already given, Judge Meredith cites other authorities to sustain his position that West Virginia is chargeable with one-third of the debts, but we do not regard them as applicable to the case under consideration. First, because Virginia is not a nation. Second, because in all the cases referred to in the authorities quoted, treaty stipulations had more or less to do with the question. Third, because the debts were war debts, the benefits of which, if any, accrued to each individual, and the obligations of which therefore rested upon each. In no instance was the debt created for internal improvements which necessarily confer partial and local benefits that in most cases exceed the general benefit to the State at large. We, therefore, fail to see the proper analogy that should exist to make these citations precedents for the case of Virginia and West Virginia.

Judge Meredith winds up these references to various authorities, by two general deductions of his own, as follows:

1. "That the public debt of a State is not affected by a change in the form of its government, nor by the partition of its territory into two States, but remains in full force and must be discharged."

2. "That if a State be divided into two or more States, the debts which had been contracted by the whole before the division are, unless they have been the subject of a special agreement, ratably binding upon the different parts in proportion to territory and population."

The first deduction it is not necessary to consider, as West Virginia, in her ordinance of separation from Virginia, as also in her constitution, agreed to pay an equitable proportion of the public debt. What that equitable proportion is we are now considering.

In reference to the second deduction we have to remark that Judge Meredith draws a conclusion from his authorities which they do not sustain. Phillimore, for instance, says that "if a nation be divided into various distinct societies, the obligations which had accrued to the whole before the division are ratably binding upon the different parts." Here Phillimore and the authorities stop. But this does not suffice for the Virginia side of the question, and Judge Meredith adds after the word "parts" the words "in proportion to territory and population." These words are not found in any of the authorities, so far as we are advised and certainly not in any of the quotations adduced by the Judge.

A moments consideratin will show that a division of debt according to population and territory would not only be impracticable but would conflict with common sense. It would be impracticable because it does not determine the relative value of each one of the two elements of population and territory. Suppose the population to be twice as much as the territory, or suppose the territory to be three times as great as the population, which element has the greater value in determining the result?

Without pursuing this thought further it is manifest that nothing is settled by such a rule. You must fix the relative value of the two elements before you can reach a conclusion It is, therefore, plain why the books do not give the rule as stated by Judge Meredith, because of its indefiniteness, but mainly because of its injustice. Would any sane man lay down a rule for the division of a State which would ignore the great cities, public improvements, public works, institutions of all kinds, great commercial advantages, such as rivers and harbors and the great advantage of fertility of soil; all of which and many other elements of wealth, property and power, might be found in one division and be wholly absent in the other. Hence we say that such a rule is repugnant to common sense.

A public debt is mainly a charge upon the wealth and resources of a people. It is represented by taxes, and taxes are imposed not on numbers or square miles but on resources and values. How much stronger is the case when the very debt under consideration was created in developing and enriching one portion of the State almost exclusively. May, more, when that division of the State is in possession of and enjoying, giving away and selling at auction and otherwise disposing of the very subjects for which the debt was created.

These considerations afford abundant reason why no authority would say, in the absence of a compact (unless there was perfect homogeneity) that it would be just to divide a "nation" any more than an individual estate by population and territory. We doubt not that Judge Meredith himself would scout the idea of dividing an estate on such a basis and without reference to the quality of the land and the improvements made. Why then would he ignore such considerations in apportioning a public debt between two divisions of a State? Chancellor Kent, whom he has quoted, does not sustain him in so doing. The quotation already given from that author says that "if a State should be divided in respect to territory its rights and obligations are not impaired; and if they have not been apportioned by agreement, those rights are to be enjoyed and those obligations fulfilled by all the parts in common." Not a word in this quotation about a division ratably according to population and territory. According to this authority the State of Virginia was only a tenant in common with West Virginia in all the public works, improvements and property of the original undivided State, and had no authority to alienate, sell, give away, or dispose of any of the public works, and being in possession and holding them for her own exclusive use and benefit, by ousting West Virginia, she would be bound to account to the latter for her share. This would seem to be the legitimate conclusion from the authorities relied on by Judge Meredith, even admitting their applicability to the case under consideration, which we do not concede by any means; and, therefore, with this reference we pass them by.

We think we take a more practicable view of the subject, and one which will attain all the ends of justice. The table accompanying this report shows that the bonded debt of Virginia on the first day of January, 1861, represented money borrowed and expended in improving the State by canals, railroads, turnpikes, plank roads and bridges. All these expenditures conferred a local and special benefit, were expended, not only by the outlay of the money in creating a market and stimulating enterprise and trade, but in otherwise developing the resources of particular localities to an extent quite equal to the general benefit of the State at large. And this local and general development is the sum of the value of the improvements to the section where located, and gives them an inestimable and abiding value to that section. This value is progressive and not susceptible of being fixed. So certainly is this the case that it is probable, if it were practicable to utterly extinguish these improvements, and thereby extinguish the debt, that the State where they are located would not listen to such a proposition.

It may be assumed then that the public works for which the debt was created are worth what they cost. Virginia, by selling, donating, and disposing of these works as her own property, without regard to the rule laid down by Chancellor Kent, and without consulting West Virginia, must be taken to have accepted them on that basis, and is therefore chargeable with them on that basis.

When the tables are consulted they will show an expenditure of over thirty millions in Virginia and about two and a half millions in West Virginia. Much of this latter was expended at comparatively recent dates, whereas the expenditures in Virginia range through a period of fifty years, with benefits accruing more or less throughout that period. In the light of such facts, we submit that no intelligent mind, wishing only to do justice, can doubt for a moment that the benefits conferred, and not the territory and population, should be the principal, if not the only basis of an adjustment of the debt. The Governor of Virginia, in his message of 1870, and again in 1871, and the Legislature of that State, by its funding bill, seem, however, to have entirely overlooked the foregoing considerations, and to have jumped to the conclusion that West Virginia should pay one-third of the debt.

We see the case differently. On the one hand, for instance, we see rich cities, commercial marts of all kinds, navigable rivers, fine harbors, a highly improved productive territory, wealthy capitalists and a well to do people, public institutions, such as a State Capitol and extensive public grounds, an Executive Mansion, a Penitentiary, Armory, University, two Lunatic Asylums, a Military Institute, a Blind Asylum, a valuable miscellaneous and law library, a large literary fund and the United States deposit of surplus revenue, all these resources in addition to the vast millions invested in canals and railroads and other avenues of inland commerce.

On the other hand we see set in the balance against these rich resources the territory of West Virginia, less than one-third of the old State, much of it broken into barren mountains and hills, no navigable streams penetrating it in every direction, no railroad but the Baltimore & Ohio, no public works or institutions, her lands mostly covered with unbroken forests and rewarding industry but grudgingly, no outlets in the interior for the little surplus existing, the people poor and subsisting by rough work in the woods and fields, possessed of no capital wherewith either to develop their localities or ameliorate their own condition in life in fact, their only wealth being for the most part their poor soil, their untiring perseverance and their indomitable love of liberty.

And yet, notwithstanding this great discrepancy between the conditions and resources of the two States, Virginia assigns one-third of her funded and compounded debt to West Virginia to pay, simply because the latter has one-third of the territory and one-fourth of the population formerly belonging to the whole State. And, this, too, notwithstanding her papers have often proclaimed that West Virginia was a foster child of the old State, and as such dependent upon her bounty. This opinion we shall not stop to discuss, and we only refer to it as showing the inconsistency between the theory and practice of our Virginia friends. Supposing it to be correct, the explanation as to how it came about can never be made creditable to those who lavished all their favors on one section of the State, and withheld them from the other, and the vindication of the step taken by West Virginia during the war in separating from the old State consists largely of this traditional discrimination against her. And in this connection it may not be out of place to notice that the increase of populaion in West Virginia during the decade from 1860 to 1870 was of a character to still further vindicate the step taken, it being about thirty per cent. This large increase illustrates her onward march since her separation from her former foster parent, and tends to suggest how far in advance of her present position she really might have been had she received in the past anything more than "the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table."

We come now to the conclusion of our report. Having given our reasons why we dissent entirely from the position of Virginia in reference to the debt, we proceed to state our own conclusions in regard to it as follows:

Statement A, as annexed to our report shows that the bonded debt of Virginia, on the first of January, 1861, after all deductions, was $31,779,067.32.

The statement also shows that all of said debt was expended within the present State of Virginia, with the exception of $2,784,329.29.

Statement E, shows that $328,706.22 was collected from counties in West Virginia after January 1, 1861.

Statement F, shows that the amount of expenditures for all purposes in West Virginia was $3,343,929.29.

We are not able to say certainly what part of this expenditure was from the proceeds of State bonds, (and, therefore, a part of the State debt) and what part was appropriated from the regular receipts of the treasury. We have had access to no data that could determine the question. Our letter to the Second Auditor at Richmond sought information on this point in vain. But we have given Virginia the benefit of it all as a credit on her side of the account, although the resolutions under which we are acting contemplate nothing on the part of West Virginia but an assumption of her proportion of the bonded debt, inasmuch as both sections and particularly Virginia, received appropriations out of the ordinary receipts of the treasury.

We have charged West Virginia with all that we have found expended within her limits, viz: The amount of the funded debt created for improvements within her territory, the amount invested in her banks, the amount expended on the Lunatic Asylum at Weston, and the estimated value of the property known as the Lewisburg Law Library.

On the other hand we have credited her with her share of the estimated value of the public property and assets of Virginia, other than the property represented in the bonded indebtedness. This latter equalizes itself, and therefore does not enter into the account. Virginia has the property and owes the debt which it represents. We refer only to the public buildings, institutions, and other assets as given in statement G. As to West Virginia's share in these we can only venture an approximate estimate. The public buildings, the common property of the two States, paid for out of the general revenue, we have estimated at $3,875,000 as per statement G. and it would be reasonable we think to estimate West Virginia's interest in them at one-fourth on the basis of population.

The same statement shows that the surplus revenue of the United States deposited with the State under the act of Congress, June 23, 1836, gave Virginia $2,937,237.34, of which sum she appears to have received at least $1,932,809.33. This act assigned to each State its share of deposits on the basis of its representation in Congress, and Virginia having, in 1860, thirteen representatives, three of whom were from West Virginia, it would seem that three-thirteenths of that fund belonged to the latter.

To this share of the deposits, and her interest in the public property, we add, as per statement, her proportion of the Literary Fund. This fund at the date quoted in statement G, amounted to $1,509,583.16. As it was apportioned throughout the State on the basis of the white population, we follow that rule in assigning to West Virginia three-sevenths of it, that being her ratio of white population in 1860.

Upon the data thus ascertained and explained, we summarize the account between the two States as follows:

WEST VIRGINIA TO THE STATE OF VIRGINIA.

Dr. For the amounts expended and invested in her territory as set forth in statement F..		$ 3,343,929 29
Cr. By one-fourth of the estimated value of the public buildings and other assets, as given in statement G.....$	968,750 00
Cr. By three-thirteenths of the United States surplus fund as per same statement.....	446,032 92
Cr. By three-sevenths of the Literary fund as per same...	647,079 92
Cr. By the amount collected in West Virginia after January 1, 1861, as per statement E..	328,706 22	2,390,569 06
Balance due Virginia.....		$ 953,360 23

This is the balance as we find it after a protracted examination of such sources of information as were available to us. And the ascertainment of it naturally brings our labors to a conclusion. We commend our investigations to Your Excellency's favorable consideration. From the beginning we realized that the results arrived at must necessarily be only proximate in their character, inasmuch as our sources of information were limited. Subsequent inquiry, under more favorable circumstances, may change the general result a few thousands for or against either State, but such a contingency is of course unimportant. The principle upon which the debt should be adjusted is the important point to settle. And it is to this point as set forth in these pages, that we beg leave, through your Excellency, to call the attention of the Legislature.

Very respectfully,
Your Excellency's most obedient servants,

J. J. JACKSON
J. M. BENNETT
A. W. CAMPBELL

STATEMENT A.

Showing the Amount of the Public Debt of Virginia on the first day of January, 1861, and the amounts thereof held by that State. Also the amount thereof incurred for Public Improvements in West Virginia.

The debt of Virginia on the first day of January, 1861, as per the Auditor's report to the extra session of the Legislature on the 10th of December preceding, was as follows:
Debt of January 1, 1852.....	$10,508,815 30
Debt created since that time...	23,379,946 33
Total		$33,888,791 63
Less the amount redeemed on 31st December, 1860.....$	237,731 31
Less amount in the Sinking Fund	1,462,993 00
Less amount in the Literary Fund.....	248,000 00
Less amount in the Library Fund.....	16,000 00
Less Bonds lost on Steamship Arctic.....	145,000 00	$ 2,109,724 31
Net amount of the debt January 1, 1861..		$31,779,067 32

This debt as will be seen by Statement B, was mainly incurred for works of public improvement.
*Statement F, shows that only $2,784,329.29 of it was incurred for improvements in West Virginia.
Said improvements are as follows:
Joint Stock Turnpike.....$	906,196 32
Roads on State Account.....	1,145,619 07
Bridge Companies	76,612 50
Navigation Companies	207,840 00
Railroads.....	500,000 00
Lunatic Asylum at Weston..	125,000 00	$ 2,961,267 89
Deduct Virginia's pro rata for improvements lying in both States.....		176,938 60
		$ 2,784,329 29

*The statement shows as total expenditure in West Virginia of $3,343,929.29, but only the above amount for public improvement.

STATEMENT B.

Showing the amount and character of the investments held by the State of Virginia on the first of January, 1861, together with those that have since been donated or otherwise changed, as per Governor Walker's message to the Virginia Legislature of March 8, 1870.

Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire Railroad .....$	50,862 00
Blue Ridge Railroad	1,744,723 00

Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad..	2,484,134 00
Norfolk & Petersburg Railroad	1,341,341 00
Orange and Alexandria Railroad.....	1,151,207 00
Richmond and Danville Rail road	1,847,585 00
Richmond and Petersburg Railroad	385,600 00
Richmond & York River Railroad	490,999 00
South Side Railroad	1,883,500 00
Virginia & Kentucky Railroad	103,348 00
Virginia and Tennessee Railroad	3,755,000 00
Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad	202,611 00
James River and Kanawha Canal	10,400,000 00
Other Navigation Companies..	1,192,616 00
Plank roads, Turnpikes and Bridges	4,761,564 00
Chesapeake and Ohio Canal...	900,000 00
Selden, Withers & Co.....	436,000 00
Total		$33,131,090 00
To this amount add, as per Governor Walker's message of March 8, 1870, for amounts "lost, abandoned, or surrendered and released," the following sums, viz:
Subscription paid to Covington & Ohio Railroad Co.....$	3,206,461 83
Subscription paid to Fredericksburg & Gordonsville Railroad Company	163,299 00
Subscription paid to City Point Railroad Company	110,000 00

Subscription paid to Blue Ridge Railroad Company	1,100,000 00
Subscription paid to Manassas Gap Railroad Company.....	2,280,000 00
Subscription paid to Portsmouth & Roanoke Railroad Company	406,650 00
Subscription paid to Roanoke Valley Railroad Company...	307,402 00
Subscription paid to Winchester & Potomac Railroad Company	270,000 00
Subscription paid to Alexandria, Hampshire and Loudoun Railroad Company ...	1,017,248 00
Subscription paid to Navigation and other companies....	298,032 05
Loss by Selden, Withers & Co., and Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company	580,000 00
*Total		9,739,092 88
Grand Total.....		$42,870,182 88

We add these amounts simply because we find them given by the Governor as addenda to the $33,131,090.00, and not because we find them in any official record to which we have had access.

STATEMENT C.

*No complete survey of the State has ever been made, and in consequence of the irregular exterior lines no reliable estimate of the State's area appears to have been attained. By Herman Boye's map, made in 1825, the area is as above. By L. Von Buchoitz's map by authority of Virginia in 1860, the mean length of the State is given at 360 miles, and the mean breadth at 200 miles, giving a horizontal area of 61,352 miles which is the same as given in Mitchell's map.

A Table showing the Approximate Number of Square Miles in Virginia and West Virginia.

By Boye's map, the number of square miles in Virginia prior to the division was 65,624, or 41,999,360 acres.

By the Auditor's report for 1861, the number of square miles in the State was reported at 81,549, or 52,191,360 acres.

There appears to be not only a wide discrepancy in these respective authorities, but likewise an error in reducing the square miles to acres. These errors are no doubt to be accounted for by the notorious fact that under the Virginia system of patenting lands the same lands are on the Commissioner's books several times.

By Mitchell's General Atlas for 1868, the area of Virginia is given at 41,352 square miles, and that of West Virginia at 20,000, which would give to West Virginia something less than one-third of the joint territory.

There being no map that gives the area of the counties of West Virginia separately, we have assumed that the statement given by Mitchell is approximately correct.

STATE MENT E.

Showing the Revenue Paid Into the Treasury of Virginia Since the First Day of January, 1861, From Counties Now Included Within West Virginia.

Amounts marked with a * were collected by judgments or executions in the year named, but for what particular year is uncertain.

Where it was plain that any collections were arrears for 1860, they have not been brought into this statement.

*On the exclusion from this statement of taxes levied in 1860 and collected in 1861, the commissioners were not unanimous. For it was maintained that the taxes of 1860 were levied and collected chiefly to pay interest falling due January 1 and July 1, 1861. One-fourth of the taxes especially designed to pay the July interest was not payable into the treasury until about the 15th of February, 1861. The taxes were collected off of the people who had assumed the burden of the debt and ought to be applied to their relief.

STATEMENT F.

West Virginia's Indebtedness to the State of Virginia.

Showing (approximately) the amount of the public debt of Virginia that was incurred for works of improvement in the territory now included within the State of West Virginia, and such other sums as West Virginia is chargeable with.

These improvements consist of works in which Virginia was a joint stockholder with private companies and of works constructed wholly on her own account, and certain miscellaneous expenditures.

Date of the several acts authorizing these expenditures is given as far as ascertained.

These expenditures are classified as follows:

(1) Joint Stock Companies.
(2) Roads Constructed on State Account.
(3) Bridge Companies.
(4) Navigation Turnpike.
(5) Railroads.
(6) Miscellaneous.

OTHER ASSETS.

By a provision of an act of Congress of June 23, 1836, there was directed to be deposited with the State of Virginia of the surplus revenue of Unites States, $2,937,237.34.

And it appears by the document, number 52 of the session of 1839-40, that of the amount there was actually received by Virginia and subscribed to the stock of certain banks of the State, the following amount, say, $1,932,809.33.

Whether the residue of this sum was ever paid to Virginia, the Commissioners have not ascertained.

The Literary Fund, as given in Document No. 4, Second Auditor's Report of September, 1884, is $1,509,853.16.

This fund is given as it stood many years ago. By the first of January, 1861, it had probably increased, from fines, forfeitures and amercements, one or two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Holt: We also read into the record report of the Senate Finance Committee of 1873 dated Charleston, December 22, 1873, and signed J. M. Bennett, Chairman, John W. Grantham, A. E. Summers, J. T. McClaskey, R. B. Sherrard and Elliott Vawter, found on pages 490 to 493, inclusive, of the book entitled Virginia v. West Virginia, Volume 1, Record of Suit as follows:

REPORT OF THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE OF 1873.

State of West Virginia,
Charleston, December 22, 1873

The attention of the Committee on Finance has been repeatedly called by resolutions introduced in the Senate and otherwise, to the subject of Virginia's public debt and the share which it is equitable for West Virginia to bear and pay. The committee under these frequent promptings have been constrained to give the subject their most earnest and careful attention as a matter fraught with more than ordinary consequence to the State, and have come to a conclusion satisfactory to themselves, and it is believed that the conclusion of the committee will be approved by the judgment of the people interested, and will receive the sanction of any tribunal before whom it may be brought for adjudication.

It is necessary to a full understanding of this subject that reference be had to the treaty stipulations of fundamental condition, by whatsoever name they may be called, between the representatives of the people of Virginia and the people desiring separation, by the creation of a new State, which led to the formation of a constitution, its adoption by the people and its approval by Congress, and the establishment of the State of West Virginia.

The ninth section of "an ordinance to provide for the formation of a new State out of a portion of this State, (Virginia) "passed August 20, 1861, provided, that "the new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of the debt was contracted; and deducting therefrom the monies paid into the treasury of the commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during the same period."

Upon compliance with the conditions contained in the ninth section and here quoted the people within the counties now constituting West Virginia, were authorized to form a constitution to be presented to Congress for its approval and for the admission of the new State into the Union.

Accordingly a constitution was adopted by a convention of the people from the several counties now constituting the State of West Virginia and to carefully guard and secure the rights prescribed by Virginia as a condition precedent to the formation of the new State, a provision was incorporated into it to secure the exact fulfillment of the treaty stipulations as aforesaid.

By article eight, section eight of the constitution, it was provided that "an equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State and that the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

This subject has received a careful consideration by commisioners appointed by authority of this State, and while this committee see much to approve in the Report of the Debt commissioners of West Virginia on this subject for their great research and the ability with which they handled the subject, considering the peculiar difficulties under which they labored, as shown in their report, and in the illustration of the many problems that may rise in the discussion of this subject, yet this committee think the controlling question has not been discussed by the Commissioners by reason of the embarrassment surrounding their action; and the Committee beg leave to refer to the report which is appended hereto and marked No. 1.

In construing the legal principles involved in this matter, it may be assumed that a private creditor of Virginia cannot sue West Virginia for contribution; for that is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States; see article eleven of amendments United States Constitution which declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens or subjects of any foreign State."

But notwithstanding this prohibition the third article extends the judicial power of the Supreme Court to controversies between two or more States. Under this provision of the Constitution it is within the power of Virginia to institute and prosecute any suit against West Virginia touching the controversies respecting the public debt.

If the conditions precedent to our admission as a State, prescribed by Virginia herself, be accepted as a true basis of adjustment and final settlement, Virginia's claims for expenditures can very properly be offset by our contributions.

Upon this basis the whole subject is one of easy solution, containing no other items than that of creditor or debtor with balances to be struck upon agreed principles. The legislative history of Virginia establishes beyond a doubt that the first act of Assembly to create a debt or issue a bond was passed in the year 1821, and the executive records show that the first bond issued by the commonwealth of Virginia was in the year 1822.

From this latter period we date the commencement of our liability under the fundamental stipulations prescribed by Virginia for our separtation, which were accepted by the people of this State, approved by Congress, and the President of the United States, as the head of the executive department and subsequently affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. and may at this day be accepted by the public as firmly engrafted into obligations and rights as if the same were constitutional provisions emanating from the supreme power.

The concurrent approval, binding alike upon the people of Virginia and West Virginia, lead us to the following conclusions which are the results of a mathematical demonstration, founded upon public and official records, appropriate to determine how much of the bonded debt of Virginia existing prior to January, 1861, was expended within the limits of this State, and how much was contributed by the counties forming the same.

The report of the Debt Commissioners hereinbefore referred to shows that all State expenditures within this State prior to January, 1861, amounted to $3,366,929.29 and although it is apparent that bonds for quite a large amount of this sum were never issued, nevertheless the expenditures would seem to import an obligation upon our people to return every dollar which had been so contributed to the development of the territory of our State.

The committee have not entered into the tedious process of calculating the interest, for the obvious reason that there would be as much interest on our contributions to as upon the receipts of Virginia.

The committee have therefore assumed the foregoing sum of $3,366,929.29 as importing a debt upon West Virginia to be gathered and itemized from the report of the Debt Commissioners aforesaid.

From the amount of the foregoing expenditures, must be deducted the moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth of Virginia, from the counties included in this State during the same period. For the sake of convenience the committee have charged to Virginia, not the whole contribution but the surplus after deducting a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government. Our total contributions from taxes to the State of Virginia in the year 1822, amounted to $63,000; and in that year the total of the expenses of the State government chargeable to us was $47,000, leaving an excess of $16,000, which would go to the liquidation of the debt created for expenditures within our midst.

This small surplus in 1822, by the process of an increased rate of taxation, and the increased value of the subjects to be taxed, the rate rising from 8 cents to 40 cents on every one hundred dollars in value, made the excess of our contributions to the treasury of Virginia in the year 1860 amount to $512,000, rejecting fractions.

Thus our contributions to the treasury of Virginia arising from taxes collected in that year amounted to $647,079.96. In the same year our proportion of the ordinary expenses of government amounted to $135,000, which left the surplus aforesaid of $512,079.96. It will be observed that the committee have referred only to the surplus in 1882 and in 1860. The surplus for the intermediate periods swell the aggregate of our contributions to $3,892,000 which is in excess of expenditures within our limits by $525,000.

It will thus be seen that our State is not indebted and the Committee confidently advance this statement, not only as containing the true basis of settlement between the two States, but it is supported by incontrovertible facts by conditions precedent prescribed by Virginia under the restored government which government has been approved as aforesaid by Congress by the Executive and by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Notwithstanding the satisfactory condition of our finances and our material resources, the attention of the committee has been called to the fact that "West Virginia certificates" and "West Virginia bonds" are quoted at the marketable value of from five to fifteen cents on the dollar in money of the stock exchanges and markets of the United States. This of course has a tendency to depreciate the just credit to which this State is entitled. For it is acknowledged that the credit of a State depends upon the value of its taxable property, the amount of its indebtedness and above all upon its punctuality in meeting its engagements. These quotations imply two things: first, that we owe a debt; second, that we are either unable or unwilling to pay the debt which beget a want of confidence in the minds of the public who are uninformed with respect to the true condition of West Virginia; and operate unjustly and injuriously upon us. It would seem to be enough for us to say and we make the assertion without the fear of contradiction, that we owe no debt, that we have issued no bonds and our constitution forbids the creation of a liability in the nature of a public debt; and with this assurance we cannot demand more nor expect less of all honorable stock brokers and bankers than the withdrawal from the list of indebted states the name of West Virginia.

"West Virginia certificates" and "West Virginia bonds" do not exist. No bonds have ever at any time been issued by West Virginia and we are prohibited from issuing at any time hereafter any bonds on the faith of this State. The bonds or certificates referred to were issued by Virginia, and West Virginia had no agency or participation therein.

In respect to the credit which our conduct and property would imply, we might be indifferent, but we have higher aims and more ennobling ambition. We desire to invite immigration to cultivate our forests, and to develop our mineral resources; this cannot be done with success, when men of thrift and capital are deterred from immigrating to and within our borders by reason of the persistent and unjustifiable misquotations of our credit. No one could be expected to invest capital within a State which has so far absorbed the substance of the people thereof that its good faith and obligations were only worth five cents on the dollar. West Virginia owes no debt, has no bonds for sale and asks no credit.

Mr. Holt: I will ask Mr. Hillman to take the stand one minute.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN.

recalled for further examination in behalf of the defendant, testified as follows:

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, have you any explanation to make of an item found in the balance sheet of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad Company relative to Confederate securities?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Make it, please, as briefly as you can.

A. On the trial balance sheet of March 31, 1863, being Defendant's Exhibit No. 2, Sub-Sheet No. 1, 1863, we have certificates of debt due in U. S., United States, in 1857, 1869, and in 1879 for $1,606.32, $264,979.40 and $138,653.20. In the following table, being Defendant's Exhibit sub-Sheet No. 2, and page 5 of the blue prints, we have these same items marked as certificates of debt due in C. S., for Confederate States. We have the same notation made in the balance sheet of September 30, 1864. The two balance sheets last mentioned are not printed but written out in hand and on there it is marked C. S. or Confederate States. I have examined the subsequent trial balance for 1865 of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac, which is a printed one, and thereon are these items I mentioned as due in the U. S. My attention was called to them by the fact that a certificate of debt due in the C. S. or Confederate States in 1857 was an item which could not be considered as having any existence because the States were not in existence. I therefore took occasion to look that up with this result. However, the copies of the record on file in the R. F. & P. read C. S. for those two exhibits.

Q. Do their reports or balance sheets for the years preceding read in U. S.?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for the years succeeding U. S.?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they the same items?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your examination of such papers and documents and records as you have examined relative to the financial condition of those companies in which the State of Virginia owned stock that are set forth in the supplemental answer did you find anything to indicate that there was any readjustment of securities by these companies issuing these securities passing from Confederate to what may be called a Federal basis?

The Master: From one period to another.

A. Yes, sir. In the Richmond & Danville Railroad there was an adjustment wherein on both the asset and liability side of the account one-half was taken off on account of Confederate currency. It did not, however, interefere with the apparent solvency of the company according to the trial balance sheet where the reduction was made.

Q. How was it with respect to all the other companies?

A. There was nothing on them to show any reductions on account of the Confederate currency or the change from one currency to the other.

Q. Did they then move from the Confederate regime into the new regime without any adjustment of securities?

A. I should say, sir, that they did.

Mr. Holt: That is all.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You are now testifying in relation to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad in respect to something that you have investigated since your examination was closed, are you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say that your attention was called to the particular subject that you have since investigated. How was your attention directed to it?

A. By my assistant, Mr. Leitch, who came to me and asked whether that should be Confederate States or the United States.

Q. Have you brought here a transcript of what the documents show that you have since investigated with reference to that matter?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Where are they?

A. On file in the Treasurer's office of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company, First National Bank Building, this city, room 1401.

Q. Did you examine them?

A. No, sir. I sent one of my men to look up the point, the same one that made the original documents for this exhibit.

Q. So you have no information on the subject then except what you derived from someone else?

A. Except what one of my men took there under my direction.

Q. Why didn't you bring a transcript of the books here in order that we might have it before us?

A. I did not consider it necessary.

Mr. Holt: If these gentlemen desire, we will get a transcript of them.

The Master: If they desire it I will give them an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. Harrison: I may want to do that. It is very difficult to examine about something we do not see.

Q. In reference to the Richmond & Danville, you have testified to what their books show. That investigation has been made since your testimony closed, you say?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts did you make it, where?

A. From a volume of reports which was handed me, the first printed report of that road, which I understand is the only one in existence, which was withdrawn from the engineers of the Southern Railroad, in North Carolina at present, and sent to me.

Q. Who handed it to you?

A. Mr. Howard handed it to me.

Q. Where is it?

A. I have returned it.

Q. To whom did you return it?

A. To the party that handed it to me.

Q. Mr. Howard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he?

A. He is one of the men in this investigation.

The Master: You mean one of the men employed by West Virginia in this matter?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Master: Where is the book, is it available?

The Witness: Yes, sir, I can have it brought for investigation.

The Master: You ought to have it right here.

The Witness: Your Honor, I will state that I did not anticipate that question and therefore I did not hold on to the book.

The Master: You ought not to expect to testify to the contents of a book at this stage of this hearing without having the book produced. It is so obvious that it is hardly worth talking about that the other side would want to see it. Send and get it right away.

Q. Do I understand that your statement with reference to the transition from the one period to another is your conclusion from what you saw?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is all; it does not purport to state a fact; you do not undertake to state a fact shown by the books, but your deductions from what you did see, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Harrison: That is all I want to ask him.

The Master: Do I understand you want an opportunity to examine the records that he has testified to before you conclude your cross-examination?

Mr. Harrison: Of course we would like to have had the original sources from which he traced his conclusion and his statement, but I do not want to delay this matter for that purpose.

The Master: So far as I am concerned, you have until six o'clock tonight. I want the record to show that you have an opportunity to go to those original sources if you desire to.

Mr. Holt: We are sending for the book, your Honor.

The Master: Yes, but there are other books he has testified about.

Mr. Holt: It was just that one of a balance sheet of the Richmond, Fredericksburg, & Potomac.

The Master: If the other side want an opportunity to examine these books that have been testified to in relation to the Richmond, & Danville Railroad, why, I should give them the opportunity.

Mr. Holt: In order to avoid any trouble, if that will relieve the situation, I am perfectly willing to strike out of the record any reference to the Richmond & Danville that has been indulged in now, and that will leave it to the furnishing of a balance sheet of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac.

Mr. Harrison: Then Mr. Hillman can go.

The Master: Everything that is to be furnished is to be furnished today, this afternoon, and that means that if Mr. Hillman stays he stays, and if it means he goes, why he goes, but anything that either side can put into this case that they have here that they want to get in I want them to put in today.

Mr. Holt: I was not caring anything about a specific statement concerning the Richmond & Danville which led to this book business; that was volunteered. I say it may go out of the record if that will relieve the situation.

The Master: Whatever is agreeable to you.

Mr. Holt: And that leaves but the one thing for investigation, and that is the statement relative to the balance sheets of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac, and in order that your Honor may understand what that is, I will state it. It seems that in the balance sheet of that road, that he utilized in making up his exhibits, that there was an item of assets there that were set down as Confederate States securities, when as a matter of fact further investigation of the books of that company showed that the same item was in there and marked as U. S. securities, years before the Confederate States were ever formed.

The Master: In the same amount?

Mr. Holt: In the same amount, and the same item was likewise in the balance sheets of that road following the year he utilized again set down as U. S. securities.

The Master: You simply wanted to show the continuity of the item?

Mr. Holt: That is all.

The Master: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Hillman can go this minute.

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

The Master: It is all up to the counsel for Virginia. My only suggestion is this, I want everything put into this case that can be put in that is available from either side now. All that is suspended is the deposition of Mr. Axtell to be taken in New York, but my original statement still holds, that if it turns out on the preparation of the briefs and the argument that there has been anything inadvertently omitted, it may be put in; but that does not apply to testimony that you have here now. Whatever you have here now must go in now. Do I make that clear?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: I want this understood, when I said a moment ago that the reference to the Richmond & Danville might be stricken out of the record I did not mean that my general question or his answer thereto should be stricken out.

The Master: But that relates to the Richmond & Danville.

Mr. Holt: That relates to all of these securities. I asked whether or not they did not pass from one regime to another without any jar in their administration.

The Master: The question was to establish the fact that so far as the accounts of these various companies that he has examined are concerned there is no distinction between the periods.

Mr. Holt: And then at that point he volunteered the exception in the case of the Richmond & Danville which had a discount of fifty per cent., on both sides of the account.

The Master: It was necessary for him to make that explanation because his general answer would have covered everything.

Mr. Holt: We will wait a moment for the book, Your Honor.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. When you say that the books—and I thought the question confined you to the Richmond & Danville, but if you meant to apply to all of the securities, I will ask you again—did you say that the books of the various railway companies after the close of the war showed a transition from one period to the other without any indication of change in value of the securities of the company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What other companies have you examined, what other books have you examined for the purpose and when did you do it besides the Richmond & Danville?

A. We ran up the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac, the Norfolk & Petersburg, the Southside and the Virginia and Tennessee were also examined by me. The Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac running continuously, the other roads on sub-balance sheets of each road under the general classification of the A. M. & O. running to 1872.

Q. You say you made these investigations since your testimony was closed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you examine the Southside Railroad books to testify as you have done this morning?

A. It was a document from the library which is in the former President Davis' house. It is not the State Library. I do not recall the name of the institution at present, but this was discovered and handed to me and I noticed the seal of the public library, whatever its name may be, on the side of it, and looked over that to see whether these roads were still at this date after the close of the war in an apparently good shape.

Q. That is a document then which has been discovered since you testified?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had not before been referred to?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you got it with you?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you cannot describe it other than to call it a document?

A. It is a regular annual report.

Mr. Anderson: It is from the Confederate Memorial Association.

By The Master:

Q. Was it a printed volume?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Where did you find out about this Virginia & Tennesse and Orange & Alexandria?

A. I did not testify to the Orange & Alexandria. The Virginia & Tennessee, the Southside and the Norfolk & Petersburg are all included in this volume to which I have referred.

Q. And what do you say that volume shows, as of what dates?

A. 1872.

Q. You were taking the date 1872 to show that the assets of those roads possessed the same value after the close of the war in April, 1865, that they did just before the close?

A. I did not say that they possessed the same value. I said that it showed that they passed from one set of conditions, which might be called Confederate States conditions, to United States conditions without being affected to the extent that they became worthless.

Q. How do you know that, how do you know that the entries that you saw show anything about their worthlessness or their value anything more than your conclusion?

A. I know nothing more than the conclusions which I have drawn from the entries that I have seen.

Q. There is a gap, a hiatus between 1865 and 1872 in respect to the dates upon which your conclusions are drawn and with respect to what you call the transition period, is there not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know what is shown between those dates?

A. No. I found nothing on these three roads between those dates.

By The Master:

Q. What did you see on those dates, the trial balances?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did the cost of the road in 1872 compare with the same item that we carried in 1861?

A. The cost of the road was larger on the latter date than on the former.

Q. How much larger?

A. I do not recall, sir.

Mr. Harrison: I am through.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Hillman, did you examine the books of any of these companies for 1865?

A. No, sir, I do not think that I did; I do not recall having done so.

Q. How could you say then that their accounts were carried without any change from 1864 and 1865 to 1865 and 1866?

A. From the reason that we ran these accounts up to 1863, 1864 or possibly 1865, I am not sure, but I do not think we ran any up to 1865, and then came the break of the war, and then we took them up at this new date, and therefore I have jumped from the date examined in 1863 or 1864 up to the next date that I found the trial balance, which I believe was 1872.

By The Master:

Q You did not examine the accounts or books in connection with either date, you got your results from the trial balance?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what the accounts or books may or may not have shown you only infer from the condition of the trial balance sheets that you found?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said that in case of one road the cost of the road in '72 was in excess of what it was in '61. What road was that?

A. I think the Virginia & Tennesse.

Q. How about the other two?

A. The Southside and the Norfolk & Petersburg, I think they all showed an increase.

Q. How much of an increase?

A. I did not examine that, your Honor, with any attention that would fix it in my memory.

Q. You were examining it so far as to satisfy your mind that there had not been any change in condition as the result of the ending of one period and the beginning of the other. Do you have memory enough about it so that you can estimate the percentage of increase?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have memory enough so you can say whether it was fifty per cent?

A. My memory on the point is utterly blank, sir; I fixed no figures in my memory. If I had expected—

Q. The only reason why you are able to state—

A. If I had expected this question I would have prepared myself on it. The question really was unexpected on this or I would have prepared myself.

Q. Then the only reason why you are able to state so far as you do state that there was no change in the accounts and securities from one period to the other is the information you get from a trial balance of 1872, that is right, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from that you look back to the trial balance in 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not see anything on it that suggested to your mind that there had probably been any change on account of the change in the market or par value or the exchange value of the medium of exchange?

A. No, sir; I merely looked at the surplus and saw there was a surplus in the earlier year and a surplus in the latter year, and I stopped right there.

Q. Then you did not look at the cost of the road at all?

A. Yes, sir, I did, but I did not carry anything in my memory; but I knew the cost of the road had increased.

Q. Had the surplus increased or decreased?

A. I do not know, sir.

Q. The examination produced a pretty hazy result in your mind?

A. Yes, sir, because I was making a casual examination for a general purpose, without any idea of making a definite examination.

Q. You cannot give me a single detail as a result of your examination in relation to a single item?

A. I cannot, no, sir.

The Master: That is all.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. For all you know, there may have been an adjustment in 1865 as a result of the war basis and then a readjustment when you got around to 1872 as a result of a normal peace basis?

A. Yes, sir. They may have been hit very severely in 1865 and recovered themselves by 1872.

By The Master:

Q. All those things might have happened and there may have been a transition from one period to the other involving modifications as predicated upon the market and the medium of exchange which may not have been reflected in your 1872 proposition at all?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: That is all.

Mr. Anderson: Those are the facts I supposed the cross-examination would bring out. Your Honor has brought them out.

Mr. Holt: Your Honor, I suppose we will have the liberty if we deem it material to present at New York before the argument a transcript provided we have Mr. Hillman there for purpose of cross-examination, taken from these books upon that subject?

The Master: I think that if that can be done today it ought to be done today. My suggestion as to New York was not for the purpose of relieving the counsel of the responsibility of trying this case out fully before we adjourned. So far as you can of course I do not see any reason why we ought not to suspend this case this afternoon, but I cannot consent that testimony that could be submitted here with the exercise of diligence with the exception of this Axtell matter, can be withheld and suspended until the hearing in New York. I want the hearing now concluded so far as the exercise of reasonable diligence on either side can conclude it. If it should turn out that you have inadvertently omitted anything, that will come up in New York.

Mr. Holt: We will do our best to leave nothing undone.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, can that book be gotten now?

A. I do not know, sir. I will do what I can to get it.

Mr. Holt: When you get out of here, suppose you get that book, and if we can utilize it this afternoon we will do so, I mean this Confederate Museum book.

The Master: Do you want it, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir, I do not want it now. I am satisfied with the cross-examination on that subject.

Mr. Holt: You are through with Mr. Hillman?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

Mr. Holt: I might add to this other suggestion that has been made that we are not quite sure whether we have embraced in our offers one or two Auditor's reports of the State of Virginia. When we look over our memorandum if we find that we have not introduced them we will introduce them at New York before the argument. We may have them in. We do not want to stop to check up now.

The Master: We will suspend for two hours or three hours in order to give counsel on either side an opportunity to look over and complete anything that they want to put in. I will suspend now and come back here at three o'clock. I am willing to suspend here for two or three hours to give counsel on either side all the opportunity they desire to look their case over and see if they have omitted anything.

Mr. Holt: My idea is that ten minutes will be enough for us to determine this question.

The Master: Suppose I suspend now for half an hour, and that will be before we go to lunch, and then we can come back here at half past twelve and close up everything. Will that be all right?

Mr. Holt: I have one witness I want to put on the stand. Regarding the transcript of these balance sheets on that Confederate currency question of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac, we will send down and get them right now. Of course they may require a little adjournment.

Mr. Harrison: We will want to examine the records of that road for several years.

The Master: Why don't you suspend for half an hour and get this thing together? I will do anything you say.

Mr. Holt: I thought that I could get rid of a man who is sitting back of me here, who is the sole remaining witness we have.

Mr. Harrison. Put him on.

The Master: I will do anything you want, suspend or go on.

EVERETT A. DOVER

called as a witness in behalf of the defendant, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Give the stenographer your full name.

A. Everett A. Dover.

Q. Where do you reside?

A. Charleston, West Virginia.

Q. What public position do you hold there, if any?

A. Chief accountant in the State Tax Commissioner's office.

Q. Have you examined the market quotations upon the stock of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company for the year 1914 from January 1st to September 1st?

A. I have.

Q. Have you prepared a schedule showing the result of that examination?

A. I have.

By The Master:

Q. From what paper did you get your market quotations?

A. Times-Dispatch, Richmond.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Did it purport to be a report of the Richmond Stock Market?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The schedule you have prepared is headed market quotations for stock of Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad reported by Caskie G. Burch & Company, Richmond, Virginia, as shown by the Times-Dispatch, Richmond, Virginia, filed in the Virginia State Library, January 1, 1914, to September 1, 1914. Will you file it as a part of your testimony and mark it Defendant's Exhibit Dover No. 1?

A. I will file it so marked.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Dover Exhibit No. 1, September 12, 1914, C. B.

Q. Look at the date July 2, 1914, and state whether or not the quotation showed any bid on the stock of that company.

A. It showed a bid, 300.

Q. It did show a bid, did it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the amount shown?

A. 300.

Q. Does it show what was asked on that date?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What amount?

A. 320.

Q. Under the date of July 25th, of the same year, does the exhibit show a bid?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What amount?

A. 290.

Q. What was asked?

A. 302.

Q. Does this exhibit correctly represent the quotations with the explanations of bid, asked, etc., as taken from the Richmond Dispatch?

A. It does.

CROSS EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. It does not show any quotations after July 25th, does it?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Holt: Didn't the Stock Exchange close then?

Mr. Harrison: I presume that is the explanation of it, I suppose so.

By The Master:

Q. Did any of these market reports show any sales of this stock during any of this period?

A. It simply shows bid and asked.

Q. It does not show any sales?

A. No.

Q. So far as these quotations are concerned then, there were no actual transactions in the stock?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did these quotations you have here purport to come from the Stock Exchange?

A. It is headed Richmond Stock Market.

Q. Without indicating the source of the information?

A. It is reported by Caskie G. Burch & Company.

Q. That is, the report in the paper?

A. Yes, sir, I presume they are brokers, I don't know.

Mr. Holt: They reported, as shown by the exhibit, your Honor, the stock exchange quotations, the information that comes from the stock exchange.

The Master: It is headed Richmond Stock Market and purports to be made by some gentleman whose name he gives, and then the information stops there. It does not go far enough to show that it is the result of the action of the stock exchange. There may be more to it. I did not know but that the examination would leave it without bringing it home to the stock exchange.

Mr. Holt: I find it is the Richmond Stock Market. I thought it read stock exchange.

The Master: And the statement in it would not bring it home to the stock exchange.

Mr. Holt: I see I misread the exhibit.

Mr. Harrison: We have no further questions to ask.

The Master: That is all.

Mr. Holt: With the exception of the little odds and ends that they are trying to clean up on those book values, we are done.

The Master: Do you want to suspend for a little time?

Mr. Holt: I suspect we had better suspend.

The Master: For how long would you like to suspend? Would you like to come back after lunch or suspend for half an hour? I will do whatever you wish. Suppose we suspend for fifteen minutes.

At this point a short recess was taken.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN

recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

Mr. Holt: Mr. Hillman during the recess has gone down and made the transcript from the balance sheet of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company involving the explanation of the difference between the Confederate States securities and the United States involved in one of these schedules, and in the meantime Mr. Harrison and myself have discovered, I did not know it before, that this item appears on the liability side of that balance sheet and not on the asset column.

The Master: Which item?

Mr. Holt: It is an item of $1,500 which was described in some balance sheet as being a United States security and others as a Confederate security. Now, as I understand it, Mr, Harrison after having made that discovery does not care to cross-examine Mr. Hillman on that point or to require of him any transcript from the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac road; is that so, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: No, so long as you make the explanation on the record as you are doing.

Mr. Holt: In other words, if they had known that, they would not have made the point. Mr. Hillman is really simply trying to correct—

The Master: So long as that is a transcript of the trial balances, suppose he puts that right into the record. Let him put that in the record and stop right there.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now, Mr. Hillman, have you found the book relating to the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company that you referred to before recess?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Read its title to the stenographer, please.

A. Reports, R. & D. R. R., 1865 to 1871. The library mark is T. M. R. Talcott.

Q. Is that the book that came from North Carolina?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Furnished, you said this morning by Mr. Howard; but by whom was it furnished to you?

A. By Mr. Hall. Mr. Howard had furnished another book and I had them tangled for the moment.

Q. Will you refer to the matter therein, giving the page upon which you based your statements concerning the Richmond & Danville road made before recess.

A. The trial balance of the Richmond & Danville road for September 30, 1865, shown on pages 22 and 23 of this volume, where both receipts and disbursements are carried out in Confederate currency and in National currency; also the trial balance of September 30, 1866, on pages 94 and 95 of the same volume, where the cost of the road, receipts, are shown and where all receipts are marked less Confederate currency reduced, the reduction being approximately fifty per cent., where the cost of road and property is also reduced by less Confederate currency; where the cost of transportation as carried on that trial balance is also reduced by less Confederate currency, and where the trial balance is carried forward from one year to the other with no reduction in the capital stock; no reduction in the funded debt shown, simply in the cost of road, in transportation and expense items, that is, the Confederate currency taken out, the road continues its business and has not gone into liquidation or disturbed any of its capital accounts.

The Master: Why don't you put in the figures of those two trial balances and then we will have them right before us? You need not bother to do that today.

Q. How many trial balances have you referred to?

A. Only two.

Q. What years?

A. September, 1865, and September 30, 1866.

Q. I thought you had 1871 in there.

A. That was on the other roads.

The Master: Make photographs of those two the same as Mr. Potter has of the others, and then whatever significance it is entitled to, we will have it before us.

Mr. Holt: With that understanding Mr. Hillman is going to leave his assistant here, Mr. Leeds, who will have those figures made.

[The exhibits from photographic copy, above referred to, appear in Volume II, Exhibits, marked "BB, 2 sheets," along with "Extract from Report of Richmond & Danville Railroad Company."]

By Mr. Holt:

Q. A while ago, as I recall, you stated in substance that certain railroad companies named by you passed out what I may call the Confederate regime into that of the Federal without a jar necessitating reorganization or anything of the kind, and based your conclusion to that effect if conclusion it were simply upon a book that you had obtained or to which your attention had been called found in what is known as the Virginia State Library. Take the book now handed you and state whether or not it is the one referred to. This book is entitled Third Annual Report of the President and Directors of the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio Railroad Company for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1873.

A. Yes, sir, this is the book. I was mistaken as to its source. It was the State Library and not the Memorial Library from which it was obtained.

Q. Is it the State Library?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you turn to the pages of that book and the contents thereof upon which you based the conclusion just referred to.

A. Pages 16 and 17 of that report, which are headed Report of Treasurer for the Norfolk & Petersburg Division from organization to Termination of Fiscal Year ending September 30, 1873.

Q. Does that page cover the whole thing?

A. That covers the entire statement of the Norfolk & Petersburg.

Q. Go right along and explain how you arirved at your conclusion with respect to that road.

A. Under the liabilties of this road are the amounts of the capital stock which aggregate $1,798.800, on page 16 of this report. On page 45 of the blue prints, Defendant's Exhibit 6-A, 1863, the outstanding stock is given at $1,810,800, showing that the capital stock had not in these ten years increased. The Norfolk & Petersburg in 1863 showed a loss of $189,942.12. On page 16 of this report it showed a profit of $84,493.48.

Q. For what year?

A. For the year ending September 30, 1873, I mean from its organization up to that point.

Q. Does that mean that it had no surplus in 1863 but had a surplus in 1873?

A. Yes, and the same outstanding capital stock.

By the Master:

Q. You are reading from a trial balance?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why don't you put the trial balance right in?

A. I understand that is the intention, to have it copied the same as the Richmond & Danville was.

Q. State the next road if you are now through with that.

A. The next is on pages 188 and 189 of the same report, and is for the South Side Division, from its organization to the termination of the Fiscal year ending September 30, 1873. On the same page above mentioned of the blue prints—

The Master: If you put the exhibit, the trial balance, in that shows all these things, doesn't it, or do you want that stated in detail?

Mr. Holt: We wanted the question of surplus italicized.

The Master: You want it emphasized?

Mr. Holt: Yes.

A. (Continuing) On Defendant's Exhibit 6-A, 1863, blue print page 45, the stock outstanding of the South Side road is carried as $1,362,900. On page 18 of the report of September 30, 1873, stock is shown $1,365,600, an increase of some $2,700 only. It is the same stock. The profits in 1863 were $84,471.88. In 1873 they are shown to be $527,791.86. On pages 20 and 21 of the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio report, September 30, 1873, is shown the report of the Treasurer for the Virginia & Tennessee division from its organization to the end of the fiscal year, September 30, 1863. In this the capital stock is show as being outstanding $3,506,300. On page 45, Defendant's Exhibit 6-A, 1863, we have the outstanding stock, $3,452,813.32. It is the same stock. On the blue print, page 45, we have a loan shown of $3,285.30.

Q. For the year 1863?

A. Yes, sir. On page 20 of this report, which is at the end of the fiscal year, September 30, 1873, there was a profit of $797,644.78. On pages 22 and 23 of the same report, September 30, 1873, we have the report of the Treasurer for the Virginia & Kentucky division from its organization to the the termination of the fiscal year, September 30, 1873, in each case they are called now divisions of the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio instead of separate roads. In this case there is no profiit shown on Defendant's Exhibit 6-A, 1863, page 45. The stock is shown as $82,000.61. On September 30, 1873, this report shows a total outstanding stock of $451,200, the first item of which is by Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio Railroad Company purchased of the state of Virginia $103,400, which would serve to identify it with the $82,000.61 in character of stock which is mentioned upon page 45 of the blue prints. The loss on this stock up to September 30, 1873, is shown to be $25,-539.68. There was no profit or no loss shown upon Defendant's Exhibit 6-A, 1863, page 45, for the reason that at that time we had no data on the Virginia & Kentucky road. It is upon the examination of these figures that I made the general statement that these roads had passed from one regime or one set of currency to the other without being appreciably jarred in the final result.

By The Master:

Q. So far as the trial balances show?

A. Yes, sir.

The Master: Those trial balances all go in.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. How many pages of the trial balances are there?

A. Eight, four separate trial balances, two sheets each.

Q. It is understood that you will leave directions with your assistant, Mr. Leeds, to have those trial balances figures made.

The Master: Have them appear right in the record.

[These exhibits appear in Volume II, marked "AA, 4 sheets."]

By the Master:

Q. You have no knowledge of these conditions except what you derived from these trial balances?

A. None, sir, except what I derived from reports.

Q. What do you mean by reports, anything different than trial balances?

A. I meant from these trial balances.

The Master: The trial balances will go in the record so that we will have the same sources that you have. Is that all, Judge?

Mr. Holt: You gentlemen may examine.

CROSS EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You have testified in respect to an entry which you speak of having discovered since your last examination of a trial balance of the R. F. & P. Railway which should have been entered on your schedule No. 5 for 1863 as U. S. instead of C. S. I want to get that straight on the record. State what items you referred to.

A. On the blue print, page No. 4, they are called certificates of debt due United States in 1857, $1,606.32; ditto due in 1869, $264,979.40; ditto due in 1879, $138,653.20. On page 5 of the blue prints these are entered as certificates of debt due in C. S., in 1857, $1,564.32; due in 1869, $181,011.90; due in 1879, $98,599.20.

Q. Due by whom?

A. Due by the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac road as part of its indebtedness.

Q. And they are shown on the liability side of your exhibit, are they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What significance has the change?

A. For the reason that we have here an exhibit which is showing C. S. when the conclusion is inevitable—

By The Master:

Q. What change do you want to make? Do you want to strike out the abbreviation C. S. in Exhibit 5, and put in its place U. S.?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Holt: He has made the explanation in the record this morning, your Honor, as I understand. It is correctly set down as taken from the balance sheet, but his conclusion is that where the balance sheet makes it as Confederate States it does it by mistake, because he finds the same item carried forward under U. S. certificates beginning in a year before the Confederacy was established.

The Master: I get the point. He has made a correct transcript of the trial balances, but his judgment is that the trial balance is erroneous in that regard.

Mr. Holt: Is mistaken on that item.

Mr. Harrison: But it has no significance whatever.

Mr. Holt: None whatever. I agreed with you on that sometime ago. If I had understood it in the beginning I would not have bothered myself to inquire about it.

Mr. Harrison: The Judge thought it was on the asset side. He did not know it was a debt due by the company; he thought it was one due to the company.

The Master: It is not an error of Mr. Hillman.

Mr. Holt: I wanted to explain that for your benefit, that there is nothing in it.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now, you have testified again and given us a repetition of your conclusion based on what you call trial balances that you referred to, that the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company passed from Confederate time to the period immediately after the war without any embarrassment of its resources; is that what you meant to say?

A. No, sir; I did not say that.

Q. You did not mean to say that it suffered no loss by reason of the termination of the war?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not mean to say that in respect to any of these roads about which you testified, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know how much the bonded indebtedness created by the Richmond & Danville Railroad was between 1865 and 1872?

A. I do not know, I have not looked at it.

Q. And you do not wish to be understood by whatever conclusion or deduction you have drawn and stated that the assets of these companies suffered no loss or embarrassment by reason of the close of the war?

A. I do not wish to be so understood.

The Master: I suppose your question really means by reason of the operation of the war?

Mr. Harrison: I mean by reason of the operation of the war, I mean to say as a result of the war.

Q. Either you or Judge Holt, one or the other, defined what you mean by saying that the roads were likened to a man with rheumatism who got over the rheumatism in time; but you do not know what remedies were applied to relieve the roads of the rheumatism that they came out of the war with?

Mr. Holt: I added that they took no additional medicine.

Q. You do not know whether they had to take medicine or not to be relieved of the rheumatism that afflicted them when they emerged from the period of the war, do you?

A. No, sir; I do not know what they did save that they did not find it necessary to reorganize.

Q. You do not know what financial arrangements any of these roads made after the war?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. As of what date were you testifying in respect to the Norfolk & Petersburg and those roads, and the Virginia & Tennessee?

A. September 30, 1873, and September 30, 1863.

Q. On September 30, 1873, in the book that you find here and from which you have referred did you find any statement or balance sheet of the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio Railroad?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of what roads that road was composed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they?

A. It was composed originally of the four roads which we have mentioned, the Virginia & Tennessee, Virginia & Kentucky, Norfolk & Petersburg and the South Side road.

Q. Then there had been a reorganization by September 30, 1873, of the four roads which you mentioned and their consolidation in the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio?

A. No, sir, there had not been a reorganization.

Q. What would you call it?

A. A consolidation.

Q. A consolidation and merger.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find that they were encumbered with any mortgages?

A. I did not look further than the statements of each of the separate units of the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio road.

Q. Can you state when the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio Railroad was formed and took over the roads which you have mentioned?

The Master: 1880, wasn't it?

The Witness: That is my recollection, sir.

Mr. Harrison: He is talking about a balance sheet of the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio now of September 30, 1873.

Mr. Anderson: It was chartered in 1870. We put the charter in.

The Witness: I should judge, your Honor, it was in 1870, because this is called the third annual report and it is dated in 1873. I will therefore say 1870, 1869-70.

Q. Now, in reference to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad, glancing over a memorandum on page 6 of your blue print exhibits for 1864, September 30th, the nearest period we have got to 1865, the close of the war, that shows investments by that road of $272,500 in Confederate cotton bonds. What became of them at the close of the war, if you know?

A. They have either been disposed of by sale, or have been written off the books of the company, and they do not appear on the next trial balance, September 30, 1865. I do not know what became of them.

Q. Do you make the same answer as to the $47,000 of Confederate State 8 per cent. registered bonds which the company appears to have included among its assets, September, 1864?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same answer would apply as to the $40,725 of Confederate States cotton bonds in addition to the ones that I mentioned awhile ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those assets also include due from the Confederate States for transportation, $166,153.12 and $22,472.67 for reconstruction of bridges. Were these items collected or did they disappear at the next balance sheet?

A. I don't know, but my judgment would be that they had been written off and disappeared.

By the Master:

Q. You do not know anything about it except what you see from this trial balance sheet, do you?

A. Only from this trial balance and the next trial balance of the company.

Q. It simply appears on one and does not appear on the other, and that is all the information that the trial balances convey, and as to what happened, that is a matter of pure conjecture, isn't that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: We are through.

The Master: That is all of the cross-examination. Is there any re-direct?

Mr. Holt: Your Honor, we are pleased to be able to announce the conclusion upon our part.

The Master: We will assume that the preliminary proclamation has been made, whatever that may mean. Judge Holt says that they have concluded. Now, is there anything by way of re-rebuttal or rejoinder on the part of Virginia?

Mr. Harrison: We are through.

The Master: The only thing left as far as I know then is to determine on the time when this case shall be argued. Now, the suggestion made last night was that the briefs were to be printed and the case argued on he 7th of October, at the Bar Association in New York. Has any one any suggestion to make in relation to that this afternoon. That is as far as we got last night.

Mr. Holt: There is one question I would like to ask the gentlemen upon the other side, and that is whether in their briefs they expect to take up the question of interest.

Mr. Harrison: Yes, we do expect to present that question. It has already been covered very fully in our discussions. We intend to ask the Master to take that matter under consideration and report upon it.

Mr. Lilly: May I inquire of the Master what his opinion is as to whether or not he shall report on the question of interest, whether or not it has been referred to him?

The Master: Yes, you may make that inquiry, but in the absence of argument from either side I hardly would feel at liberty at this time to state my final conclusion. After the statement of Major Conrad the other day I do not know just in regard to that the position of Virginia might be; I have not examined it. I made an intimation when we had our preliminary meeting in New York. My first impression has been, without looking the thing over at all, that the item of interest was not submitted to me. Of course, as I said then I would have to say now, I would not want to conclude that if the plaintiff in the case seriously insists upon it without hearing them fully upon that proposition. I do not say that my mind is made up on it.

Mr. Holt: I want to know whether these gentlemen expect to discuss the question of interest in their briefs. The only reason I made the inquiry was this, I suppose on account of the shortness of the time both sides here would just simply have to take the whole time in the preparation of their briefs and they will really not be able to furnish one to the other their briefs before we meet in New York.

The Master: I presume there may be difficulty in that respect.

Mr. Anderson: The trouble about the case is that the argument will be so related to the schedules and to the evidence that we cannot carry in our minds, that it is absolutely necessary to have the printed record before we commence to prepare our briefs. We cannot spend time getting up authorities.

The Master: Unless there is some hiatus in the arrangements you will have the printed record a week from Monday morning.

Mr. Anderson: It would seem to me from my experience in connection with this and other cases where we had very large records and a great many questions in detail and in general that two weeks for the preparation of this brief would not be a very long time, in fact I do not think it is any more than sufficient. If the counsel prepares the brief on one side or the other and does not do anything else he has to confer with his associates and he has to examine again and again the record and the authorities, and it takes a great deal of time to file such a brief as will have to be gotton up in this case. It will shorten the brief, we will write very much shorter briefs if we have ample time than if we have to write it in a hurry.

The Master: We will have the understanding that the case is set down for taking the testimony of Mr. Axtell and for argument at 10 o'clock in the morning on the 19th of October, in New York, at the Bar Association.

Adjourned to October 19, 1914, at 10 A. M. to meet at the Bar Association, New York.

James River and Kanawha Company

PROCEEDINGS

Of the Stockholders of the James River and Kanawha Company, at their Twenty-Sixth Annual Meeting in October, 1860.

Richmond, Monday, October 22, 1860.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the stockholders of the James River and Kanawha Company was held at the office of the said company in Richmond, on Monday, the 22d day of October, 1860; present:

The Bank of Virginia, by Clement R. Barksdale, Alfred T. Harris and R. Milton Cary, proxies, having	632 votes
The city of Richmond, by Peachy R. Grattan, Samuel D. Denoon and Jas. M. Talbott, proxies, having	1449 "
The city of Lynchburg, by Samuel McCorkle, proxy, having	175 "
Total corporate representation other than the state	2256 "

Individual stockholders, in person, having	483	votes
Individual stockholders, by proxy, having	1490	"
Total number of votes other than the state	4229	"
The commonwealth of Virginia, by William B. Taliaferro of Gloucester, Samuel McCorkle of Lynchburg and James B. Dorman of Lexington, proxies, having a number of votes equal to three-fifths of the whole vote present	6343	" being a majority of the votes that could be given on all the stock of the company as at present held.
Total	10572	"

On motion of General Taliaferro, the meeting was organized by the appointment of Philip St. George Cocke, Esq., as chairman—William P. Munford, the secretary of the company, attending as clerk.

The president, Col. Thomas H. Ellis, on behalf of the board of directors, submitted the annual report and accompanying documents.

The report having been previously printed for the use of stockholders, on motion of Mr. Grattan, the reading of the same was dispensed with.

The president made a statement in regard to the returns from the Kanawha board, and in reply to an enquiry, read the portion of the report relating to this subject.

The president likewise informed the stockholders, that since closing the report just submitted, he had received a letter from Mr. Ernest de Bellot des Minieres, dated Bordeaux, October the 1st; that Mr. De Bellot arrived in Paris on the 26th September, and soon after left for Bordeaux, the residence of his family, in consequence of several of the principal persons connected with the proposed Virginia canal company being in Algeria—they being, also, the chief persons interested in an important concession made by the French government for the construction of railroads in that possession of France; that, awaiting their return to Paris, he intended to remain in Bordeaux until the 12th instant. He writes that his hopes of a satisfactory conclusion of the object of his visit to France, are more than ever good—that the political horizon, though much clouded, does not alarm him —and that he is highly gratified at his brothers' impressions in reference to the agreement of the first of September.

On motion of General Taliaferro, the report of the board of directors, and the documents accompanying it, were referred to a committee of thirteen; which was constituted as follows: William B. Taliaferro of Gloucester; Samuel McCorkle of Lynchburg; James B. Dorman of Lexington; Peachy R. Grattan, Clement R. Barksdale, Joseph Mayo, Thomas W. McCance, Bolling W. Haxall, R. Milton Cary, Henry C. Cabell, Dr. O. A. Crenshaw, Samuel T. Bayly and Samuel D. Denoon of Richmond.

On motion of Mr. Grattan, the meeting adjourned until tomorrow evening at 7:30 o'clock.

Tuesday, October 23, 1860.

The stockholders met pursuant to adjournment. In the absence of Mr. Cocke,

On motion of General Taliaferro, Peachy R. Grattan, Esq., was called to the chair.

General Taliaferro presented and read the following report and resolutions:

The committee to whom were referred the report of the board of directors and the accompanying documents, have duly considered the same, and beg leave respectfully to report:

That they congratulate the stockholders on the improved and apparently improving condition of the company in every department of its affairs. The increase in the receipts from its several works—dock, canal, connections, turnpikes, bridges and ferry, amounting in the aggregate to more than sixty thousand dollars during the year—has, of itself, evidently afforded relief to the administration, and, doubtless, imparted new energy to the entire organization; while the great measure of converting the debt into stock, granted by the legislature last winter, has relieved the company from a load of oppressive embarrassment, and contributed to produce a most happy effect upon the public mind in reference to the value of the improvement.

Nothing has occurred, so far as the committee are apprised, to cast doubt upon the success of the arrangement heretofore approved with such remarkable unanimity by the stockholders, for the completion of the improvement by the employment of French capital: And therefore the committee confidently anticipate that brilliant future for the company and for Virginia, to which the report of the board directs attention.

Among the subjects presented by the board in their report, none seems to call for a special resolution on the part of the stockholders.

The omission of the president pro tempore of the Kanawha board to present a report at this meeting, is presumed to have been accidental; since by the by-laws of the Kanawha board it is his duty, at every annual meeting, to lay before the stockholders a report of the condition of the improvement under the control and direction of that board, the progress of the works under its direction, the conduct of the officers and agents appointed or employed by it, the state of its finances, and such other matters as he may deem interesting. Though not required by the by-laws, it is obviously proper that a statement of the receipts and disbursements of the Kanawha board should be duly transmitted to the secretary here, for the purpose of being incorporated into his summary statement of the receipts and disbursements of the company. A resolution on that subject is herewith reported.

It affords the committee pleasure, while performing, as they conceive, an act of justice, to pay a deserved compliment to an intelligent, faithful and assiduous officer; and recognizing the inadequacy of the compensation heretofore allowed to the secretary for his constant services, they unanimously recommend an increase of his salary.

The following resolutions are accordingly respectfully submitted:

1. Resolved, that hereafter it shall be the duty of the Kanawha board to return to the secretary of this company, on or before the fifteenth day of October in each year, a summary statement of the receipts and disbursements of that board for the preceding fiscal year.

2. Resolved, that the salary of the secretary of the company be fixed at the rate of two thousand five hundred dollars, commencing on the first day of October instant.

3. Resolved, that when this meeting adjourns, it will adjourn to meet on Monday, the 28th day of January, 1861, unless the interests of the company should require an earlier meeting. In which event, the president is hereby empowered and directed to convene the company at an earlier day, giving reasonable notice thereof to the stockkholders.

On motion of Col. Cabell, the report and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The president stated that the commonwealth, in consideration of her increased subscription to the capital stock of the company, would be entitled to the appointment of one of the directors heretofore appointed by the stockholders other than the state. He submitted a letter from Mr. Boyd, addressed to the board of directors some time since, conditionally resigning his place as a director.

Mr. Grattan stated, that as a friend of Mr. Boyd, he felt authorized to withdraw his name from an election in which there might be a competition between him and Col. Bondurant for the office of director.

The meeting then proceeded to the election of officers.

On a nomination by General Taliaferro, Col. Thomas H. Ellis was unanimously re-elected president.

On a nomination by General Taliaferro, David J. Burr, Esq., was re-elected director on the part of the state and the private stockholders.

On a nomination by Col. Cabell, Col. Thomas M. Bondurant was re-elected director on the part of the private stockholders.

The chairman announced the following committees:

Committee to examine the books, papers and accounts of the company for the present fiscal year: Messrs. Lewis Webb, Samuel Marx, Bolling W. Haxall, Lewis D. Crenshaw and Thomas W. McCance.

Committee to examine the books, papers and accounts of the Kanawha board for the past and present fiscal years: Messrs. James C. McFarland, Thomas L. Broun and George S. Patton.

On a nomination by Mr. Dorman, Messrs. James L. Carr and John D. Lewis, were re-elected directors on the part of the private stockholders for the Kanawha board

On motion of Mr. Barksdale, the meeting then adjourned.

President's Report

Richmond, Oct. 22, 1860.

Gentlemen:

The board of directors now make their report of the condition of the company for the year ending the 30th of September, 1860.

The business of the Richmond dock continues to be marked by the same steady progression which has been noted for the last six years. Its revenue has increased $3,712.16 during the past fiscal year, indicating an increase in many of the leading articles received and shipped, which is more particularly shown by the following comparative statement:

ARTICLES	Year ending September 30, 1859.	Year ending September 30, 1860.	Increase.
Inward Trade.
Coal	15,062 tons	29,897 tons	14,835 tons
Fish	16,404 barrels	25,470 barrels	9,066 barrels
Guano	17,223 tons	22,778 tons	5,555 tons
Hay	20,220 bales	29,813 bales	9,593 bales
Iron, pig and scrap	6,051 tons	13,333 tons	7,282 tons
Lime	28,349 casks	48,491 casks	20,142 casks
Oats	26,032 bushels	27,035 bushels	1,003 bushels
Oyster shells	6,050 bushels	33,512 bushels	27,462 bushels
Plaster	5,832 tons	8,149 tons	2,317 tons
Salt	25,729 sacks	73,177 sacks	47,448 sacks
Shingles	3,037,485	3,116,600	79,115
Tar and rosin	1,604 barrels	2,053 barrels	449 barrels
Wheat	317,806 bushels	360,918 bushels	43,112 bushels
Outward Trade.
Flour	389,635 barrels	423,194 barrels	33,559 barrels
Tobacco	54,977 packages	56,367 packages	1,390 packages
Tobacco	576 tierces	1,117 tierces	541 tierces
Wheat	102,309 bushels	143,000 bushels	40,961 bushels

The trade with the northern cities seems to have fallen off; since the number of assorted cargoes which arrived from Baltimore, New York and Boston, during the year 1859 was 205, while the number during the year 1860 was 170—a decrease of 35 cargoes. The whole number of arrivals of boats and vessels in the dock, was 2,123, the whole number of departures, 2,337. The usual statement, furnished by the collector, is herewith communicated.

The receipts from dockage, and the disbursements on account of the dock, during the year, have been as follows:

Received,
From dockage		$50,128.03
Disbursed,
For expenses and repairs	$3,457.26
For salaries of agents	4,264.26	7,721.52
Net income		$42,406.51

The receipts from dockage, it is believed, would be increased, if additional accommodation were afforded for landing heavy articles, such as lumber and plaster, on the south side. The condition of the company, however, until recently, has been such as to forbid any expenditures of money not called for by necessity.

The paving of Water street, from 23d street to Rocketts, by the city, has been completed, and the paving from 14th to 17th streets is in progress. This will render necessary the raising of the wall on the north side of the dock from 14th to 17th street, and from 23d to 26th street, an aggregate length, including the intermediate quays, of about 2,200 feet of stone work, which has been let to contract, and is already commenced.

A practical enlargement of the dock has been effected, by the removal of the stationary bridge, in the line of 17th street, and the substitution of an iron pivot bridge, which being turned at pleasure, admits masted vessels into the upper basin, extending to 14th street. A part of the old abutment was removed, and a new pier built in the centre. This bridge has a span of 31 feet 5 inches at each side from the centre, and when turned, presents a passage of 29½ feet in the clear, for vessels. The girders, being nearly 32 feet long, 2 feet wide, and ⅜ of an inch thick, are said to be the longest single pieces of iron of the same dimensions ever rolled. This bridge brings into available use about 1,300 lineal feet of additional wharfage. It was built by Mr. Joseph Heindl, at the cost of $4,883.50. A contract has been made with the same gentleman to build wrought iron bridges over the canal at the intersection of 5th, 7th and 12th streets in the city of Richmond, to substitute the wooden structures now requiring expensive repairs. The road bed of 5th street bridge is to be increased from 12 to 18 feet, and that of 7th street bridge, from 52 to 60 feet. They are to be of the same strength, and guaranteed in every respect, as railroad bridges are. Mr. Heindl, who is a graduate of the polytechnic school of Munich, proposes to form in this city an establishment for cast iron bridge building and iron superstructures of every kind.

It is with much satisfaction the Board are advised that the Richmond and Danville railroad company contemplate renewing their depot bridge, and that in doing so, actuated partly by a disposition to accommodate this company, they will construct it of iron instead of wood, which will enable them to give nearly two feet of additional height between the surface of the water in the canal and the lowest part of the superstructure. The permission to build the depot bridge originally, was granted by our company in a friendly spirit; but the bridge has been found by experience too low to admit the convenient passage of unloaded boats. The disposition, then, on their part to remedy this evil, evinces a sense of justice and comity towards a sister improvement which the board takes pleasure in recognizing.

Adjacent to the Danville depot lot, Messrs. Richard Barton Haxall and Lewis D. Crenshaw, present proprietors of the Columbia mills, have, with the permission of this company, built a handsome iron bridge over the canal, so that loaded wagons may pass from Virginia street to and from their mills. In the line of 13th street, near lock No. 5, they have likewise built a substantial stone bridge. They are constructing a lateral arched canal, leading from the "extended lock" of the Tide water connection into the body of a large addition to their mills, the foundation of which has been built up to the service. These are but indications, not less than an enlightened spirit of improvement, than of a material progress, in and around Richmond, perceptible to the most casual observer—a state of things, due in no small degree, as your board believe, to the facilities afforded by the several improvements of the James River and Kanawha company. Prominent among the establishments, public and private, recently erected, connected with the business of the dock or canal, the board would mention the new inspection warehouse for tobacco, belonging to Edward Mayo, Esq., eligibly situated near the Danville depot, between the dock and the river. The first inspection was made in the month of June last. This warehouse, embracing an area of more than four acres of land, will, when completed, be capable of holding seven thousand hogsheads of tobacco on the ground, covered by water-tight sheds.

The plaster mill of Mr. John H. Claiborne, the machinery of which is propelled by the waste water from the dock, at Shockoe creek aqueduct, receives between four and five thousand tons of plaster per annum from quarries in Nova Scotia, and furnishes from twenty-five to thirty thousand barrels of the purest ground plaster for agricultural uses. The capacity of the mill is equal to about double this product. The mill of Messrs. D. Lambert & Co., also on the dock, grinds from sixty to seventy barrels of plaster per day.

Messrs. R. J. White & Co. have erected on the south side of the dock an establishment for the manufacture of Foster's patent building block. This new building material, which is artificially composed of sand, gravel, lime and cement in certain proportions, is subjected while moist to great pressure, in steel moulds, and in the form of hollow blocks, and acquires the hardness of stone upon exposure to the atmosphere. The blocks are commonly ten inches long, five inches wide, and four inches high, and being formed by compression, and not baked, are consequently not distorted when finished, but perfectly true in form, as well as uniform in size. An air chamber running vertically through the center of each block, is so arranged to insure a circulation of air through the entire wall. Those who have used this material, speak of it in high terms. It makes a smooth, solid, well ventilated wall or house, in appearance equal to the finest dressed granite or free stone—becomes harder with age, and consequently absorbs a diminished quantity of water after each successive wetting, and is about as cheap as good common brick. The armory, now being constructed for the volunteers of Richmond, is to be built of this material.

On the north side of the dock, occupying the site of the former city gas works, is the estabiishment of the Lester Sewing Machine Company, nearly completed, and about to give employment to two hundred mechanics.

Messrs. Talbott & Brother and Ettenger & Edmond have considerably enlarged their establishments on the line of the dock; and near at hand are the well known "Eagle Works" of Mr. Philip Rahm. These gentlemen, in the manufacture of railroad engines, cars, machinery and fixtures, fire engines, saw mills, etc., give employment regularly to about four hundred hands, and turn out from their shops annually about $375,000 worth of work, which it is believed will compare favorably with that of any other establishments whatever. About $220,000 worth of their work is sent to states south of Virginia.

At Rocketts, this very day, Mr. Charles Y. Morris commences operations at his sugar refinery—expecting to refine from one hundred and fifty to two hundred barrels of sugar weighing from thirty to forty thousand pounds, per day.

Fronting this establishment, at Rocketts, is the ship yard of Messrs. Abrahams & Co., who have attained reputation for scientific skill in shipbuilding. These gentlemen have heretofore constructed for Richmond owners, at the yard in Baltimore, one ship of eighteen hundred tons, and twenty-nine schooners, brigs and barks, averaging about three hundred and seventy-five tons each, and all now afloat except one or two. The first ship of the Richmond and Liverpool line of packets, a vessel of eighteen hundred tons burden, built by those gentlemen at their Baltimore yard, will be launched in a few weeks; while the keel of the second ship, of the same line, has been laid in their yard at Rocketts. The yard which they have established here, within the past year, has two launching ways, and the capacity to construct about three thousand tons per annum. The best ship timber is obtained from the lands bordering on James River and the waters of the Chesapeake bay. But little of our mountain timber has yet found its way to the coast for shipbuilding purposes. Yet we know the illimitable supply and the superior quality which the region upon the line of the canal affords; and it is remembered as a remark often made by Judge Mason, after serving under two administrations as secretary of the navy, and while president of this company, that Virginia possessed a source of wealth in her mountain forests of which her citizens generally seemed to be unaware, and which he deemed second only in importance to her wonderful mineral deposits. There is adjoining the ship yard above referred to, a steam marine railway, of sufficient capacity to haul out the largest vessel or steamer that can come into this port. It is reputed to have a power equal to any in the United States. The fine bark Abigail, of 383 tons, belonging to the Richmond and Rio line, has been lately recalked and recoppered at this station—being the first vessel ever coppered in Richmond. The same vessel on her last voyage brought from the Plate River the first cargo of bone ash and bones ever imported into Richmond.

On the first level of the canal, within the enclosure of the Tredegar Iron Works property, the Virginia Car Spring Company have commenced the manufacture of vulcanized India-rubber car springs, of a quality reputed superior to those made under the famous Goodyear patent by the New England Car Spring Company—a corporation that has hitherto had a monopoly of this important item of railway supplies. The Virginia company vulcanize their rubber by new processes recently patented, and their springs possess a form which is believed to be better adapted to the strain they are to bear than any heretofore in use. But the most interesting feature of the enterprise is, that it fills up almost the only blank in the list of railway supplies now manufactured at Richmond—thus contributing to make Richmond one of the great railroad centres of the country, and enabling the directors of southern roads to purchase every thing they need at home.

Adjacent to the same property, the flouring mill of Messrs. Crenshaw & Fisher has been converted into a woolen factory, whose operations, while giving direct profitable employment to more than fifty hands, male and female, are doubtless but the beginning in one of the most interesting branches of industry, and will contribute to excite a spirit for the improvement of sheep and wool in every part of the state having convenient access to this market.

While thus adverting to industrial pursuits, so intimately connected with our own improvement, and owing, in a great degree, their prosperity, if not their origin, to it, it might appear invidious to pass without notice the extensive establishment of Messrs. Joseph R. Anderson & Co., known as the Tredegar Iron Works. These truly grand works are a pride to our city. Their importance as an adjunct to the canal may be estimated, when we consider the amount of rent they pay for water-power—that they employ from eight hundred to a thousand men—consume annually about four hundred thousand bushels of coal, some ten or twelve thousand tons of pig iron—and that they supply Virginia, and the states south of Virginia, and the Island of Cuba, from their rolling mill, spike factory, brass, iron and cast steel foundries, locomotive, boiler and blacksmith shops, more than a million dollars of manufactured material every year. Here the enormous boilers of the United States frigates Roanoke and Colorado were built; and they are at this time casting heavy guns for the United States Navy, and water pipes, two feet in diameter, for the city. The same firm have just entered into a contract with the commissioners of the state, for enlarging and equipping the state armory, which also draws its supply of water power from the canal, with improved machinery for manufacturing, on a large scale, every description of fire arms.

Contemporaneously with these substantial evidences of prosperity and advancement, the city of Richmond laudably perseveres in her endeavors to improve the navigation of James River at and below Rocketts, so as to bring vessels of larger tonnage and deeper draught to our wharves. From a memorandum furnished by Washington Gill, Esq., the engineer in charge of the river improvement, the board learn that the contractors for removing the reef at Rocketts bar have succeeded remarkably well with their chisel and dredge, in breaking up and removing the solid granite and large boulders from the bed of the river, affording at this time a depth of from fifteen to twenty feet water over the rocks, where formerly only about twelve feet could be obtained. An outlay of a few thousand dollars more will open a channel one hundred feet wide and from eighteen to twenty feet deep through this reef. A contract has been entered into with the same parties for dredging a channel fifty feet wide and sixteen feet deep through Rocketts, Richmond and Warwick bars. The work of dredging was commenced early in July last. A channel has already been cut through Richmond bar, in compliance with the contract. More than twenty thousand cubic yards of sand and gravel have been removed up to this time. The entire work, under the contract for dredging, is expected to be completed early next spring. The importance of this river improvement, to the city of Richmond, as well as to the state at large, is too self-evident to require comment at our hands.

The board are much disappointed that a steam dredging machine built by the patentee in Philadelphia for the company, at an expense of $6,500, and intended chiefly to be employed in dredging at the mouth of Tye River, Judith's Creek and other places where heavy sand bars are formed in the ponds on the upper part of the line, proves unavailable for that purpose. Though built according to the dimension furnished, it turns out, that in consequence of the bulging of the sustaining walls of several of the old locks on the first division, the machine cannot pass through them. It will therefore be employed on the first level, in the dock, and at the mouth of the ship lock, taking the place of the old machine which was bought from the United States Government six years ago, and which is, indeed, so worn out as to require repairs almost equal to the cost of reconstruction.

The receipts from lock tolls have been $3,415.29, and the disbursements on account of the five locks of the Tide water connection, for repairs, $26.51, for salaries of agents, $549.98. Other expenditures chargeable to the Tide water connection have amounted to $842.07.

The board regret to announce the death of William S. Richardson, inspector at Richmond. He died on the 3d instant, having performed the duties of this responsible office, with firmness and integrity, for seven years. His place has been supplied by the appointment of George N. Skipwith, Esq., formerly an assistant engineer on the Richmond and Danville Railroad.

Reports from the chief engineer, and from the superintendents of repairs on the first and second divisions of the canal, and the North River improvement, are herewith submitted; also, the usual returns from the toll gatherers at Richmond, Lynchburg and Buchanan, and the secretary's statements, showing the quantities, classification and probable value of all tonnage and of tolls, the rates of toll, and the monthly receipts of tolls.

These documents exhibit a state of things in many respects highly gratifying. Neither from freshets, nor decay, nor accident, has there been any serious suspension of navigation. In the month of January the line was closed by ice from the 1st to the 13th day of the month, and in the month of February, from the 3d to the 6th, by the same cause; and in the month of July, the water was withdrawn from some of the levels for the usual systematic repairs; but beyond these, there was no detention of boats on the main line of the improvement at any time exceeding twenty-four hours. The most formidable impediments occur generally at the mouth of Tye River, and in some of the ponds on the second division, where the quantity of deposit brought down by heavy floods is often astonishingly large, rendering the constant employment of dredging machines more or less necessary. The present condition of the canal, so far as it affects navigation, is very good.

The number of boats which passed through the first lock above Richmond, during the fiscal year just past, was	9,974
The number for the previous fiscal year	7,510
Increase	2,464

Showing an improvement in every particular, for the fiscal year 1860, compared with the fiscal year 1859, and this too, notwithstanding the fact, that the wheat crop in Virginia and Tennessee, always so important to this line, has fallen far short of its usual standard of quality and quantity. An inspection of the statements just submitted will show:

Articles brought down the canal:	1859	1860
Bushels of wheat	723,479	695,388
Decrease, 28,091 bushels.
Barrels of flour	104,434	78,711
Decrease, 25,723 barrels.
Boxes of manufactured tobacco	57,181	53,076
Decrease, 4,105 boxes.

There was a considerable increase in the articles of leaf tobacco, tobacco stems, coal, stone, wood, dried fruit, cotton, manganese, etc., descending the canal, and of articles ascending, a considerable increase in salt, plaster, coal, castings, nails, guano, etc.

The diminished quantity of flour and manufactured tobacco transported on our line, as above noticed, is owing not perhaps so much to the smaller products of these articles, as to another cause, which the board will briefly advert to.

The stockholders are aware that an injurious rivalry existed for several years between the South side railroad and the canal, for the transportation of freight, and that, under the instructions which they gave in March, 1858, the board adopted a low tariff, with the view to prevent any diversion of our accustomed trade. This was met by a counter movement on the other side, which rendered still further reductions on our part necessary. There is but one history for all such controversies: loss on both sides—which both parties would willingly avoid. In this case, we felt it to be peculiarly hard: the railroad was the junior improvement, minor in interest, and controlled by a policy which seemed to aim at trade for the largest stockholder, to wit, the city of Petersburg, regardless of dividends, or consequences to the state and the other stockholders—the most urgent necessity existing in the meantime for the largest possible revenue derivable from the canal. The state being the principal ultimate sufferer in both cases, there was frequent protest and complaint in the legislature against the courts of the two companies. As far back as February of last year overtures were made by the South side company, which were met in an amicable spirit by our board. No schedule, however, was submitted or agreed upon for about a year, when one was adopted, to go into operation on the 20th day of February last. Since that time, therefore, the canal and railroad have been operating under a tariff of charges and tolls mutually agreed upon. This company has had reason to proclaim of a departure from the agreement in some respects, by the South side company—and among them, of arangements made which affect our trade in the important articles of flour and manufactured tobacco shipped at Lynchburg for northern markets. Nevertheless, in view of a steadily increasing aggregate revenue on our side, and in consideration also, the board take pleasure in saying, of fairer remuneration to a neighboring improvement and a sister city, they have been reluctant to give the notice, which either party is at liberty to give, for terminating the agreement.

Reference is made to the chief engineer's report for detailed information in regard to the principal works undergoing repair.

Bosher's Dam is so nearly completed, that the final estimate may be taken by the first of January next, if the weather and stage of water be favorable for such work. The company have paid $9,130 towards its reconstruction during the past fiscal year. The pond formed by this dam is important not only to admit the coal from the Norwood pits and the Burfoot pits, the castings from the Bellona arsenal, the granite (of which one of the finest quarries on our line has been developed by the construction of the dam), the daily supply of wood for city use, and the agricultural product of the several estates on the south side extending from Bosher's Dam to Maiden's Adventure Dam, a distance of eighteen miles, but important also, as a feeder to the fourth level, upon which the Westham Iron Works depend for their supply of water power. In consequence of untoward circumstances, among which was an irregular supply of water, this valuable establishment, after going into blast about the first of May, was obliged to suspend having continued in blast only six or eight weeks. An incorporated company has recently been organized, under the name of the Westham Iron Company, by which the property is to be managed in the future. They will recommence work in a few days, and it is hoped, that hereafter nothing will occur to impair the public usefulness of the establishment or disappoint the just expectations of its owners.

The board regret to state that very unsatisfactory progress has been made with the Joshua Falls Dam, notwithstanding their anxious desire to see it completed at the earliest practicable day. This dam is in two parts—the main or original portion, extending from the northern shore to a southern abutment, and the new or secondary portion, which became necessary after the freshet of July 1842, extending from the original southern abutment to the present southern shore. The reconstruction of the latter portion, which is most urgently demanded, was first let to contract, and is that which is here referred to. The former portion was afterwards contracted for by the same person; but he having declined to go on with his work under the second contract, the board have determined again to call Mr. Duncan Grant into the service of the company, and to have it rebuilt with all expedition by a force employed under him.

When the freshet of May 1857 occurred, and the board were considering plans of repair at Lynchburg, the expediency of building a dam across the river from the north abutment of the water-works dam to the Amherst shore, was strongly urged by the superintendent of repairs on that division.

These views were at first concurred in by the chief engineer, but afterwards, for reasons stated in a well considered report, he recommended a less expensive plan, which was adopted by the board. The work then determined upon has never been fully executed, though the board have long been aware that prudence dictated its speedy completion. Since the relief afforded by the legislature last winter, the board have taken up the original suggestions of a dam across the river; and being satisfied that it is the most safe and desirable improvement they could adopt at that important point, they have entered into a contract with Mr. Charles Scott, whose known skill, energy, and ample means, afford a guarantee that the work will be completed in the shortest practicable time.

The last dam on the North River improvement has been complete, and the contractor's forces are now engaged on the tow-path in sight of the bridge at Lexington. It is presumed that the final estimate on this work will be returned before the first of January. Some assessments of damages remain to be made, but measures have been taken to have them determined according to the provisions of the Code.

The receipts and disbursements on account of the canal have been as follows:

At Bent Creek, a commodious warehouse has been built, for the accommodation of the South side trade. The cost of the building was two thousand dollars, for which sum the bond of the company has been executed, payable without interest in October 1861.

The legislature at its last session made provision for a subscription of sixty thousand dollars to the stock of the Rivanna Navigation Company to be wholly expended in the extension and completion of that improvement. Upon the application of the Rivanna Company, the chief engineer of this company was allowed to take charge of their work without interference, however, with his duties upon this line. The entire unfinished work was let to contract in July, is in active progress, and may be expected to be completed in twelve months from this time. It is not doubted that the Rivanna improvement will be a valuable tributary to the canal, when the navigation shall be extended to and above Charlottesville.

The report of the agent on the Kanawha turnpike road is submitted, showing satisfactorily the condition of the road and an increase in the receipts at the toll gates of $908.66, compared with the receipts of the previous fiscal year. The total receipts and disbursements were as follows:

Receipts:
From toll		$8,818.48
Disbursements
On road account	$6,696.96
On bridge account	1,832.87
On agency account	883.32	9,413.15
Excess of disbursements over receipts		$ 594.67

Up to the time of placing this report in the hands of the printer to be printed as usual in advance of the meeting of the stockholders for their use, no statement had been received from the Kanawha board of the state of their finances, subsequent to the first of May. The remaining portion, therefore, is necessarily omitted from the secretary's general statement of the receipts and disbursements of the company for the fiscal year.

It will be remembered that the Kanawha board were authorized and directed, by the act of assembly passed March 23, 1860, to prosecute the construction of the Kanawha line of improvement, free from the control or direction of the president and directors of the company; they having been, by previous act, invested with all the authority vested in the then existing board of directors over the Kanawha River. In view of these circumstances, when the board here were making their first quarterly report to the auditor of public accounts, of the number of passengers transported, and the gross amount received for the transportation of freight on the canal, as required by the act passed March the 30, 1860, entitled an act for the assessment of taxes on persons and property, the auditor was referred to the Kanawha board for the required report and payment of tax so far as applicable to the Kanawha portion of the company's improvement. The Kanawha board at first declined to make report or pay the tax, conceiving that the Kanawha River was not included in the provisions of the act. The auditor, however, being advised by the attorney general, called for a report and demanded payment from the company as a corporation aggregate, looking to the president alone as its official organ; and upon this fact being made known to the Kanawha board, they furnished a statement of the gross amount received by them for the transportation of freight on the Kanawha River, and paid the tax thereon out of the funds under their control, but paid it under protest, through the president of the company.

The amount of tax paid by the company under this act, for five months of the fiscal year, was as follows:

Tax at the rate of one mill for every mile of transportation of each passenger transported on the canal		$ 893.01
Tax of one-half of one per centum of the gross amount received by the company for the transportation of freights:
On the canal	$481.76
On the Kanawha River	17.92
		499.68
Total		$1,392.69

The company thus paying this tax, is not to be assessed with any tax on its lands, buildings, boats, or other property which it is authorized by law to hold or have.

Summary statements, prepared by the secretary, are herewith submitted, showing the receipts and disbursements of the company for the year ending September 30, 1860; also the receipts and disbursements from the organization of the company in 1835. A synopsis of the transactions for the part fiscal year will exhibit the following view:*

*The returns from the Kanawha board having been received before the printer's form was distributed, they have been included in the synopsis as now published; so that the balance on the 30th September 1860 appears to be $106,258.02, instead of $86,917.78, as reported to the stockholders.

*As to the balance appearing due by the collector at Charleston, Kanawha:

The whole of this amount is reported by him as "tolls in arrear," but stands charged on the books of the company as cash in his hands.

This does not include the bonds of the North River Navigation Company, the payment of which was assumed by the James River and Kanawha Company under the agreement entered into for the transfer of the franchises of the North River Navigation Company, confirmed by an act of the general assembly passed March 16, 1858. The amount issued was $200,000; of which amount $1,000 has been redeemed, leaving outstanding, $199,000.00

Payable as follows:

1st July 1861	$ 2,600.00
1st January 1862	2,000.00

The trustee appointed under the original agreements providing for the guarantee, holds $42,122 of these bonds, purchased by him on account of the sinking fund, so that there remain $156,878 yet to be redeemed.

Of the six per cent. registered stock of the commonwealth, issued to the company in purchase of two thousand shares of capital stock, and applicable to the extinguishment of an equal amount of the floating debt, under the act of March 23, 1860, there remained on hand on the 30th September, forty-two thousand one hundred dollars.

No bonds have been issued, and no mortgage or deed of trust given, for the purpose of borrowing money to be applied to the completion of the canal to Covington and other works of the company, and the payment of the residue of the floating debt, as authorized by the act of the 23d March, 1860. The board deemed this course obviously proper in view of the negotiations which were for some time pending with Messrs. Bellot des Minieres, Brothers & Company, and which resulted the project of agreement first signed on the 25th July.

The board of public works being required by the act passed March 23d. 1860, to deliver to this company a statement of the number, amount and date of each guaranteed bond of the company canceled by them, it appears that the amount surrendered and canceled up to the 30th September, has been, of the issued:

Under the act 23d March, 1839	$ 874,775.00
Under the act 9th March, 1849	293,900.00
Under the act 12th March, 1849	135,500.00
Under the act 15th March, 1850	360,000.00
Total	$1,664,175.00

Leaving five hundred and ninety-five thousand eight hundred and twenty-five dollars outstanding. The bonds not yet surrendered, may be converted, as the others have been, into six per cent. registered stock of the commonwealth of Virginia, at the pleasure of the holders thereof, upon application at the office of the board of public works.

No report has been received during the year from the agent for the collection of the Hamilton debt.

In reply to the request of the stockholders adopted at their meeting in August, that the Governor would call an extra session of the legislature for the purpose of considering the agreement authorized by them to be entered into with Messrs. Bellot des Minieres, Brothers & Company, the board are informed that he will convene the legislature for that purpose on the 14th of January next. A copy of his letter is herewith communicated. The agreement in question was duly signed and sealed on the first day of September, and the requisite acknowledgments and certificates for use in France having been subsequently obtained, Mr. Ernest de Bellot des Minieres left this city on the fifth of September and departed from New York by steamer on the twelfth, taking a duplicate of the agreement with him.

On this subject the board have but little additional information to communicate. Advices are daily expected from France. Since your called meeting in August, the French consul has received another dispatch from the minister of foreign affairs of his Government, recommending the scheme of Messrs. Bellot des Minieres, Brothers & Company to his care and requesting him to lend to them all the moral support which may seem to him to comport with their design. In Virginia, the indications of public sentiment are at once decided, and singularly unanimous, in support of the scheme. The prospect of the immediate completion of the canal, through the agency of the proposed Virginia Canal Company, appears to be everywhere received with satisfaction. A brilliant future for Virginia is generally anticipated, from the development of the mineral, agricultural, manufacturing and commercial resources which the completion of the canal would bring about; and this, too, not only without adding to the burdens of the state, but with immediate actual relief to the public finances, and all the material advantages which would result from the expenditure of so large an amount of foreign capital as would be required, to say nothing of the demand for labor, provisions and supplies necessarily incident to such an undertaking. The subject indeed seems to have expanded into national interest, since many of the most intelligent and influential journals of the country have noticed it, with expressions of pleasure, if friendly to the end proposed, or of detraction, if influenced by a spirit of rivalry. In short, no one doubts that the speedy completion of the James River and Kanawha Canal, upon an enlarged and improved plan, is of immeasurable importance to the power and prosperity, not of Virginia only, but of the whole South.

The board of directors naturally feel a peculiar interest in the success of this undertaking. Their earnest hope and constant effort will be for the accomplishment of an event which they deem worthy of our state and country.

All which is respectfully submitted.

No. 3.

Richmond, October 20, 1860.

Gentlemen:

I ask leave to present the following report of the condition and progress of the work under my charge during the past year:

The increasing trade of the Richmond dock demands that the wharf on the south side of the dock should be extended down to the ship lock; and the improvements made by the city in the grading and paving of Water Street, renders it also necessary to continue the raising of the wharves and sheds on the north side, as far down as the lower slip. I strongly recommend and hope that these improvements will be made during the following year.

The pivot bridge over the dock at 17th street will be completed in a few days. The north abutment of the old bridge was taken down and a new abutment erected 10 feet inside of the old one, and a pier 17 feet long and 10 feet wide was built between the two abutments, leaving an opening of 31 feet for the passage of vessels. The bridge consists of two iron girders 31½ feet long, two feet wide, and ⅜ths of an inch thick, extending from the pier to each abutment. These girders are from the factory of Messrs. Abbott & Son of Baltimore, and are, I believe, the longest that have ever been rolled in one entire piece in this country. The castings and other iron work were furnished in this city; and the bridge was put together and erected by Messrs. Turner & Brother, under the superintending of Mr. Joseph Heindl, the contractor. The cost of changing the abutment and building the pier was $1,633.50. The cost of the superstructure will be $3,250. Vessels drawing less than seven feet water can now pass into the upper dock, and thereby afford more room for larger vessels in the lower dock.

A handsome iron bridge, just above the Danville depot, and a substantial stone arch in the line of 13th street, have been constructed over the tide water canal by Messrs. Haxall, Crenshaw & Co. They propose the additional improvement of a stone wall on the southern margin of the canal, between the two bridges. These structures add very much to the general good appearance of the canal and of that part of the city.

Bosher's Dam is very nearly completed. About 815 feet in length of the dam is finished. There remain now to be built up, only the five sluices which were left for the passage of the water during the construction of the dam. High water may prevent this being done this year, but every exertion will be made to bring the whole to a close by the first of next January. The total cost of this dam, so far, has been about $51,000. The estimated cost of completion is $10,000.

Joshua Falls Dam remains, I regret to say, very nearly in the same condition as it was this time last year. For the want of the adequate means, the contractor did not resume work on this dam before August last. He commenced then with a small force, and will probably build the southern section of the dam—which is about 200 feet in length—up to ordinary low water, and can finish this part of the dam in the early part of next summer. The same contractor also entered into a contract to rebuild the northern section of the dam, but from some misapprehension in regard to the terms of the contract, he has declined its execution. The company must therefore take some other steps to insure the speedy completion of this dam; and I would recommend that they employ a competent force and have the work done under the superintendence of Mr. Grant. Every exertion should be made to have it completed next year.

A contract has been entered into with Mr. Charles Scott, to construct a new dam across the north arm of the river at Lynchburg, which will be an extension of the water-works dam to the northern shore. The work has been commenced, and the contract requires that it shall be completed by the first day of January 1862. This dam is intended to supersede the embankment on Daniel's Island and the three small dams connecting Daniel's, Jones' and Pettyjohns' Islands with the northern shore of the river.

After the disastrous freshet of 1857, the board became painfully alive to the great insecurity of the guard bank on Daniel's Island. It has suffered two tremendous breaches from the freshets of 1847 and 1857, which were repaired at an expense of about $15,000, and involved the company in the loss of a much greater amount from the suspension of navigation, besides causing great inconvenience and loss to the citizens of Lynchburg, from the cutting off the supply of water for domestic and manufacturing uses. The policy of building a continuous dam across the river was then strongly recommended to the board, as a substitute for the plan that had been adopted for the raising of the Lynchburg level; but the board, while they conceded the importance and superiority of the plan of a continuous dam, decided to adhere to their original plan of raising the old dams and the guard bank, as it was much the cheaper, and better adapted to the then crippled state of the company's affairs. The original plan had been executed only so far as to raise the three small dams—the waterworks dam and the guard bank being yet untouched—when the company was relieved from its pressing embarrassments; and the board then decided to abandon the first plan, and carry out the more desirable and permanent one, of a continuous dam across the river.

When we consider the magnitude of the interests, both of the company and of the city, which are involved in the stability of the works at Lynchburg, it must be conceded that the board have acted wisely in thus placing them in a state of the utmost security and permanency.

The North River improvement is completed, with the exception of about half a mile of tow-path above dam No. 1, and the walling around the basin at Lexington, which will be completed by the end of the year.

The total amount of money which has been expended by the James River and Kanawha Company for the execution of work on the North River improvement, thus far, is $80,716. The estimated cost of completing the work, including the cost of basin and gauge dock, is $10,000.

The reports of the superintendents of repairs will show the present condition of the canal and the repairs that have been made during the year.

The present condition of the canal is better than it was during the previous year, though it is still far from being in a perfect state of repair.

The bars in the ponds, especially the one in the Judith pond, continue to be serious obstacles to the perfect navigation of the canal.

The steam dredging machine which was purchased for the removal of those bars, unfortunately proved to be too large to pass through some of the locks. It was ordered to be fourteen feet wide, which was thought to be narrow enough, and was made according to order; but being square on the sides, and drawing more water than was supposed, it hung in the curves of the old locks below the water line, and could not be made to pass through them without the great delay and inconvenience of unloading at each of those locks. Being thus incapacitated for the uses for which it was intended, it was thought best to work it as the tail of the ship lock and in the dock, where it can be economically and permanently employed. But as the necessity still exists for employing one of these machines on the second division, I recommend that another one be ordered of rather lighter construction and different shape in the hull. The one now in use works well, and I am satisfied of the economy and necessity of working these machines at various points on the line.

In view of the probability (I may say certainty) of the speedy extension of the canal above Buchanan, whether under the present or a different organization, it is my duty to call your attention to the fact, that although the third division has been definitely located and surveyed for condemnation, yet such a long time has elapsed since the field work was done, that the most of the stakes have been removed and the land marks obliterated; and it will be necessary, before the work can be offered for contract and the land damages assessed, that the location shall be retraced and the land marks restored; and for that purpose a corps of engineers should be placed in the field at least sixty days before the contemplated letting of the work. I bring this matter to your notice, that you may take such steps as you may think proper, in order to prevent any unnecessary delay in the prosecution of the work.

Respectfully submitted,

E. LORRAINE,

Chief Engineer.

No. 4.

Richmond, October 1st, 1860.

Sir:

I respectfully refer you to the following report, for the necessary information relative to the repairs made under my supervision, on the dock, the five locks, and on the first division of the canal, during the last fiscal year, together with such other information in connection with the improvement as may be worth communicating:

The line was favored by the elements during the year; there were no breaches, and no bad leaks to interfere with the running of boats; and there was no interruption by high water or by low water, except on the 4th level of the canal, where boats were sometimes detained when the water was low in Bosher's pond. The canal was frozen over and navigation suspended from the first to the thirteenth of January, and again on the third, fourth and fifth days of February.

The navigation was suspended in part from the first to the fifteenth of July, to make repairs to certain works of art, which could not be done with the line open to trade. Such a course has been pursued at the same period every summer, commencing in 1850, because there is less trade and travel then than at any other season, except in January, when the weather is unsuitable, and the forces generally not organized in time.

The number of master mechanics and overseers allowed by the board of directors, less one, were retained in service. But in consequence of the wages of the white labor, and the hires of the slaves not having been paid when due, there was considerable difficulty experienced in keeping up an organization on the line. The masons, quarrymen, blacksmith, and one carpenter (all under the charge of the master mason) quit work on the first of November, and did not resume their places again until the middle of April. Some of the other carpenters also quit from time to time. The force of slave labor, authorized to be hired on the first of January, was not secured in full, and, in fact, the complement of hands for each of the old squads were not all hired until within the last few weeks.

One small additional squad under the charge of a foreman mason, was organized between the middle of April and the last of August. Another additional squad, authorized to be made up, was not attempted, in consequence of the difficulty of procuring labor. With these difficulties to contend with in the hiring of hands, it will be perceived that I can only report an average of the labor worked; which I will endeavor to make approximate as near as possible to what is right.

The force consisted of 1 master mason, 2 master carpenters, 4 overseers, 1 supply agent, 3 stone masons, 13 carpenters, 8 quarrymen, 3 blacksmiths, 8 boatmen, 8 cooks and 38 common laborers, making a total of 89—of whom 18 were white men, 1 a free man of color, and 70 slaves hired by the year.

The force, under the head of masonry, quarried and shipped to different points on the line about five hundred cubic yards of granite; built three new bridge abutments; built new sustaining walls to locks Nos. 21 and 29, and repaired the masonry behind the chambers of those and other composite locks. They have, besides, cut stone for new sustaining walls at lock No. 32, and for two new bridge abutments.

The carpenters built 4 new capstans at the ship lock for opening the gates, and made some repairs about the lock and dock. They put up new superstructures at the bridges over the Tide water connection, on 10th, 11th and 12th streets, and repaired the lock gates and foot bridges on the said connection. They put up a new superstructure at the bridge on 7th street in this city; framed and put in 38 lock gates; constructed 1 new dredge boat and 3 lighters; put new superstructures at 3 tow-path bridges; framed 2 new kitchens; put in new wood work entire in the outlet lock leading to Reins' Island; put on new cap sills, and made other necessary repairs to the chambers and upper wings of 14 other composite locks; made repairs to 21 old lock gates, and 11 farm bridges; repaired 3 lock houses, 2 rock boats, 4 house boats, 7 lighters; put in trunks and apertures for supplying water power at 2 mills, and made repairs to Seven Island and Joshua Falls Dams.

The four squads of common labor were employed in assisting the mechanics on the repairs of the locks, opening ditches, clearing the vegetable growth from the banks. All the rest of the time they could be spared from other necessary work, they were employed dredging the mud from the bottom of the canal, using it for raising and dressing the face of the tow-path, it having proved to be the very best material that can be used for such a purpose. It combines as much sand as is necessary to make a dry and solid track for teams, and is at the same time much less liable to abrasions, when put on the face of the banks, than any other material.

The supplying of rations, oil, provender, etc., on company account, by the use of its own boat, under charge of its own agent, was carried on very satisfactorily, and on much better terms than it could have been done by contract—the average cost of the rations, all expenses included, being $1 each, and the oil 75 cents per gallon.

Respectfully submitted,

E. L. CHINN,

Supt. of Repairs.

No. 5.

Holcomb's Rock, October 5, 1860.

Sir:

The fiscal year having closed, I again lay before you my report of the condition of that portion of your improvement under my supervision, the operations of the force, and such other information that I deem of any interest to be reported.

The condition of the canal at the present time is perhaps as good as it has been at any time heretofore since its construction, especially when taken as a whole. The embankments in many places have been strengthened and riprapped; all the stone dams have been filled in behind with stone; a large number of new lock gates have been constructed and put in during the year; and but for the sand bars, which have been accumulating at the mouths of streams emptying into the different pools ever since the dams were built, I should be enabled to say that the second division was in much better condition than it ever has been heretofore. No breach having occurred on this division during the year, shows conclusively that the banks are becoming more and more permanent every year.

There has been no cessation to the navigation during the year between Lynchburg and Buchanan, except a few days in January, occasioned by ice. There was fifteen days' suspension between Lynchburg and the combined locks at the head of Joshua Falls Pond, occasioned by drawing off the Lynchburg level to do necessary repairs about the water works guard lock. In the month of July there were some obstructions to the navigation on the second division, and also on the North River Canal. On the second division, it was caused by extreme low water in the river, and by the leaky condition of the Blue Ridge Dam, which rendered the water too shallow at the sand bars to pass boats fully laden. This, however, was but of short duration, as the depth of water was increased as soon as our machines could do it.

On the North River Canal, the leaky condition of several of the dams, and especially the one near Edmundson's mills, was cause of some interruption to the navigation. The back of this dam was badly sheeted, and has been in a leaky condition ever since its construction.

It became necessary to draw the water off of this dam, put in new draw gates, and new sheeting, where necessary, and gravel behind the dam. This occupied about ten days; after which there was no obstruction to the navigation. The only breach which occurred during the year was on the North River Canal, which happened on the 4th of December last, near Wm. W. Major's mill. It was mended in six days, by the assistance of two squads of hands, from the second division, and caused a suspension of the navigation for three days.

Owing to the embarrassed condition of the company on the 1st of January, I was unable to procure the number of hands authorized to be hired for this division and the North River improvement. Instead of 54 hands, authorized to be hired, I could only procure 44 by the 1st of March. Three others have been hired since, one on the 1st of June, and two others from the 1st and 12th of September to the end of the year. This force was lessened by two deaths. One was a man belonging to George H. Damron as guardian, who died March 22d, with typhoid fever. The other was a man named Jonas, belonging to Robert Ridgeway, Sr., who was accidentally drowned at lock No. 18, on the 19th of May—leaving the force to consist, on 19th of May, of 4 black and 4 white carpenters, 2 smiths, and 36 common laborers. Four of these laborers were consigned to the North River improvement, and the remainder distributed to the best advantage on the second division.

The carpenters' force on the second division, were 4 black and 3 white carpenters, a cook and a boy. This force did the following work for the quarter ending 31st of December, 1859, viz: Built new windlass frame at head of Joshua Falls Pond; put on new balance beam at combined locks; put in new wicket, at lock No. 47; put new roadway beams under Sackett's Bridge; put in new head gates at lock No. 7; new tail gates at guard lock No. 2; new tail gates at lock No. 8; new tail gates at lock No. 9; made and put in trunk on North River Canal, to supply Messrs. Jordan, Winn & Co. with water power; built 3 new change bridges across lock; made new railroad to draw out boats; made on new skiff, 24 new wheelbarrows, and repaired 20 old ones, put necessary lining on lock gates, and repaired bridges, from the head of Joshua Falls Pond to Wasp Rock Dam, and put in a new rack at the cement mills.

They did the following work during the quarter ending 31st of March, 1860, viz: Pulled out and repaired house boat No. 3; repaired 2 mud flats; pulled out and repaired one mud machine: built one new flat for mud machine; made 30 wheelbarrows, and repaired 25 old ones; made and put in three trunks on the Lynchburg level, to furnish water power to A. G. Dabney, Messrs. Langhorn & Morris, and George S. Duiguid; spliced one heel post at lock No. 51; made a full set of lock gates for lock No. 3, and head gates for lock No. 4, on the North River Canal, and pulled out and repaired house boat for Thomas Oney. The charges for timber, iron and labor furnished from second division, on account of construction North River Canal, amount to $1,229.

They did the following work during the quarter ending 30th June, viz: Pulled out and repaired boat Waterwitch; put in new head gates at guard lock at Pedlar Dam; put new head gates in guard lock at Judith's Dam; new head gates in guard lock at water works dam; put in a crib below the abutment of Dolan's Dam, 50 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 7 feet high; a crib at the north end of said dam, 19 feet long, 8 feet wide, and 6 feet high; built 57 panels of fencing around garden lot at lock No. 21; built new waste gates at Weir River lock No. 5; made a screw pump 16 feet long, and 16 inches in diameter; made 30 wheelbarrows, painted carpenters' house boat, and repaired several horse carts.

They did the following work during the quarter ending 30th September, viz: Built about 300 feet in length of coffer dams above and below the water works guard lock, for the purpose of putting in foundation of sustaining wall, which was undermined, and had given way; put in a timber foundation below the feeder at Lynchburg, 50 feet long, by 35 feet wide, and planked over the same; spliced heel post at lock No. 48; made and put in tank at lock No. 3, for Robert G. Scott to take water from the canal; repaired 4 flat boats; built a farm bridge on Tyree's farm; repaired Beaver Creek Aqueduct; repaired one mud machine; built a crib across the mouth of Reed Creek, 50 feet long, 10 feet wide and 6 feet high; put in head gates at lock No. 49, tail gates at lock No. 10, and head gates at lock No. 3; put in head gates at guard lock at Big Island Dam, and head gates in guard lock at Coleman's Falls Dam.

The force of common laborers was organized as heretofore, into three squads, each with 10 men and an overseer. This force, when not engaged in dredging the canal and attending to the ordinary repairs, have been engaged in raising the towing path and protecting it with riprap at such points along the line as most needed it.

About the 1st July it became necessary to concentrate the whole force at the water works dam, in order to take down and rebuild speedily one of the retaining walls of the feeder at Lynchburg. The wall on the south side of the guard lock had been undermined by the action of the water passing through the wicket next to the wall, and was likely to fall down and cause great injury to the guard lock. This was a very expensive piece of work to the company, on account of the great amount of coffer damming necessary to be built before the masonry could be commenced. The pumping was also a very expensive item in this job, as it had to be kept up night and day, in order to enable the foreman mason to found the wall on solid rock. This was effected 8 feet below the foundation of the guard lock, which rests upon timbers. This work was done in a substantial manner by the foreman mason, Philip Powers. An apron was extended 50 feet below the gates of the feeder; which will prevent any further undermining of the sustaining wall which gave way.

North River Improvement

The force employed to keep this improvement in repair, was one foreman carpenter (who acted in the capacity of overseer), one carpenter employed constantly, two white men employed a part of the year as rough carpenters or laborers, as the exigency of the work required, and four negro laborers. I am gratified to have it in my power to say that this force, though small, has, under the energetic supervision of the foreman carpenter, kept this improvement in good condition, and performed a large amount of work properly chargeable to construction account, as the following exhibit will show:

During the first quarter, ending 31st December, 1859, they did the following work, viz: Built lock house at lock No. 13; straightened canal bank at lock No. 12; mended the breach at Major's Mill, with assistance of two squads from second division; boated stone, and riprapped banks at same breach; cut and hewed the timber for bridge at William W. Major's Mill; and built a kitchen at lock house No. 10.

During the second quarter, ending 31st March, rebuilt flat for William W. Major, which had been damaged by breach in canal; built the bridge across canal at Major's Mill, 125 feet long (dispensing with abutments); made 8 wheelbarrows; pumped out water at lock No. 4, and put in a full set of lock gates, two hollow quoins six feet long, of heart pine, and framed and put up bridge No. 3.

During the third quarter, ending 30th June, cut and hewed the timber in the woods for the lock gates of locks Nos. 14 and 16; framed one pair of same, and put bridge across lock No. 4; hand railed bridge at John W. Hamilton's; put in lock gates at lock No. 3; widened the tow-path on pond No. 3, and built new foot bridge over the canal at Mrs. Miller's.

During the fourth quarter, ending 30th September, they did the following work, viz: Drew off the water at dam No. 9, and cleaned out lock No. 16; graveled, in part, dams Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10; put in two new gates at lock No. 14; two new gates at lock No. 16; made four new draw gates, and did other repairs to dam No. 6; made two new gates for waste weir at Edmundson's mill; cut and hewed stringers for four farm bridges on the land of Wm. W. Major; built road bridge over the canal at Edmundson's mill; framed lock gates at lock No. 1 (Reid's Dam); blasted off ledge of rock above lock No. 6, to give better entrance to the lock; besides which they did many other repairs, such as ditching, graveling the banks, etc.

The work necessary to be done on this improvement during the next fiscal year will be as follows, viz: Two lock houses to be built—one at lock No. 3, and the other at lock No. 11; lock gardens to enclose at locks Nos. 3, 8, 10, 13, 16 and 19; a carpenter's shop, lumber shed and stable to be built at lock No. 10; some lock gates perhaps to be put in; tow-path to be made around pond No. 5; five farm and road bridges to be replaced; two ferry flats to be built—besides the necessary repairs to the following works of art, viz: 10 dams across North River, 23 locks, 12 lock houses, 12 farm and road bridges, 10 change bridges, 5 aqueducts and 4 ferries to be kept up.

The work which will be necessary and indispensable to be done on the second division, as far as I can now ascertain, is as follows, viz: About 24 new sets of lock gates to put in; 3 or 4 farm and road bridges to be constructed anew; a large lumber shed to be erected for the preservation of timber at Pedlar dam; a toll house and a shed over the gauge dock at Lynchburg; a substantial waste weir of masonry, 100 feet in length, on the Lynchburg level, for the escape of the surface water on this level when the machinery is not in motion—together with the usual repairs to be kept up, consisting in part of the following important works of art, viz: 15 dams, including three wooden dams between the islands above Lynchburg, 43 locks, 42 lock and toll houses, 3 aqueducts, 10 road and farm bridges, 15 tow-paths and 24 change bridges over locks, 2 rope ferries to keep up—besides a large number of culverts, waste weirs and over-drains—all of which occasionally need some repairs.

The laboring force (to place it on the most economic footing) should be adequate to keep the canal in good navigable condition, and do such extra work where it is needed to place the canal, if possible, beyond the contingency of being seriously damaged by high tides in the river. I would therefore recommend to the company that the laboring force on this division should consist of at least 3 squads, and each squad to consist of 13 men and an overseer—two of the squads to have as at present, each a common dredging machine—and the other to have charge of a steam dredger. This force, with the present force of carpenters—augmented if exigencies require it—can, I think, if worked properly, keep the canal in good navigable condition, and also protect every point on the canal where there is any likelihood of the banks being damaged by a high tide.

I recommend that the laboring force on the North River improvement for the next fiscal year, be increased to 9 laborers and 1 cook, and that the carpenters' force remain the same as at present constituted.

Raising the Lynchburg Level

Nothing has been done to this work since my last annual report, with the exception of the raising of the tow-path to its required height, between Sacket's Bridge and the Blackwater Aqueduct.

The feeder canal was brought into use, by the action of the common council of Lynchburg, about the 1st of July, and answers well the purpose for which it was intended.

As your law agent, I have nothing to report adverse to the interest of the company. I trust that the action taken by the board, at their late meeting in Lynchburg, in reference to the suits pending in the courts of Amherst and Nelson, may lead to their speedy and satisfactory termination.

Though I have not all the data to estimate the liabilities incurred on account of expenses and repairs for this division during the last fiscal year, yet I have enough, I think, to warrant me in saying that they will not exceed per mile those of the previous year.

All which is respectfully submitted by

Your obedient servant,

JAMES M. HARRIS,

Sup. Rep. 2d Div & N. R. Improvement.

JAMES RIVER AND KANAWHA COMPANY

No. 16

Lewisburg, Sept. 27, 1860.

Sir:

I comply with the regulations of your company, by submitting to you a report of receipts, disbursements and condition of the Kanawha road and bridges for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1860.

Receipts.

Balance on hand, as per last annual report	942.12
Received from the turnpike gates	5,537.09
Received from Gauley Bridge	1,085.98
Received from Greenbrier Bridge	2,045.41
Received for two yoke of oxen	150.00
	9,760.60

Disbursements.

Road account	$6,607.63
Bridge account	1,375.88
Agency	883.32
		$8,866.83
Leaving in agent's hands unexpended, a balance of		$893.77

Operations.

By reference to my report of 1859, you will note that the road in the Alleghany and Sewell region received great damage by the equinoctial gales that raged with much violence a few days previous to the date of my report. As indicated in that report, I proceeded to have the damages repaired without delay. The operations for the present season have been arduous and expensive on the entire road, and particularly so on the mountainous and hilly sections of the road, increased more than twofold by the frequent and washing rains that occurred in the months of July and August—indeed, no inconsiderable portion of our road on the mountains and hills as often as three different times. Nearly the whole is at this time in good repair, and the whole will be in a few days more. Its condition is such, I think, that that portion of the road approximating to a level will require but little work next year, compared to the amount we have done this. The mountains and hilly portions may, if we have as many and as violent storms as we have had this year, require as much work upon them.

Bridges.

The bridge carried away in Little Sewell Valley was replaced with entire new timbers, except the flooring, which lodging a short distance below the site of the old bridge, was hauled back and put on the new under work. The other bridge also in Little Sewell Valley was rebuilt in the spring, except the flooring. All of the bridges in the Gauley range east of Gauley Bridge have been generally repaired and newly floored this year. The abutments of the bridge over Witcher's Creek were considerably damaged by refluent water from the Kanawha River in the fall of 1859. The damages were repaired as quickly as masons and laborers could be obtained. A new floor has been put on this bridge. The bridge at the Burning Spring had settled very much on the lower side, so much so as to cause complaint. I have had it righted up, and additional braces added thereto. This bridge, as also the bridge nearest Charleston, I have had newly floored during the summer. The upper bridge over Mud River is now being refloored and repaired. The lower bridge over the same stream will be reshingled this fall. The Greenbrier Bridge is yet only partially reshingled, I regret to inform you, owing to the failure of the contractor to get the shingles in compliance with his contract. I have contracted for the deficit with a new contractor; and if he complies with his contract, the whole bridge will be reshingled in November. The bridges generally are in much better condition than they were at this time last year.

Another year of extensive repairs will put the whole of them in such condition as to require but little to be done to them for several years thereafter—accidents by flood and fire excepted.

Respectfully submitted by

Your most ob't servant,

A. MICHAELS,

Agent W. I.

Col. Thomas H. Ellis, Pres. J. R. and K. Co.

WM. P. MUNFORD, Secretary.

Office of the James River and Kanawha Company, Richmond, October 1, 1860.

No. 19.

Richmond, Va., Sept. 14, 1860.

Dear Sir:

I have read, and carefully considered the contract and accompanying papers, relating to the James River and Kanawha Canal Company, which were submitted to me, by you, on Friday evening last.

The only provision in the contract, to which I object, is contained in the eighth section, which authorizes "the tolls on way trade" to "be increased one-third" beyond the rates that are imposed upon the through trade. This is a discrimination against our own citizens, in favor of citizens of other states, that is in my judgment unjust. I can see no reason for the imposition of heavier tolls upon way trade than are levied upon through trade.

The subject is, in the highest degree, important to the people of Virginia, and deserves the serious consideration of the legislature. I have determined, therefore, to comply with the request contained in the second resolution adopted at the late meeting of the stockholders, and will "convene the general assembly in extra session, for the purpose of considering the agreement which has been approved" by them.

The fourteenth day of January next will be the day on which the general assembly will convene.

I am, truly,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN LETCHER.

Thomas H. Ellis, Esq., Pres. J. R. and K. Co.

No. 20.

(The report of the Kanawha board and the documents accompanying it were received at the office of the company, through the hands of George W. Randolph, Esq., on the 29th October.)

Gentlemen:

I have the honor to submit, on behalf of the Kanawha board, the following report for your consideration:

The position of the Kanawha board, at the date of its last annual report, is familiar to you all. The Eastern board had sought, by the exercise of arbitrary power, to terminate the existence of the Kanawha board; had passed a resolution declaring it functus officio; had appointed a commissioner to take charge of its books and papers, and directed the collectors on the Kanawha River to disregard its authority, and to enter into new bargains, and make their reports direct to the office in Richmond. Against this action the Kanawha board appealed to the stockholders, and suggested in their report that an application be made to the next general assembly of Virginia, so to amend the act of the 15th February, 1858, as to define more accurately the rights, powers and duties of the boards with reference to the Kanawha improvement. The course of the Kanawha board was sustained by the stockholders in general meeting assembled, in October, 1859, and at the ensuing session of the legislature, an act was passed on the 23d of March, 1860, entitled an act to amend the charter of the James River and Kanawha Company and placing under the exclusive control of the Kanawha board of directors three hundred thousand dollars of the six per cent. registered stock of the commonwealth, to be used by them for the improvement of the navigation of the Kanawha River, from the mouth thereof to Loup Creek Shoals; and the Kanawha board was authorized and directed to prosecute said improvement, and was invested with the entire control and management of the same, "free from the control or direction of the president and directors of said James River and Kanawha Company, and which is known as the Eastern board." It is worthy of remark, that the president of the company, in submitting this act to the stockholders for their acceptance, deemed it his duty to protest against the terms of the provision made for the improvement of the Kanawha river.

The act passed March 23, 1860, was accepted by the stockholders of the company, at a called meeting held the 25th day of April, 1860; at the same time the president of the company was instructed by them to execute a deed of trust or mortgage upon the works, property and net revenue of the Kanawha line of improvements from the mouth of the Kanawha river to Loup Creek Shoals, to the commonwealth, for the payment of three hundred thousand dollars of six per cent. registered stock of the commonwealth, which by the act was directed to be issued and placed under the control of the Kanawha board, for the improvement of the Kanawha River.

Although no official notice of these proceedings had been communicated to the board, yet as the board had seen in the public papers that the amendatory act referred to had been accepted by the stockholders, and the president of the company instructed to execute the deed of trust required on the Kanawha line of improvement, it felt authorized to receive such propositions for the improvement of the river as might be submitted to its consideration.

At a meeting of the board held on the 14th day of May, 1860, two proposals to do the work were laid before the board —one by Mr. A. E. Cromwell, and the other by Messrs. Theodore D. Barton and Orville Robinson. The proposition of Messrs. Barton & Robinson being the lowest in amount, and most satisfactory in other respects, was accepted by the board; and on the 15th day of May, 1860, a contract was made and signed with those parties—a copy of which has been already furnished to the president of the company, who will no doubt submit it to your consideration.

At the same meeting, the board elected John A. Byers, Esq., engineer of the improvement at a salary of $2,500 per annum, and authorized him to employ, when necessary, two assistant engineers—the first, at a salary of $1,000 per annum; the second, at a salary of $750 per annum; their salaries to commence from the date of their respective appointments, and to be paid at that rate for the time they are employed. Under the authority given him by the board, the engineer engaged the services of Wm. P. Douthat and James R. Houston as his assistants, each of whom had assisted in the preliminary survey of the river under the direction of Edward Lorraine, Esq., chief engineer of the James River and Kanawha Company, and was familiar with the surveys and levels throughout the line of the improvement. Each of the assistants has had three persons to help him in laying out the channel, and attending to the construction of the work—and occasionally, when current was unusually strong, it has been found necessary to employ an extra hand. The board directed the contractors to provide, as soon as practicable, four dredge boats, with the necessary dump and surface boats to tend them, and to commence to work at Elk Shoals with the two first completed, and which were to be built at the mouth of Elk River; and with the others, as soon as they could be ready, at the foot of Loup Creek Shoals, in the neighborhood of which they were to be built. This arrangement was adopted to save the expense, trouble and delay of towing the dredge boats, which are large and unwieldy, up the river.

In accordance with this arrangement, when the surveys at Elk Shoals were about completed and the channel marked out, the engineer corps was divided. Mr. Douthat with his party was directed to commence the work at the foot of Loup Creek Shoals and proceed down the river, while Mr. Houston and his party prosecuted it from Elk Shoals downwards. House boats were provided for each party, to enable the men to be at all times convenient to their work, and to have the entire control of their time. These boats were purchased by the Kanawha board, but the furniture and supplies are, and will be, provided by the several parties at their own expense. Mr. Douthat commenced the work on Elk Shoals on the first of June, 1860, and up to the close of the fiscal year had, in addition to the work done by him there, surveyed and laid out the channels from the foot of Loup Creek Shoals to the foot of Hunter's Shoals, comprising seven shoals and riffles, having an aggregate fall of 17½ feet in a distance of 6 2/5 miles, and requiring about 50,000 cubic yards of excavation; and Mr. Houston, who commenced work on the 15th June, 1860, had, up to the same period, prepared the work for the contractors from the head of Elk Shoals to the foot of Tyler Shoals, comprising four principal shoals with a fall of 12.64 feet in a distance of 4½ miles, and requiring about 47,000 cubic yards of excavation. It is proper to remark, that the frequent occurrence of freshets in the river during all the past summer, has interfered very much with the progress of the surveyors; and in addition to this, a greater proportion of the time of the engineers than was anticipated has been taken up in attending to the work of construction, in consequence of their being required to renew, almost daily, stakes, floats, levels and other work by which the line of the channel had to be designated.

It was not deemed expedient to disband the parties under the control of the engineers, whenever a rise would occur in the river, which stopped them from a survey of the channel, because of the delay of getting them together again and the unwillingness of the men to engage unless they had some assurance of permanent employment. The engineer was therefore directed to employ them during those intervals in surveying the various tributaries of the Kanawha, and in collecting information in relation thereto, with the view of preparing a complete and accurate map of the river, embracing the whole line of the improvement.

At the time the contract was made with Messrs. Barton & Robinson, the Kanawha board had already procured the machinery for one dredge boat, and had the wood work for the same, and for the tenders thereto, in process of construction. These boats were turned over to the contractors at cost, they agreeing to repay what the board had already expended for them, and to meet the deferred payments on them as they fell due.

The contractors commenced work on Elk shoals, on the 20th of June, 1860, with the dredge boat, the machinery for which had been procured and transferred to them by the Kanawha board; and of the three additional dredges which the contractors were required to furnish, two of them were to be at work by the middle of July, and the third by the first of August. But owing to the failure of the machinists to deliver the machinery in time, and other unexpected delays, it was the first week in September before a second dredge boat was at work, and as late as the first day of October before the remaining two were put into operation.

On the first day of October the shoal near the foot of Loup creek was about completed. At Elk Shoal there was 900 cubic yards of excavation and about $5,000 worth of rock and timber work remaining to be done. The bar above the mouth of Two Mile Creek, called "Young Two Mile," containing about 1,200 cubic yards, was completed, and about 700 cubic yards of excavation removed at Two Mile Shoal. The work done, and the materials and machinery furnished by the contractors, up to the close of the fiscal year, amount to the sum of $21,660.

By the terms of the contract, the contractors are bound to complete the work within fifteen months from its date. But in consequence of the delays referred to, and the interruptions which may be reasonably expected from ice and high water during the coming winter and spring, it is the opinion of the engineer that it will probably not be completed before the first of March, 1862. Although the work at Elk Shoal, which is upwards of 1,800 feet in length, is not entirely finished, enough has been done to enable boats to navigate the new channel with safety; and when the remaining work is done, it is thought that it will meet all the requirements of the trade.

In addition to the work done by the contractors upon the river, a competent force under Capt. Johnson, was employed to set the buoys, repair damages caused by ice and high water, and to remove such obstructions as had been carried into the chutes and channels during the past winter and spring. This party set 235 buoys, put in ring bolts, and removed all temporary obstructions from the chutes and channels, at a cost, including tools and materials for the work and supplies for the hands, of $335.34.

A copy of the report of Wm. J. Rand, collector of tolls at Charleston, is herewith submitted, which returns the gross amount of tolls accounted for by him during the fiscal year, at $8,092.20. This shows a falling off from the gross amount of the last year, which is to be accounted for by the fact that there has been an entire suspension of the shipment of coal and a partial suspension of the shipment of salt, until Elk Chute is complete.

In explanation of the list of delinquents reported, it is proper to say that the item of $1,146.17 was permitted to accumulate, because the parties claimed damages of the board for salt lost upon an obstruction in the channel. The matter has been recently compromised and adjusted. The other accounts, with perhaps one exception, he expects to close up during the present month. The attachment law passed last winter has been of material service in the collection of tolls; but even with its aid, some delay seems to be unavoidable. See paper marked (R).

Previous to the first of January last the compensation of Mr. Rand had been a fixed salary of $1,000 per annum; but at the December meeting, 1859, the board changed the terms of his compensation, and fixed them as follows: "Two per cent. on all tolls collected, until the compensation amounts to $600; five per cent. on all over, until the compensation amounts to $200 more; and ten per cent. on all collections beyond these." This change took effect from the first of January,

The gross amount of tolls collected by W. W. Sherwood, collector at Point Pleasant, during the fiscal year ending the 30th September, 1860, was	$1,825.30
Deduct compensation as heretofore paid by the board	494.05
Leaves the net amount received	$1,331.25

In accordance with the provisions of the act of March 23, 1860, and by the orders of the board, five several drafts for $20,000 each of the six per cent. registered stock of the commonwealth, have been drawn by the president pro tem. of this board, upon the board of public works. These drafts were drawn monthly, in the months of May, June, July, August and September, and each draft was accompanied by a copy of the resolution passed by the board of public works, and the certificates of stock ($40,000 in amount) received and deposited in the Bank of Virginia at Charleston, Kanawha.

The financial statement of the secretary is herewith submitted to your inspection, showing the amount of registered stock and moneys received and disbursed by the board during the fiscal year ending the 30th day of September, 1860.

A synopsis shows there has been received in registered stock $40,000.00

Disbursed in stock 20,000.00

Balance on hand in registered stock $20,000.00

See statement (A).

Received in money from tolls—in suit, etc	$	373.53
Received in money from current tolls		9,206.25
		$9,579.78
Disbursed in money		9,398.94
Balance on hand in money	$	180.84

See statement (B).

The president of the company, in a letter addressed to the president pro tem. of this board, dated the 14th day of May, 1860, which was accompanied by a manuscript report of the proceedings of the stockholders at their meetings on the 25th and 26th of April, 1860, called attention to sections 58 and 59 of the act of the 30th March, 1860, entitled an act for the assessment of taxes on persons and property. The communication of the president and the sections of the law referred to, were submitted to the board for its consideration, and after mature deliberation, and consultation with counsel, the board decided that the sections did not, in its opinion, apply to the Kanawha board.

In the month of September, at the instance of the president of the company, this matter was again brought to the notice of the board, when the board acting by the advice of its counsel, the Hon. G. W. Summers, furnished the statement and remitted the amount of tax imposed, accompanied by a protest, to the president of the company, to be used as in his discretion he might deem right. A copy of the opinion of the counsel of the board upon this legal question will be furnished as soon as it can be procured.

A "project of an executory agreement" for the sale of the entire line from Richmond to the Ohio river, to a French company, yet to be formed, together with the remarks of the president of the company and the proceedings of the stockholders in relation thereto, have been communicated to the president pro tem. and laid before the Kanawha board.

As to so much of this extraordinary agreement as embraces that portion of the line extending from Richmond to the Kanawha river, it is perhaps unnecessary for the Kanawha board to express any opinion. The Kanawha board was not consulted in regard to this agreement, and will not be entitled to share any part of the credit or discredit which may hereafter attach to it.

But against that part of the scheme which proposes to sell out the Kanawha river, it is the imperative duty of the Kanawha board to protest, respectfully but earnestly, against such sale to the French or Dutch, or any other adventurous purchaser, whether foreign or domestic. Especially does it protest against a scheme, the provisions of which if it is carried out are calculated to delay the improvement of the Kanawha river, to paralyze the industry of the country by prohibitory tolls, and to retard the development of the valley. And it appeals to the stockholders to reconsider their action and to retrace their steps in regard to the Kanawha river.

At present, so far as is known to the Kanawha board, the Frenchmen concerned in this scheme own no lands within the limits of Virginia,—but the legislature confirm to them this contract, and it will subject in a great degree the mineral wealth of the entire Kanawha valley to their control.

At its last session the legislature passed a law making provision for the improvement of the Kanawha River, and authorizing the Kanawha board to put the work under contract. That contract has been made, signed and sealed, and the improvement is steadily and successfully progressing. Under these circumstances the Kanawha board appeals to the stockholders and to the legislature not to sell out the improvement, but to permit it to be completed.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES L. CARR,
Pres. pro tem. of the Kanawha Board.

ALEX. T. LAIDLEY, Sec.

Opinion of Judge Summers on the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth sections of the Tax Law of 1860.

SIR:

In reply to your enquiries, I am of opinion that the 58th and 59th sections of the act passed on the 30th of March, 1860, entitled an act for the assessment of taxes on persons and property, have no relation whatever to the improvement on the Kanawha River. Those sections embrace only railroad and canal companies engaged in the transportation of freight and passengers. The works and improvements of the James river and Kanawha company are of a mixed character. That corporation owns a canal, a turnpike road, and an open river navigation upon the Kanawha. So far as it is the proprietor of a canal, it is to be governed by the provisions prescribed for canal companies. So far as the Kanawha river is concerned, the corporation is not a canal company any more than it is a railroad company, because the owner of a turnpike. The duties, authority and liabilities of the company in each instance are to be ascertained by looking to the nature of the several distinct improvements constituting its line. The company, among other things, was charged with improving the navigation of the Kanawha river for the common use of all, with authority to demand a prescribed toll in compensation for that use. It was also required to construct and keep in repair a turnpike road from Covington to Big Sandy for the public travel, with right to take tolls for its use. The company is no more a transportation company in the one case than in the other.

Canal and railroad companies are required by the 58th section to report to the auditor, quarterly, "the number of passengers transported," and the "gross amount of freight received by such company for transportation of freight over such road or canal." By the 59th section, such company is required to pay into the treasury, at the time of making its report, "for every passenger transported, a tax at the rate of one mill for every mile of transportation of each of such passengers, and of one-half of one per cent. for such gross amount received for the transportation of freight."

Now, upon the Kanawha river the company never has charged toll for passengers, nor has it ever received, or been authorized to receive, anything for the transportation of either freight or passengers. It has no means of furnishing the number of passengers. It is not engaged in carrying freight or passengers on this part of the line, but is merely the proprietor of certain improvements on a stream open to the navigation of the public, and for the use of which improvements it is authorized to take compensation in the form of toll, as upon a public highway. The company own no boats or vessels for transportation, and never did. The river is wholly navigated by others, owning their own boats and doing the entire carrying trade.

The sections referred to do not impose a tax upon tolls, but upon the amount received by the company for transporting passengers and freight.

I am of opinion that the Kanawha board is not required to make the report contemplated by the 58th section of the act referred to, and that the James river and Kanawha company is not liable to the taxes imposed by the 59th section, inasmuch as it receives nothing for the transportation of either freight or passengers.

Respectfelly, your ob't serv't,

(Signed) GEO. W. SUMMERS.

No. 21.

Articles of agreement, entered into this 15th day of May in the year eighteen hundred and sixty, between the James River and Kanawha Company, acting by and through James L. Carr, president pro tem. of the Kanawha board, of the one part, and Theodore D. Barton and Orville Robinson of the state of New York, of the other part:

1. Witnesseth, that the said Theodore D. Barton and Orville Robinson promise and agree to improve the Kanawha river from the foot of Loup creek shoals to the Ohio river, in conformity with the annexed specification and with the plans and profiles of the improvement, as exhibited by Engineer John A. Byers, and with such alterations thereof as may be hereafter adopted by the said Kanawha board, and to furnish all the materials and do all the work in a substantial and workmanlike manner, at the prices specified in their proposal to the Kanawha board, hereto annexed, which may be necessary and proper therefor, according to the specification, and of such quality as the engineer of said board may approve.

2. The said engineer, or his assistant by his direction, shall, as soon as practicable after the end of each month, make out an estimate of the quantity and value of each species of work done, pursuant to this contract, at the prices contained in the annexed proposal, and also of any extra work done in consequence of any alteration in the plan of the improvement, which may have been adopted by the said Kanawha board.

And it is mutually agreed between the contracting parties, that any estimate made and approved as aforesaid, shall be final and conclusive, unless objected to before payment, and within twenty days after it shall have been returned to the Kanawha board. In which case, the party objecting shall give notice to the other party in writing, stating the grounds of objection—and the board shall thereupon return the objections so made, together with said estimate, to the said engineer, who shall immediately consider the matters of complaint, and make his report to the board in writing—which report shall be final and conclusive upon both parties, without further appeal; and the making and receiving payment upon any estimate to which objections may have been offered, shall be taken as evidence that such objections have been waived; and in like manner, the decision of the engineer upon any questions that may arise as to the meaning of this agreement, relating to work done by the contractors, shall be conclusive.

3. Within ten days after the return of any monthly estimate to the said Kanawha board, the amount appearing to be due for work done and materials furnished since the preceding estimate, less 15 per cent., shall be paid to the contractors in six per cent. registered stock of the commonwealth of Virginia, at par, as the same is authorized to be issued by the act passed the 23rd March, 1860: provided, however, that the said board shall not be required to pay out and deliver said registered stock in amounts larger than they are enabled to procure the same under the provisions of the said act. And no portion of the remaining 15 per cent. shall, under any circumstances, be paid, until this contract is fully fulfilled on the part of said contractors. But the said Kanawha board shall, on the certificate of the said engineer in writing, that any portion of the work is fully completed, receive such work so far as to relieve the contractors from further liability as to injury to this particular work, by high water of the river or otherwise.

4. Within thirty days after the whole improvement shall have been completed according to the true intent and meaning of this contract, a final estimate shall be made and approved in the manner provided for making and approving monthly estimates; and any objections thereto which may arise, shall be disposed of and finally settled as in the case of monthly estimates; and within thirty days after the adjustment of the final estimate, the balance due thereon shall be paid in the same manner, and with the same stock, and subject to the same provisions as the payments are contracted to be made in the third clause of this agreement.

Time of Beginning and Completing.

5. It is mutually agreed between the parties to this contract, that the work on the aforesaid improvement shall be commenced within forty days from this date, and be prosecuted, without intermission, by such force as in the opinion of the said engineer will secure its completion on or before the 15th day of August, 1861; at which time it shall be fully completed and delivered up. And it is further agreed, that in case the work shall not be commenced and prosecuted and completed, or if the contractors, on being required thereto by the written order of the engineer, shall fail or refuse to increase the force employed in the improvement, to such extent as in the opinion of the said engineer shall be necessary to insure the completion in the stipulated time; or in case the contractor shall disobey the written orders of the engineer, or shall violate any of the conditions of this agreement, then on a certificate of the fact by the said engineer, either the president pro tem. or the president pro tem. and directors of the Kanawha board may declare this contract abandoned; and the said Kanawha board shall thereupon be exonerated from every obligation thence arising; and the reserved per centage on the contract price, as well as all materials furnished and work performed, upon which no estimate may have been made, shall be forfeited to and become the right and property of the Kanawha board; and the said board may thereafter agree with any other person or persons for the execution of the unfinished work, in the same manner as if this contract had never been made.

6. The contractors shall give their personal attention to the execution of the work hereby contracted for; and it is mutually agreed that this contract shall not be let or assigned, either in whole or in part, to any other person.

7. The said engineer shall have power to prescribe the manner of preparing for, beginning and conducting every species of work to be done under this agreement, with reference to its purpose and the durability of such work, and his instructions shall be promptly obeyed; and if he shall disprove of the quality of any work, it shall be the duty of the contractors, at their own expense, to take down and rebuild so much thereof as shall be disapproved of; and if the contractors shall neglect or refuse to take down or rebuild work so disapproved of, the engineer shall cause the same to be done at their cost.

8. It is understood and agreed that all orders given by an engineer, which shall cause an increase of diminution in the value of the work to be performed, shall be given in writing; and that when any claim shall be made by the contractors for extra compensation for work performed under such orders, the order shall be produced.

9. It is further understood, that in case of the death, resignation or absence of the engineer, the board may depute any other engineer to act in his place.

10. And it is mutually agreed between the parties to this contract, that all the terms and conditions therein expressed, as well as the terms and conditions contained in the annexed specifications and proposal, which are deemed and taken to be a part of this contract, shall be binding upon the parties respectively, according to their true intent and meaning.

In witness whereof, the said James river and Kanawha company have hereunto set their name, acting by and through James L. Carr, president pro tem. of the Kanawha board, and have affixed hereto the private seal of the said president pro tem. (the Kanawha board having no seal); and the said

Theodore D. Barton and Orville Robinson have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals the said 15th day of May, A. D. 1860.

Report of the Committee of the Stockholders, on the Books, Papers and Accounts.

The undersigned committee, charged with the duty of examining the books, papers and accounts of the James River and Kanawha Company, beg leave to report, that under authority of resolutions of the stockholders adopted on the 17th of December, 1839, and 27th of October, 1859, they have employed Mr. Thomas H. De Witt to make the examination required of them, and have received a report from him in the following terms:

"To the Comimttee of the Stockholders on the Books, Papers and Accounts of the James River and Kanawha Company:

Gentlemen:

I have under your instructions examined the books and accounts of the James River and Kanawha Company, from the 1st October, 1859, to the 30th September, 1860, inclusive, and now respectfully report, that I have entire confidence in the correctness of the various statements and accounts made by the company to the stockholders at the late annual meeting, having examined into every entry made in the day book, journal and ledger, and found them to agree in every particular. I examined into every source of income, either from tolls or other sources, and found them correctly entered to the credit of the company, and also the disbursements, and found them in all cases sustained by proper vouchers, which were carefully endorsed, regularly filed and preserved, and easy of reference.

The condition of the company on the 1st October, 1860, is as follows:

Balance to the credit of the company on the 1st October, 1859, in Bank of Virginia		$2,948.89
Balance in the Bank of Virginia at Charleston, 1st October, 1859		6,278.40
		$9,227.29
Amount received from tolls, rents and other sources during the year		655,557.58
		$664,784.87
Deduct
Amount of warrants issued during the year ending 30 Sept., 1860	$644,295.18
Amount of warrants afloat on the 1st October, 1859	9,765.51
		$654,060.69
Balance on the morning of the 1st October, 1860, as shown by ledger		10,724.18
There were afloat on the same day of warrants issued and not presented at the bank		2,840.24
		$13,564.42
Balance per bank book of Bank of Virginia, 1st October, 1860		$7,286.02
Balance in Bank of Virginia at Charleston		6,278.40
		$13,564.42

All of which is respectfully submitted,

THOMAS H. DE WITT."

In addition to which, your committee find on a personal examination, that the books of the company's office are neatly kept, and the papers arranged in a manner favorable alike to their safe keeping and the dispatch of business.

Richmond, Va., November 20th, 1914.

THE DEPOSITIONS OF JOHN L. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS, taken by consent of parties, by counsel, this 20th day of November, 1914, at the office of H. T. Wickham, General Counsel of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., First National Bank Building, Richmond, Virginia, to be read as evidence in behalf of the plaintiff, before SPECIAL MASTER CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD, in a certain suit in equity pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, wherein the COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA is plaintiff, and the STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA is defendant.

PRESENT:

Hon. William A. Anderson,
Hon. Randolph Harrison,
Of Counsel for Plaintiff;

Hon. A. A. Lilly, Atty-Genl.,
Hon. John H. Holt,
Of Counsel for Defendant.

JOHN L. WILLIAMS, being first duly sworn, deposes and says, as follows:

Examined by Mr. Anderson:

1 Q. Please state the facts within your knowledge with reference to the firms of John A. Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co.; whether those firms, or either of them, were in business in the city of Richmond, Virginia, before and during the war between the United States and the Confederate States; and, in respect to sales of stocks and bonds by said firms, as to whether any reports of such sales were made and published by said firms in the Dispatch newspaper of the city of Richmond; and as to what credit was given to such published reports by the business community in which they were published.

A. I have known the firms of John A. Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co., bankers and brokers, of the city of Richmond, for the period of fifty-six years. I was a clerk in the firm of Lancaster & Son, and subsequently, during the civil war and afterwards, was a member of the firm of Lancaster & Co. In particular I know the fact that the firms of Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co. furnished accurate market reports of sales of railroad stocks and bonds before, during and after the period of that war. I also recall that those firms and other reputable firms in the city of Richmond, such as Davenport & Co., caused the quotations of such sales of stocks and bonds to be published in the Richmond Dispatch, a reputable newspaper published in the City of Richmond before, during and after that war, and that the market reports of such stocks and bonds, so published, were recognized and accepted by the business community and relied on accordingly. And, generally, I know that John A. Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co. made the sales reported by them therein in the course of their business, at the prices stated.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Holt:

1. XQ. Mr. Williams, do you know who composed the firm of John A. Lancaster & Son, in the year 1860?

A. In 1860? Mr. Robert A. Lancaster, Mr. Philip J. Wright and myself. Oh, 1860, John A. Lancaster (old Mr. Lancaster) was the senior partner, and Mr Robert A. Lancaster—they were the only members of the firm of John A. Lancaster & Son.

2 XQ. That was in 1860?

A. Yes.

3 XQ. When did you become a member of the firm?

A. I rather think it was about 1863; it was not long before I got married, in 1864. About '63, I reckon.

4 XQ. Do you recollect what time in the year '63 you became a member of the firm?

A. Now you are getting too hard for me. It was sometime in the year '63.

5 XQ. You do not know what month?

A. No.

6 XQ. Was it in the early part of the year, or in the latter part of the year?

A. Now, you are a little too hard for me; that has been about sixty years—about fifty or sixty years ago, and I can not recollect exactly the time. It was sometime during the year 1863, I rather think possibly the middle of the year.

7 XQ. You don't know whether it was in the spring, summer, autumn or winter of '63, do you?

A. What are you after, please, sir? I was in the concern as confidential clerk, acquainted with everything that they did; Mr. Lancaster was an intimate friend of mine—an old school friend—and in the course of our business he took me in with him, but what month it was I do not know; I know it was before I was married, some time. I was married in 1864.

8 XQ. But you don't know whether you became a member of the firm of Lancaster & Co. in the spring, summer, autumn or winter of '63?

A. No, sir. My impression is that it was possibly about the middle of it, may be; that is my impression.

9 XQ. That would be in the middle, would it, Mr. Williams?

A. Yes.

10 XQ. And after you went into the firm who were its members?

A. Mr. Lancaster, Mr. Philip J. Wright and myself I think were all; nobody else.

11 XQ. What had become of the son?

A. Sir?

12 XQ. What Lancaster was it?

A. Robert A. Lancaster; the old man died in 1860, I think, and Mr. Lancaster ran the concern as John A. Lancaster & Son until Mr. Wright and myself became partners.

13 XQ. When did you first go into the office of John A. Lancaster & Son, as a clerk, before you became a partner?

A. I rather think it was in 1858.

14 XQ. How old were you then?

A. Let me see—I was born in 1831; you can make the calculation for yourself—that would make my age 27, would it not?

15 XQ. What were your duties with respect to making market reports to the newspapers? Did you have anything to do with that in the year 1860?

A. Well, my impression is rather that after 1860, that may be I furnished most of the reports. I rather think I did.

16 XQ. Did you furnish the alleged market reports for the Richmond Dispatch, of that firm, in the year 1860?

A. I rather think I did, sir. Whatever went there was with the knowledge of all who were there; it had the approval of all the members of the concern, and clerks. We did our best to tell the truth.

17 XQ. How often did John A. Lancaster & Son publish market quotations of stocks and bonds, in the Richmond Dispatch, during the year 1860?

A. You can see from the paper itself; I rather think it was day to day; that is my impression.

18 XQ. Was that a daily paper, Mr. Williams?

A. Yes.

19 XQ. And your recollection is that you published daily market reports?

A. I think so; that is my impression.

20 XQ. Did you have any stock Exchange in the city of Richmond at that time?

A. I rather think that the Stock Exchange was formed after the war. That is my impression. I think the stock board was made after the war; but Lancaster & Co. were the leading bankers and brokers of the city.

21 XQ. Where would you get your information in making up these stock reports? What would you base it on, if there was no Stock Exchange here at that time?

A. On absolute sales of our own; we kept a record; we were thoroughly acquainted with the market; it was our business to know the prices, and our business to keep up with the market, and as intelligent and conscientious brokers we gave those reports, sir.

22 XQ. What did you base the reports on?

A. On my own ears and sense, that is about all I can say —and observation.

23 XQ. Well, suppose a share of stock in the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company was sold on January 1st, 1861, would you make any report of that?

A. On January 1st, 1861?

24 XQ. Yes.

A. Some of these were actual sales, and some of them were what we regarded as the true market price, on our own judgment.

25 XQ. How would you make up your judgment on that?

A. By the use of my mind; that is all I know; I do not know of anything else.

26 XQ. I know, but your mind operates on facts, when you use it?

A. Yes, sir, that of a conscientious man does.

27 XQ. On what kind of facts would you base that judgment?

A. Actual transactions, and acquaintance with the institution itself.

28 XQ. What institution?

A. The corporations, whatever they were—sometimes Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac, sometimes Richmond & Petersburg, and sometimes others—knowledge of the business of the concerns and how they were going on. Gracious mercy!

29 XQ. Did you make all the sales of stocks of these various companies, through the brokerage firm of John A. Lancaster & Son?

A. Did I, individually?

30 XQ. No, did that firm?

A. Did we make what?

31 XQ. In the year 1861, did anybody make any sales of stocks here, except Lancaster & Son?

A. My impression is that we did almost all the business.

32 XQ. There was no other brokerage firm that dealt in those stocks?

A. Maury & Co.; but I do not think they did anything like as much business as we did; we were pretty much recognized as the leading brokers of the place.

33 XQ. What was that other firm you named?

A. R. H. Maury & Co. was the name of a firm here—but you are asking me to go away back yonder and tell you of matters between fifty and sixty years ago.

34 XQ. But I didn't bring you here; you have undertaken to testify about it, and I want to see what your recollection is, in a fair way. Now, then, when you would make a market report you would base it on sales, would you?

A. Upon sales, and upon my knowledge of the market.

35 XQ. Would you go and inquire of the other brokerage firms what they had been selling, before making your market quotations?

A. No, indeed; I do not recollect any other brokers, except the Maurys, at that time.

36 XQ. Then you think that in 1861 there were only two brokerage firms—one was John A. Lancaster & Son, and the other was R. H. Maury & Co.?

A. Yes.

37 XQ. Well, if you were to make a sale of five shares of stock in any company, on the 1st day of the month, would you utilize that for the purpose of putting a market quotation in the newspapers upon the value of that stock?

A. If I made an actual sale, whether it was more or less—whatever the sale was, small or great, we would quote it.

38 XQ. When you would quote it, how would you quote it? Suppose a man would bring into your firm 100 shares of Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac stock, to sell, and you would sell it at a certain price on the first day of January, 1861, and that was the only sale that your firm had made, what market quotation would you give on that stock?

A. That at which I had made the actual sale.

39 XQ. Would you report the sale, or would you report a market price for that stock based on that sale?

A. Both, I reckon.

40 XQ. Is that the way those reports were made up?

A. They were made up by intelligent and conscientious gentlemen, of good judgment and experience; as honorable men, and knowing our business, we gave those quotations. Now that is about as much as I can tell you if you were to ask me one hundred and fifty more questions.

41 XQ. No, I don't want to ask you any more than I think necessary; because it is not pleasant to me, any more than it is to you. Suppose you made, we will say—this is illustrative—on the first day of January, 1861, sale of 100 shares of Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac stock; that is, suppose John A. Lancaster & Son did that. Now, suppose you sold it at par. Then, when you would put into the Richmond Dispatch a market quotation on that stock, you would quote it as selling at par?

A. As an actual sale. I will tell you: Lancaster & Son were accepted in this town as about the best authority on the prices of stocks; we were consulted on that subject.

42 XQ. That's all right, but I want to see whether they deserved that reputation, or not; that is all—doubtless they did.

A. I would presume that is a fact you would like to know, what our reputation was, would you not? I will swear to it.

43 XQ. We understand that, but we are asking for illustrative purposes. On the 1st of January, suppose stocks were put into the hands of John A. Lancaster & Son, for sale, and we will suppose that those stocks consisted of 100 shares of Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company's stock, and on that day you would sell those 100 shares at par, and those were all the sales you had. Now when you made out a market quotation for the Richmond Dispatch, or the newspapers, after that, what would your market quotation be?

A. Exactly what we had made the sale at.

44 XQ. That would be at par, would it not—$100 a share?

A. Yes.

45 XQ. Now, would you do that regardless of what R. H. Maury & Co. had sold stock at?

A. Entirely; we rather thought we knew more about the value of stocks than they did.

46 XQ. But you did not base your market quotation upon your judgment, but upon the stock sales you had made. Now, suppose in the meantime Davenport & Co. were——

A. They were not in existence at that time, I believe.

47 XQ. When did they come into existence?

A. I think it was after the war.

48 XQ. Now suppose R. H. Maury & Co., or whatever the name of the firm was, was selling stock at the same time, you would make a market quotation based upon the sale your firm made?

A. Yes.

49 XQ. Regardless of what Maury & Co. might have been selling them at?

A. Entirely, I think.

50 XQ. You didn't know whether Maury & Co. had sold the same stock at a greater price, or not?

A. We regarded ourselves as better authority on the value of stock, than Mr. Maury.

51 XQ. That may be true, but the question is what were those stocks bringing in the market. The question is not what your judgment was, but what those stocks were bringing in the market. Now you would go and make that market quotation regardless of what Maury & Co. might be selling them at?

A. Entirely so, sir.

52 XQ. Now, if Maury & Co. had sold stocks for more than you sold them in the market, that would not affect your market quotations, would it? They would be based upon the sales made by you?

A. I think not. You have stated an entirely hypothetical and possible case. Let me tell you—if you want to know all I know about this thing I will tell you; we were the best authorities, we gave the quotations of actual sales, and when we gave the quotations they were what we believed to be the true value of the stocks.

53 XQ. Well, now, I understand you. There were other people in the same business as yourselves, in the city of Richmond, at that time?

A. I think that Maury did very little of it.

54 XQ. I am not asking about the quantity they did, I am asking you concerning the fact whether or not there were other people in the same business at that time?

A. I don't think there were any others, except the Maurys.

55 XQ. I say, Maury was in the business at that time. You think there were two firms—R. H. Maury & Co. and John A. Lancaster & Son?

A. Yes, that is my impression

56 XQ. And they were both selling stocks, were they not?

A. Observe, now—

57 XQ. Well, answer my question: were they both selling stocks?

A. You must let me answer, please—

58 XQ. Were they both in the same business?

A. My impression is that the Maurys did very little of that business.

59 XQ. I am not talking about the quantity, I am talking about the character of the business. Were R. H. Maury & Co. and John A. Lancaster & Son in the same business? Were they both stock brokers?

A. That is my impression. I think the Maurys were chiefly money brokers.

60 XQ. Well, were both firms selling stocks in the market?

A. I think so, sir.

61 XQ. They were—and at the same time?

A. I think so, sir.

62 XQ. And that was in the years 1860 and 1861?

A. I rather think so; that is my impression.

63 XQ. And perhaps earlier and later? Well, now, when you would make a market quotation for the Richmond papers, you would base it upon the sales made by you, regardless of any sales that might be made by Maury & Co.? You would pay no attention to those sales, would you, of the same stock?

A. I never inquired of them what they had done; and not only that, I suppose they would keep their business to themselves.

64 XQ. Now you had no stock exchange at the time?

A. I think not.

65 XQ. You might get a better price for stocks, sometimes, then Maury & Co., might you not?

A. Yes.

66 XQ. And they might get a better price for the same stocks, sometimes, than you might get?

A. Not likely, sir.

67 XQ. I know, but would you know whether they would, or not?

A. What you are asking me is, whether we knew Maury's business and kept up with Maury's business, and whether I would consult them in the management of my business? I will tell you what, we knew so little about it—we knew the value of property and sometimes would buy stock from them and sell it at what we believed to be the market price; our customers depended on our judgment. Lancaster & Co. were the authorities and were most depended on by the capitalists of this place. I think that with the Maurys, their stock business was a secondary part of their business; that is my impression.

68 XQ. That may be. Then I will ask you this question: did you keep up with the sales of stocks made by Maury & Co.?

A. No, we didn't make any inquiry, or know anything about them.

69 XQ. You didn't know what prices they got?

A. No, sir.

70 XQ. You didn't know whether their prices were greater or less than what you got?

A. We had nothing to do with their business.

71 XQ. Answer my question: do you know whether their prices were greater or less than what you got, for the same stocks?

A. I would like to know how I was going to know.

72 XQ. You can say whether you did know?

A. I did not know.

73 XQ. That is all we are trying to get at. Now, then, there was more than one firm engaged in the sale of stocks in Richmond in the years 1860, '61, '62 and '63, and any market quotations that were published in the Richmond papers at the time, by John A. Lancaster & Son, were based upon their own experience, regardless of what the other brokerage firms were doing?

A. Yes, sir.

74 XQ. There was no stock exchange, I believe you have stated, at that time? That was established after the war. All stocks were sold at private sale, either by the buyer and seller themselves, or individual brokerage firm?

A. I think we did almost all the business, or most of the business that was done. I think it was a mere incident to the Maurys'.

75 XQ. Well, now, suppose this case, Mr. Williams. Suppose you would make a sale of Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac stock on the 1st of January, and you would make no more sales of that stock until the 1st day of July, 1861, and yet you were publishing daily quotations. What would you base those quotations on?

A. We would put there, always, in those cases, last sales. Look at them and you will find them designated as "last sales."

76 XQ. Would you give the date of the sales, however?

A. The last sales?

77 XQ. Yes.

A. No, indeed, it would remain in the stock list, last sales.

78 XQ. You would not in the stock quotation give the date of the last sale?

A. No.

79 XQ. Therefore, a man who would look at a stock quotation as published by you on the 1st day of July, 1861, based upon the last sale, could not tell from the quotation whether that sale had been made the day before, or twelve months before, could he?

A. I reckon not; if he wanted to, he could look back at the papers and see how long it was there; he would have to look back at the paper to see when the last sale was.

80 XQ. And if the papers carried him back a year, he would have to go back to that?

A. If he wanted to go back to the last sale.

81 XQ. Then, I understand whenever a sale was made by John A. Lancaster & Son, you would carry that as the quotation of the stock until the next sale was made?

A. Yes, sir, we would have it on the last sale.

82 XQ. You would base it on the last sale, and that quotation would stand until the next sale was made, is not that a fact?

A. Certainly.

83 XQ. And if that were in six months or a year, it would not make any difference?

A. No, sir.

84 XQ. Because it was based on the last sale?

A. Yes, sir.

85 XQ. Well, then, if on the 1st day of January, 1861, you had a market quotation in the Richmond Dispatch on stock, based on the last sale, from that paper alone—without running back to the last sale—you could not tell whether that was based on a sale made in 1861, or '58 or '59, could you?

A. You could use your own judgment about that. What do you think about it?

MR. HOLT: Well, my judgment would be that you could not.

WITNESS: I would like very much to know what I am here for, because you are asking me a great many questions that really make me just the least bit impatient. I am trying to tell you the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—and all about it. I have told you that Lancaster & Co.——

86 XQ. I mean, Mr. Williams, that the paper, itself, showing a market quotation, would not show the date of the last sale?

A. Of course not.

87 XQ. And when you did run it back it would simply be a sale made by John A. Lancaster & Son, would it not?

A. Very likely.

88 XQ. And regardless of sales made by anybody else?

A. Very likely. We were unquestionably the authorities on those values, during all that time.

89 XQ. I noticed, Mr. Williams, that when our friends propounded to you the first and only question they asked you, that you read your answer from a paper?

A. Yes, I did. I read it from this paper. (Witness indicates paper.)

90 XQ. Will you let me see the paper?

A. Yes, sir. (Witness hands the paper to counsel.)

91 XQ. Who prepared this paper that you read in response to their question?

A. I rather think that Major Anderson made it up out of my last testimony.

92 XQ. Do you know who put it through the typewriter?

A. I do not.

93 XQ. It is in typewritten form?

A. Yes.

94 XQ. Did you have it typewritten, or was it handed to you in that shape?

A. It was handed to me in that shape.

95 XQ. By whom?

A. By Major Anderson, I think.

96 XQ. By Major Anderson you mean counsel in this case?

A. I do mean so, sir.

97 XQ. The former Attorney-General?

A. Yes, sir.

98 XQ. You state in the second paragraph of this typewritten answer, as follows: "In particular I know the fact that the firms of Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co. furnished accurate market reports of sales of railroad stocks and bonds before, during and after the period of that war."

A. That is my recollection, sir.

99 XQ. Do you know whether the market reports furnished by them prior to January 1st, 1861, were correct? Do you have any personal knowledge on the subject?

A. I have no doubt about them.

100 XQ. I know, but have you, Mr. Williams, any personal knowledge on the subject?

A. I was clerk and book-keeper there, and knew everything that was done.

101 XQ. That was before you became a member of the firm?

A. Yes, sir. Mr. Lancaster and myself were old schoolmates and college-mates, and on the most intimate terms.

102 XQ. You were examined as a witness in this case up at the Supreme Court rooms some weeks ago, were you not?

A. I think so, yes.

103 XQ. Were you not at that time asked concerning these same market reports the following question: "Do you know anything as to the correctness of those?" and did you not make this answer: "No doubt if they are in the papers they came from our concern." Question: "Do you know anything as to their correctness?" Answer: "No, sir." Were not those questions asked you, and did you not make those answers?

A. I don't know how they got there. Look here, you are asking me these particulars of sixty years ago, and I answer the best I can. Now, I have no manner of doubt that I was thoroughly familiar with them. As for catching me telling a story, that is another question—that raises another matter.

I don't know exactly whether that was my reply, or not; I am not prepared to say that is was, because in answering questions I qualify everything. I am trying to tell you the truth. I tell you now, whatever I said then, the fact of the business is, I think, my impression is that I must have. As for swearing to the quotations exactly as they were, that is another question. You are asking me to tell you about figures of sixty years ago. I tell you that I was informed of everything that went on in the concern, and that being so, that all the quotations came under my observation, and were certified by me. My impression is now, really, that they would have to pass under Mr. Lancaster's own eye first; he was the head of the firm —I was a clerk, so I was not responsible; Mr. Lancaster was responsible for them. But I have no manner of doubt that they were correct. Without being able to say positively about my information, I have no manner of doubt that they were correct. This thing of being catechised about whether I am telling the truth, is not a thing I am at all used to, and am very restive under it.

104 XQ. Do you know anything about the reports of Davenport & Co., of stock quotations published in the Richmond newspapers in the years 1860, 61, '62 and '63?

A. I have no recollection of them.

105 XQ. Do you know whether or not they made any market quotations in those years, in the Richmond papers, on stocks and bonds?

A. I really do not recollect.

106 XQ. Do you know whether or not Davenport & Co. caused any market quotations to be published in the newspapers of the city of Richmond in the years 1860, '61, '62 and '63?

A. I do not recollect.

107 XQ. Now, in the paper I now have before me, that you read a moment ago in response to my friend, Mr. Anderson's question, you say this: "I also recall that those firms and other reputable firms in the city of Richmond, such as Davenport & Co., caused the quotations of such sales of stocks and bonds to be published in the Richmond Dispatch." Did you not read that statement into the record, Mr. Williams?

A. If I stated so, it was my recollection at the time, but I really do not recollect about that; when I referred to the general fact of reputable concerns, I do not recollect that Davenport & Co. were in existence at that time—but it has been a very long time ago. Why, is not this later on than '60,'61, '62 and '63? Davenport & Co. did not come in existence until afterwards. You are making me swear that Davenport & Co. were in existence in 1861, '62 and '63. I do not recollect that they were; I refer to them afterwards. My impression is that they did not come into existence until after the war. I do not say that Davenport & Co. were in existence during the war.

108 XQ. Didn't you state a moment ago, in reply to the first question that was asked you, that during and after the war Davenport & Co.——

109 XQ. Davenport & Co., yes.

109 XQ. Davenport & Co., yes;?

A. Or after the war, Davenport & Co.? Davenport & Co. were after the war. Things are a little mixed there, that is all—and not during the war—when I used the expression—I have been trying to tell you the truth, now, and you are trying to put me in a bad fix. If Major Anderson put it in the wrong way he is responsible for it, and not I. You are trying to make me say that Davenport & Co. were in existence during the war. Now, I do not recollect that they were. When I read that thing——

110 XQ. I will repeat my question: Did you not, in response to Major Anderson's question, answer from the paper you handed me a moment ago, that Davenport & Co. caused market quotations of stocks and bonds to be published in the Richmond Dispatch during and after the war?

A. Let me see that, please, sir. We have got to take care of ourselves here.

MR. HOLT: That is right.

WITNESS: (Reads) "I also recall that those firms and other reputable firms in the city of Richmond, such as Davenport & Co., caused the quotations of such sales of stocks and bonds to be published in the Richmond Dispatch, a reputable newspaper published in the city of Richmond before, during and after the war." Well, some of them did, and some did not. Davenport & Co. did not come into existence until afterwards. You change the thing to please. I do not say Davenport & Co. were in existence during the war; I do not think they were; but Lancaster & Co. and Davenport published their sales, some of them during the war, and some of them afterwards. Now, just put that in, please—some of them during the war and some of them afterwards.

111 XQ. I have not changed the paper at all; I have simply read from the paper you handed me; it speaks for itself, of course. Now, when did you first see this paper that you read as your answer to the first question propounded to you?

A. Oh, I read it down at the office. That especially struck me, about that, but I thought it was just a general statement covering the whole case.

112 XQ. You say "at the office"; where is the office? What office do you mean?

A. At the corner of 8th and Main Streets.

113 XQ. How far is that from here?

A. It is about a square.

114 XQ. When did you first see this paper?

A. I rather think it was this morning. But you understand, now, let me tell you, I read that thing not carefully; it was a general statement that Lancaster & Co., during the war, and before the war, and Davenport & Co. after the war, published these quotations; it covers the whole case, and so I regarded it. If you mean to say you discredit my testimony, sir, we had just as well stop now. This statement was made as a general statement, and as far as my stating that Davenport & Co. were in existence during the war, I am either an imbecile or else I told a story; now, let us put it on one of those horns, please. I am trying to tell you the truth, and exactly how things were. My impression is that Davenport & Co. did not come into existence until after the war; but Major Anderson put them together—not being familiar with the facts, he lumped them all together; some of them were before the war, and some afterwards. That is the way I read it and so understood it, and so signed it; but I did not mean to say that Davenport & Co. were in existence before or during the war. If you want to discredit my evidence, why, discredit it and let it go for what it is worth. I am a little out of patience under this thing, because I have tried to tell you the truth, and nothing but the truth. I will tell you again, that Lancaster & Co. were authorities on the values of stock before and during the war; they gave these quotations, and were pretty much accepted as authorities on those questions; and there were others—probably Maury & Co. after the war, and I think there was another, D. T. Williams & Co., after the war.

115 XQ. Have you examined the files of the Richmond Dispatch?

A. No, sir.

116 XQ. For the years 1860, '61, '62, '63, for the purpose of ascertaining the market quotations furnished by Lancaster & Son to that paper, for those periods, on any stocks?

A. No, sir.

117 XQ. Have you looked at the market quotations furnished by John A. Lancaster & Son to the Richmond Dispatch, on Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Company stock, of November 2, 1860?

A. No, sir.

118 XQ. Or the same quotations furnished by them to the same paper, on the 9th of November, 1860?

A. No, sir.

119 XQ. Or on December 14th of the same year?

A. No, sir.

120 XQ. Or on January 4th, of the year 1861?

A. No, sir.

121 XQ. Have you examined the market quotations as furnished by John A. Lancaster & Son to the Richmond Dispatch, involving either the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co., Virginia Central Railroad Company, or the stocks of any other company, for the years 1860, '61, '62 or '63?

A. No.

122 XQ. Now, Mr. Williams, we will ask you to file as a part of your deposition, the paper that you read from, in response to Major Anderson's first question.

A. You have raised that question about Davenport & Co. being here. I do not recollect that they were here during the war, but afterwards they were, and when I read it, it was having reference more especially to during the war—Lancaster & Co. and any other brokers; I do not recollect any others except Maury; I do not recollect that Davenport was here then. I am told now that Davenport & Co. were in business here then—I do not recollect it. Do you want me to say here that Davenport & Co.——

123 XQ. No, all I ask you, Mr. Williams, is to do this: I will put the question in this shape: Will you please file, as a part of your deposition, the paper from which you read your answer to Major Anderson's first question, and mark said paper "Exhibit No. 1?" The question calls for an answer "yes" or "no." Will you do that?

A. What was that question you asked me and made me answer "yes" or "no" to? What was that?

124 XQ. I do not recall what question you refer to, Mr. Williams. My question now is, will you file this paper I have referred to, and mark it "Exhibit No. 1?"

A. Yes. What was that question you made me answer "no" to, at the last examination?

125 XQ. That was on page 877.

A. I don't think the reporter reported me right on that; it was about those quotations; the "yes" or "no" was about figures and facts. That is no way to do, gentlemen, I assure you it is not. I am a witness, but I have my rights as an American citizen, not to be trifled with; that is all.

MR. HARRISON: They have no idea of trying to impeach your testimony, Mr. Williams; it is only to test your memory.

MR. HOLT: We are not going to quarrel with you, at all; but we want to test your memory.

WITNESS: Well, for you to throw off these insinuations and intimations, and then to tell me that you do not mean anything by it, is not the way to do, according to my understanding. I am a lawyer myself, and have some knowledge of the way things are conducted, but I have never yet come to the point where I could submit to being brow-beaten.

MR. HOLT: I do not blame you for that, because I am opposed to it myself.

WITNESS: Well, it is far from pleasant.

126 XQ. Well, now, Mr. Williams, why did you read your answer to Major Anderson's question, instead of answering it off-hand?

A. Don't you know that sometimes—I relied entirely on Major Anderson's memory and upon his judgment, believing that he was trying to put down there exactly what was the truth, and I took the best view of what he said about the brokers—that that is what he meant. As I understand, there is a principle of law that if there are two ways of understanding a thing, if a man means to be honest, and if you know he means to be honest, you must take him as honest. Now, I took the right view of Major Anderson's statement. Is not that law?

127 XQ. Then if I understand you, Mr. Williams, you felt that you were unable to give a reliable oral answer, without a written preparation beforehand?

A. I thought that Major Anderson meant that expression, with reference to the different brokers, as covering before and after the war, without the succession in which they are written.

128 XQ. I am not referring to Davenport & Co. alone—that part of the answer—but I am referring to the whole written answer.

A. That was, I was perfectly satisfactory to do; I let it go. I know what I meant. If anybody chooses to misunderstand it, and think I meant to tell a story, they can make the most of it.

129 XQ. Then you relied upon Major Anderson rather than upon yourself, did you not?

A. Why, we were together. Rather than upon myself?

130 XQ. Yes.

A. What use is there of asking me that sort of question? I was dealing with a gentleman who tried to do his best. I am not an idiot nor an imbecile. I read it, and I thought that is what was meant.

MR. HARRISON: He is referring to Davenport & Co. now, altogether.

MR. HOLT: Yes, I understood him to mean that.

131 XQ. What I want to get at is this: you had the question propounded to you by Major Anderson, and instead of answering it off-hand as you are answering my questions now, you took a written answer that had been prepared theretofore to that question by Major Anderson. Now, you did that, as I understand you, because you would rather rely upon him to make the answer, than upon yourself; is not that the fact?

A. Not at all. I relied upon him as trying to express, and coming pretty near the expression of what was the fact—very close to the expression of the absolute facts.

132 XQ. Could you not have expressed it without his assistance?

A. Why, yes. I came here with the understanding that I was to be occupied two minutes, and here I have been kept—I don't know that I was ever subjected to a much more uncomfortable questioning in any matter, and one in which I took less interest.

133 XQ. How many times have you read that paper that you gave here as your answer to his question?

A. I could not tell you.

134 XQ. Could you repeat its contents now?

A. Verbatim?

135 XQ. Not verbatim, but substantially.

A. Why, yes.

136 XQ. I wish you would try and do it, please. I don't want you to read it, but to give its substance, while I hold it. Can you now give the stenographer the substance of that paper that you read as your answer to Major Anderson's question?

A. Well, I state there that I have known the firms of Lancaster & Son, and Lancaster & Co. for —— 58 years, was it? that I was a clerk with Lancaster & Son from about 1858; that I was made a member of the firm of Lancaster & Son, I think in the year 1863—it was certainly somewhere about that time; that Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co. were in the habit of publishing quotations, regular quotations, I think, from day to day; that we would give actual sales; that when there were no original sales we would give the last sales; that when actual sales were made, the actual sales were reported. I would like to put in also that Lancaster & Co. were the accepted authorities—that the concern of old Mr. Lancaster and his son, and the firm of Lancaster & Co., were accepted as the leading authorities on stocks and bonds. Davenport & Co., according to my recollection, became brokers after the war. My impression was that Maury & Co. were the only other stock brokers at that time; that Lancaster & Son and Lancaster &

Co. were the parties who gave these quotations, and our quotations were received generally as the best. The dealings of the other concerns were rather subordinate to ours. That is the way they stood—that we were the leading authorities during all those periods, on the prices of bonds and stocks. So far as the reference in this paper to Davenport & Co. is concerned, I did not recollect that Davenport & Co. were really stock-brokers during the war. I overlooked it, if it is so. My reference to the other leading brokers rather embraced the period after the war, than during the war and before that. Please put that down, that my reference to Davenport & Co. and other leading brokers, had reference rather to the whole period, including after the war; some of the brokers, as D. T. Williams & Co., came in after the war. I think Cannon & Schoolcraft also came in after the war; but before and during the war, there were different brokers. But the fact you are interested in, and upon which I pledge my honor, is that we were the accepted authorities on the prices of stock, and my recollection is that we furnished the quotations to that paper; we were the concern that were responsible for them. I do not recollect that these other people ever supplied—or took our place. We considered it a privilege to furnish those things, and furnished them, and I do not recollect that anybody ever interfered with us.

137 XQ. Mr. Williams, how old are you now?

A. On the 13th of July I was eighty-three years old, sir.

138 XQ. On the 13th of last July?

A. Yes, the 13th of last July.

139 XQ. Do you know whether the Richmond Dispatch in 1860, '61, '62 and '63 was owned by a corporation, or was it a private enterprise?

A. My impression is that Cowardin & Ellyson owned it then.

140 XQ. You don't know whether it was a partnership publication, or a corporate one?

A. I never heard of it as anything else but Cowardin & El-lyson. After the war Ellyson died, and then it became, I think —well, I don't recollect, but during the war, and immediately after the war, it was Cowardin & Ellyson.

141 XQ. Well, do you know who were the owners of the Richmond Dispatch in the year 1860?

A. My impression is that the owners were Cowardin & Ellyosn.

142 XQ. In 1861?

A. I think it lasted all during the war, and after.

143 XQ. The question that Major Anderson propounded to you here a moment ago, to which you read your reply, was also written, was it not?

A. I do not recollect whether he wrote it or not. I did not.

144 XQ. I repeat my question: Major Anderson asked you one question, and you read your answer thereto. His question had been written out before hand, too, had it not?

A. I suppose so. I understood that to be a sort of categorical answer to his question.

145 XQ. Well, his question had been written out before he read it to the stenographer, had it not?

A. I presume so.

146 XQ. Had you read it beforehand?

A. What, his question?

147 XQ. Yes.

A. I do not recollect. I was trying to give my testimony as to the facts in this case. I don't know what you are after.

MR. HOLT: Well, I think that is all.

WITNESS: Well, I think this is too much. I have never before been subjected to a more uncomfortable arraignment; I have told you the best I know how, but you have been trying to lead me wrong, and have treated me as if I had no sense and was either an idiot or an imbecile; that is more than I can stand.

Note by Mr. Holt: Defendant's counsel refers the Master to page 877 of the new record—a part of Mr. Williams' evidence given heretofore.

Re-Direct Examination:

By Mr. Anderson:

1 RDQ. I will ask you first as to the preparation of this paper, by which you made your answer to the first question. Please state whether I saw you in your office this morning.

A. Yes, sir.

2 RDQ. And went over the facts in regard to this matter, with you?

A. Yes, sir.

3 RDQ. And took down from you a statement of those facts?

A. Yes.

4 RDQ. Is that correct?

A. I think so, sir.

5 RDQ. Do you remember if I read that statement, in pencil, to you?

A. I think so, sir.

6 RDQ. And do you remember whether you assented to it as a proper statement of the response you had given me?

A. I think so, sir.

7 RDQ. As I understand, you did not understand that statement, so far as it referred to Davenport & Co., to affirm that Davenport & Co. were in business in Richmond during the war, or made reports during the war?

A. I did not.

8 RDQ. You did not understand it that way?

A. No, I simply understood it as covering the whole case —all the brokers—not the question of succession.

9 RDQ. The statement was read to you before it was copied in your office?

A. Yes, sir.

10 RDQ. Do you know the fact that it was copied in your office, by a typewriter, under the direction of your son?

A. He went out to have it done; I did not follow it out, sir.

Note by Mr. Anderson: I think it is proper I should state here that I saw Mr. Williams this morning, in regard to this matter; made inquiries of him as to the facts stated in that answer, and took down his answer in his own language, as I understood it, and it was read to him, and he approved it. I feel sure that Mr. Williams did not hear distinctly the responses, as I took his language down. He either did not hear my inquiries of him, or he did not hear distinctly, because as has been evidenced from this examination his hearing is defective. His responses I wrote down, in his own language, as I understood him. The only possible error in that answer of Mr. Williams, as taken down by me, was in the reference to Davenport & Co., as to their being in business during the war. I did not know that Mr. Williams had any question about that, at all. The statement was written out by me in pencil, and copied by a clerk in his office.

WITNESS: I thought it was a question simply lumping all the brokers together. I did not understand it as stating that Davenport & Co. were in existence during the war.

11 RDQ. I want to ask you now, if Davenport & Co. were engaged in business during the war, and made reports of sales, would such reports have been accepted by the public as reliable reports? In other words, were Davenport & Co. a reputable concern?

A. Unquestionably, Davenport & Co., if they were in existence, were a reputable concern; but we were so largely the brokers of the place that we a little bit disregarded the balance; that is pust about all.

12 RDQ. Now, Mr. Williams, in rference to the published reports of market quotations made by John A. Lancaster & Son, and by Lancaster & Co., when they reported sales, if they referred to recent or remote sales did they refer to sales within a comparatively short time of the date of the report, or to sales six, eight or twelve months, or two years before?

A. To recent sales.

MR. HOLT: We object to the question.

WITNESS: (Addressing Mr. Holt) I want to say something in reference to what you quote me as having said on my previous examination, that I did not know —what was your question, to which I answered "No?"

MR. HOLT: In response to your request, Mr. Williams, I will read a portion of your re-direct examination before the Master, Mr. Littlefield, found at the bottom of page 876 and the top of 877 of the printed record. The questions and answers are as follows: (Reads)

"Re-Direct Examination by Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Williams, you were employed by the firm of Lancaster & Co. before the war, were you not?

A. Only as a clerk. During the war I was a member.

Q. There are certain quotations here in the Richmond Dispatch, of sales of stocks and bonds Of course, you know nothing about them now?

A. Of course not.

Q. Do you know that the reports were made by your firm for publication in the Richmond Dispatch?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything as to the correctness of those?

A. No doubt if they are in the papers they came from our concern.

Q. Do you know anything as to their correctness?

A. No, sir.

Q. Not now?

A. No."

WITNESS: I just simply say that I had no manner of doubt about their correctness, but as to certifying as to their absolute correctness in there, you, nor anybody else will make me swear to that. From my relation to the head of the concern, and the whole management of the business, I have no doubt of their correctness, but I could not swear to the figures. Now just put that down, please.

By Mr. Anderson:

13 RDQ. Do you have any independent present recollection as to whether those reports were correct, or not?

A. No, indeed.

14 RDQ. Is that what your answer meant, that you had no independent present recollection of whether they were correct, or not?

A. Of course—I could not.

Re-Cross Examination:

By Mr. Holt:

1 RXQ. Have you any personal knowledge upon the subject, whether or not Lancaster & Son published in the Richmond Dispatch the market quotations that are embraced in the record in this case?

A. How on the face of the earth am I to know? I have no doubt that they were regularly and conscientiously published and made up, and that they are to be relied on.

2 RXQ. The question is, do you know whether or not your firm really furnished those quotations to that paper? Have you any personal knowledge upon that subject?

A. Well, from the general course of things, I have no doubt of it. Relying on the general course of business then, I have no doubt that they were regularly published, and are reliable.

3 RXQ. They may have been regularly published, but are you willing to swear, Mr. Williams, that your firm furnished those to that paper, for publication?

A. From my recollection, I have no manner of doubt that they were. I have no doubt that they were, but as for swearing that they were, that is another question.

4 RXQ. I am asking you the question whether or not you are willing to swear that they did furnish those quotations to those papers.

A. I will swear to this: my connection was such that any honorable gentleman would be willing to say, and I have no manner of doubt, that they are correct.

5 RXQ. That may be, but, Mr. Williams, are you willing, and do you mean to swear now that Lancaster & Son furnished those quotations to the Richmond Dispatch—I do not mean, as a general proposition, but I mean the quotations that are printed in this record? Do you know whether they did, or not, and do you mean to swear whether they did, or not?

A. I have no manner of doubt that they were furnished by them. That is all you are going to get me to say.

6 RXQ. Did you take them over to the newspaper yourself?

A. Do you suppose I am going to answer you that question, that I did?

7 RXQ. You can answer me whether you know, or not?

A. My recollection is that it was the business of an employee of the paper to come for them.

8 RXQ. Well, do you know now whether they actually came and got from your firm the quotations that are set forth in this record here?

A. I have no manner of doubt that they were regularly made out and were regularly taken, and were regularly published. I have no manner of doubt of it.

9 RXQ. Well, now, the only reason that you have no doubt,

Mr. Williams, as I understand you, is because it was your practice to furnish them, and it was their practice to come after them. That is why you have no doubt, is it not?

A. It was the regular course of business to do so.

10 RXQ. It is simply because it was the regular course of business?

A. It was the regular course of business.

11 RXQ. You have no personal recollection on the subject —about these particular questions, have you?

A. Of course I have not.

And further this deponent saith not.

NOTE: The following statement of Major William A. Anderson, of Counsel for the Plaintiff, was made by him on November 21st, 1914, the day following the taking of the deposition of Mr. John L. Williams, but is here inserted in order that it may follow Mr. Williams' testimony:

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

I think it is due to Mr. John L. Williams, to myself and also to Judge John H. Holt, of counsel for the defendant, that I shall make the following statement:

Upon Mr. Williams' examination on yesterday, in response to the first question, he read his answer from a paper which he held in his hands, and which was a transcript of a pencil memorandum which I had prepared. The facts in regard to that matter are as follows:

I had a conference with Mr. Williams in reference to the facts within his knowledge as to the sales of stock and other securities by John A. Lancaster & Son, and Lancaster & Co., formerly doing business in the city of Richmond. I went over the subject carefully with Mr. Williams, and he very briefly, but clearly, stated the facts within his knowledge. He had already made a statement in regard to the matter, which had been reduced to the form of an affidavit, which was before us at the time, and which I suppose is now in his possession, but a copy of which can be produced. That affidavit had been sent to me. It is almost identical with this paper, except as to a part of one clause, as I remember. I have not the affidavit before me. Have you a copy of it, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir. (Mr. Harrison here produces the copy.)

The Witness: I wrote down, in Mr. Williams' presence, in pencil, the statements which he made to me, and then read them to him. The paper was then handed, either by me or by Mr. Williams' son—by his son, I think—to a clerk in their office, who typewrote the paper. She afterwards handed me the typewritten copy, and the pencil memorandum which I have, and I availed myself of the first opportunity when I could see Mr. Williams to hand to him the typewritten copy. He sat down and read it in my presence, and told me it was correct, and I left it with him, with the understanding that it would be used by him for aiding his recollection as to what the facts were within his knowledge, as already stated by him in his own language. Here is the original affidavit, a copy of which I have. I informed Mr. Williams that it would be necessary to have his deposition, or testimony, that the affidavit could not be used.

Now, I want to call attention to a mistake into which I think Judge Holt was led, probably from hearing Mr. Williams' answer to the first question. I want to say that Mr. Williams never told me during the interview that Davenport & Co. were engaged in business in the city of Richmond, as brokers, during the war, nor does this statement, as I understand it from reading it, so aver. The reference to Davenport & Co. is as follows:

> "I also recall that those firms," (that is, Lancaster & Son, and Lancaster & Co.) "and other reputable firms in the city of Richmond, such as Davenport & Co., caused the quotations of such sales of stocks and bonds to be published in the Richmond Dispatch," (I am reading it according to the punctuation) "a reputable newspaper published in the city of Richmond before, during and after that war, and that the market reports of such stocks and bonds so published were recognized and accepted by the business community and relied on accordingly."

All the paper states, and all that it was designed to state in that regard, is, that the Richmond Dispatch, a reputable newspaper, was published in the city of Richmond during the period of the war; not to state that Davenport & Co. were engaged in business during the war. I am sure if Judge Holt had read the paper he would have seen that that was the natural and proper construction, and perhaps some of his cross-examination and some of the annoyance resulting from it, to Mr. Williams, would have been avoided.

I want to say for both Judge Holt and Mr. Williams that I was sure, at the time, that there was no purpose on Judge Holt's part to raise any question whatever as to the veracity or integrity of Mr. John L. Williams, for I am sure if Judge Holt knew, as he probably does know, the reputation of that gentleman, he would recognize that no man stands higher in this community. I want to say of Mr. John L. Williams that he is one of the truest, noblest and best men whom it has ever been my privilege to know; and I am sure Judge Holt did not intend to do him any injustice or to cast any imputation upon him, or to make any reflection upon him. Indeed, he assured me that he had no such purpose or intention. I did not tell Mr. Williams to read this paper. I thought he could use it for the purpose of reading it over and making his statement in his own way. The question which I propounded was never mentioned in Mr. Williams' hearing, but was written out in his presence and in the presence of counsel, and in the presence of the Notary—merely a rough draft of the question—upon a tablet lying on the table in the room where the examination was being conducted, and it was merely used by myself as a guide in dictating the question, which I did, orally, to the stenographer. I frequently do that in important cases, particularly when I wish to submit a very comprehensive question.

I have known the firms of John A. Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co., bankers and brokers, of the city of Richmond, for the period of 56 years. I was a clerk in the firm of Lancaster and Son, and, subsequently, during the civil war and afterwards, was a member of the firm of Lancaster & Son.

In particular I know the fact that the firms of Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co. furnished accurate market reports of sales of railroad stocks and bonds before, during and after the period of that war.

I also recall that those firms and other reputable firms in the city of Richmond, such as Davenport & Co., caused the quotations of such sales of stocks and bonds to be published in the Richmond Dispatch, a reputable newspaper published in the city of Richmond before, during and after that war, and that the market reports of such stocks and bonds so published were recognized and accepted by the business community and relied on accordingly. And, generally I know that John A. Lancaster & Son and Lancaster &Co. made the sales reported by them therein the course of their business, at the prices stated.

JOHN L. WILLIAMS.

Exhibit No. 1

O. RAYMOND BROWN,

Notary Public.

WILLIAM H. PALMER, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

Examined by Mr. Harrison:

1 Q. Colonel, will you please state your place of residence, your occupation, and your age?

A. My place of residence is Richmond, Virginia; occupation, President of the National State and City Bank, of Richmond; I am seventy-nine years old.

2 Q. Please state whether or not you were acquainted, by reputation or otherwise, with the firms of John A. Lancaster & Son, and Lancaster & Co., and Davenport & Co., during the period of the Civil War—prior thereto, and during that period.

A. I knew of the firms in the brokerage business very well —Lancaster & Son, before the war and after the war. I do not remember when Davenport & Co. commenced; but Lancaster & Co. I knew before the war. I dealt with them.

3 Q. Did you or not deal with Lancaster & Co. both before and during the war?

A. Both before and after the war.

4 Q. I don't know whether your answer covered that, or not. Were those firms, according to your recollection, engaged in business during the war?

A. They were.

5 Q. How were they regarded, Colonel, in the business world?

A. They were regarded as first class brokers.

6 Q. Were you, or not, familiar with the Dispath, a newspaper published in the city of Richmond?

A. Yes; I received it nearly every morning.

7 Q. Did your acquaintance with the Dispatch relate to the period both prior to and during the war?

A. Yes.

8 Q. What was the character and standing of that newspaper?

A. Very high.

9 Q. As a matter of fact, you may say, Colonel, if you know, how long after the war it continued its publication, and by what paper it was succeeded.

A. It was bought out by Joseph Bryan, and it is now incorporated as the "Times Dispatch"—I do not remember the exact date, but it was some years after the war.

10 Q. The Times Dispatch then is the successor of the Dispatch?

A. Yes.

11 Q. State whether or not you remember seeing market quotations published in the Dispatch, either prior to the war or during the Civil War—market quotations of stocks and bonds.

A. Yes.

12 Q. In the name of what firm or firms were those publications made?

A. I saw the market quotations both before and during the war. I take it that they were from those firms, but I could not swear that they were from those firms. I read the market quotations very regularly during the war, before and after the war, in the Dispatch.

13 Q. Then the market quotations of stocks and bonds did appear in the Richmond Dispatch, both before and during the period of the war?

A. Yes.

14 Q. And you frequently read them and consulted them?

A. I read them and consulted them, yes.

15 Q. How were they regarded, Colonel, with respect to their reliability?

A. Absolutely as the transactions of the day, and as correct.

Cross-Examination:

By Mr. Holt:

1 XQ. Colonel, you were not a member, as I understand it, either before or during the war, or at any time, of the firm of Lancaster & Son?

A. No, sir.

2 XQ. Nor of either or any of the brokerage firms about which Mr. Harrison has asked you?

A. No, sir, I was not a member of any of them.

3 XQ. You have no personal knowledge of any market quotations in the Richmond Dispatch, but just such information as the paper purported to give; is that true?

A. I have before the war and since the war, knowledge; during the war I was engaged in the army.

4 XQ. I mean the quotations that appeared in the Dispatch during the years 1860, '61, '62 and '63—you have no personal knowledge about those reports, have you?

A. Except that I saw them in the paper.

5 XQ. I mean the whole information you have is what appeared in the paper itself?

A. Not absolutely, because I had a good many securities in my hands during the war.

6 XQ. You never made any market reports, yourself, to the Richmond Dispatch, did you?

A. No.

7 XQ. You never helped Lancaster & Co. or any other firm, make up any market reports, did you?

A. No, sir, I never did.

8 XQ. And the only information you have concerning the reports that appeared in that paper, was what the paper itself showed?

A. That is true.

9 XQ. You really don't know, from your own personal knowledge, whether Lancaster & Son, or Lancaster & Co., or any of the brokerage firms referred to, furnished those reports, or not, do you?

A. I do not. I was in the army during the war.

10 XQ. You were in the army?

A. For four years.

11 XQ. What time did you enlist?

A. April 21st, 1861.

12 XQ. When did you come out?

A. At Appomatox Court House.

13 XQ. You took the whole thing in, then?

A. Yes.

Re-Direct Examination:

By Mr. Harrison:

1 RDQ. You spoke, Colonel, of having a good many securities to handle during the war, and in that way had some independent knowledge of the market?

A. Yes.

2 RDQ. Did you deal wih Lancaster & Co.?

A. I dealt with Lancaster & Co. before the war and after the war. I simply knew of the securities that were in my hands, belonging to an estate, and so on; but I naturally looked at the quotations published during the war, from having these securities. I examined the quotations for that reason, that I was interested in them.

3 RDQ. Then you did examine the quotations that appeared in the Richmond Dispatch during the war, because you were interested in seeing what the market quotations were?

A. Yes, sir.

4 RDQ. As a matter of fact, did your father have any connection with Lancaster & Co., in business; was he instrumental in starting them in business, or anything of that sort?

A. My grandfather started Lancaster in business.

5 RDQ. Your grandfather started Lancaster in business?

A. Yes.

6 RDQ. John A. Lancaster was in business then for many years before the war?

A. Yes. My grandfather started the old man in business, and his son, both, and I knew them, of course.

And further this deponent saith not.

(Signature waived.)

NOTE: The further taking of these depositions was here adjourned, and continued to November 21st, 1914, at 12:00 o'clock, M., at the office of Mr. John P. Branch, in the Merchants National Bank, Richmond, Va.

O. RAYMOND BROWN,
Notary Public.

OFFICE OF JOHN P. BRANCH,
Merchants National Bank Building,
Richmond, Va., November 21, 1914.
12:00 o'clock, M.

The further taking of these depositions was resumed this day, pursuant to adjournment.

PRESENT:

Hon. William A. Anderson,
Hon. Randolph Harrison,
Hon. Holmes Conrad,
Of Counsel for the Plaintiff.

Hon. A. A. Lilly, Atty.-Genl.,
Hon. John H. Holt,
Of counsel for the Defendant.

JOHN P. BRANCH, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

Examined by Mr. Anderson:

1Q. Please state your age, residence and occupation.

A. Eighty-four years of age; President of the Merchants National Bank of Richmond, Virginia; residence, Richmond, Virginia.

2 Q. Where were you residing during the war between the States—1861 to '65, inclusive?

A. My home was in Petersburg, Virginia, when I went in the army.

3 Q. Were you a member of any firm engaged in business during that period? If so, where was that firm engaged in business, and what was its business?

A. I am trying to think—I think I was a member of two firms; let me see. I don't know the name of the firm, but I was a partner in a firm consisting of my father and my brothers and brothers-in-law.

4 Q. And yourself?

A. Yes, and myself. We had several firms, and I do not know what they were called; I do not remember now.

5 Q. Where were they engaged in business?

A. In Petersburg, Virginia.

6 Q. And what was their business, Colonel Branch?

A. Well, we were mostly in the banking business.

7 Q. Were you acquainted with the Richmond Dispatch newspaper, as a newspaper, at that time?

A. Yes—it was published in Richmond.

8 Q. What was the standing, reputation and character of that journal, at that time ?

A. Very good.

9 Q. What was its standing as a journal giving information upon financial matters—as to the information furnished by its financial columns?

A. Well, sir, it was very reliable.

10 Q. Do you remember, Colonel Branch, anything as to the market quotations of the values of stocks and other securities, appearing in that paper during that period, particularly from 1861 to '63?

A. I do not.

11 Q. You have no independent recollection of them?

A. No.

12 Q. Do you know that there were such publications in the paper?

A. Yes. They were published in the newspaper referred to by you.

13 Q. Can you state how they were esteemed and regarded by the business public, in this community and in Virginia?

A. Well, I will say, in Richmond and Petersburg, and the vicinity, very good.

14 Q. Can you say whether they were accepted by the public as reliable quotations of the values of those stocks and securities?

A. They were accepted by the public—they were relied on by the public, as being true, so far as I know and believe.

15 Q. Were you acquainted with the firm of John A. Lancaster & Son, and its successor, the firm of Lancaster & Co.?

A. I was, yes, and had business transactions with them.

16 Q. Do you know the standing and reputation of those firms, as brokers and bankers? If so, please state what the same was.

A. They were considered very reliable people—reliable and honest.

17 Q. How were any stock quotations furnished by Lancaster & Son, or Lancaster & Co., and published in the Richmond Dispatch or other newspapers, regarded by the public?

MR. LILLY: We object to that question.

A. I do not know, as a matter of fact, that they published any of these quotations, but the newspapers did publish them and state that they were the quotations of these banking firms. What I mean by that is, I did not see the type put up, or anything of that sort, but they were believed to be their quotations.

By Mr. Conrad:

18 Q. The market quotations furnished by Lancaster & Co. to the Richmond Dispatch, of market prices, how would they be accepted by bankers and the public generally?

Mr. Lilly: We make the same objection to that question.

A. They were accepted by me and by other people who dealt in securities; as far as I know and believe, they were accepted by all of them.

Cross-Examination:

By Mr. Lilly:

1 XQ. As a matter of fact you do not know that Lancaster & Co., or Lancaster & Son ever furnished any market quotations to the papers for the purpose of publication, do you?

A. No further than what I read in the newspapers; they have told me that they were publishing them, but I have no recollection of it at all. It is my belief that they were their quotations, because what I saw in the papers was considered very reliable. I never saw them set up the type, and never was in the printing office.

2 XQ. And you don't know who furnished them, only from what you saw in the paper?

A. I may have known at the time, but I do not recollect it now. No, I do not recollect any information on that subject. I believe what I saw in the papers were their quotations, and that they were correct.

3 XQ. But you base that only upon what you saw in the paper?

A. Well, I would not say that, because I knew what the quotations ought to have been, in the paper, and I have no recollection that they were not exactly what was correct, as they appeared in the newspaper. It would be impossible for me to remember in detail what any particular security sold for.

Re-Direct Examination:

By Mr. Anderson:

1 RDQ. State if you can with reference to what currency, as a standard of value, were these quotations made during the war period.

MR. LILLY: We object to that question, as being foreign to the purpose for which these depositions are being taken, and outside of the reference permitted by the Master in New York.

A. During a part of the war the currency traded in was bank notes. Later on during the war, the only currency that was a medium of exchange, I would say, was Confederate money.

And further this deponent saith not.

(Signature waived.)

NOTE: An adjournment was here taken to the office of Davenport & Co., 1113 East Main Street, Richmond, Virginia, where the following depositions were taken:

COLEMAN WORTHAM, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

Examined by Mr. Harrison:

1 Q. Mr. Wortham, please state your age, residence and occupation.

A. I am forty-two years of age—I was born the 18th of June, 1872. I have lived in Richmond all my life, and I am engaged in the stock brokerage business and fire insurance business.

2 Q. Under what firm name?

A. Davenport & Co.

3 Q. Is Davenport & Co. an incorporated concern, or a partnership firm?

A. Partnership.

4 Q. How long have you been connected with Davenport & Co.?

A. As I came with them in February, 1899, as a clerk, and on the 1st of January, 1900, I became a member of the firm.

5 Q. Your associates at the time you became a member of the firm were who?

A. Mr. Virginius Newton.

6 Q. And who are your present associates?

A. Mr. George W. Warren and Mr. J. J. Ballou, Jr.

7 Q Mr Wortham, I hand you a book which I ask you please to examine, and state what it is. What is the record of, and what has been its custody up to this time?

A. It is a book of the old firm of Davenport & Co.; it appears to have been used during 1863, and along during the war times. It was found, along with some other books that I did not know were in existence until Mr. Le Gendre came here some little time back and found it in the vault there (witness indicates vault in office). The entries of auction sales had by Davenport & Co. appear to be entered on this blotter during the year 1863, and subsequent to that date there are some entries here, too. In addition to that, in the back of this book there seems to be the Journal—Davenport & Co.'s Journal for 1863. These entries in the Journal were taken from the Cash Book, at that time, of Davenport & Co.

8 Q. Is the Cash Book before you?

A. One of these books here is the Cash Book. (Witness here produces another book.) This is the Cash account of Davenport & Co., for 1863; and from the Cash Book the items were journalized, and from the Journal they were posted to the Ledger of Davenport & Co.

9 Q. Is the Ledger before you?

A. (Witness here produces a third book.) Here is the Ledger of Davenport & Co. Here is a record of the stock sales.

10 Q. You have then before you three of the original books of entry of the old firm of Davenport & Co., showing stock sales during the year 1863, and subsequent to that time—the Cash Book and the Ledger, into which those sales were carried—

A. Together with what would be called a "Scratcher" or "Blotter"; the Blotter and Journal are in the same book.

11 Q. Have you, Mr. Wortham, any knowledge, either personal or by reputation, of how far back the firm of Davenport & Co. were engaged in business in the city of Richmond?

A. I didn't know until I found this book that the firm was started until 1865, but sometime since I was in New York and there I saw the minutes——

MR. LILLY: We object to that character of evidence.

12 Q. So far as you knew, yourself, you were under the impression that Davenport & Co. began business in 1865?

A. Yes.

13 Q. The old vault that you spoke of is here in the room that we are occupying, is it not? I mean in the building of Davenport & Co.?

A. In this building, yes, sir. The building does not belong to Davenport & Co.

14 Q. I mean in the building occupied by your firm, Davenport & Co.?

A. Yes.

15 Q. You say there have been a large number of old books stored in that vault?

A. It has been the custom, ever since I have been here, whenever we got through with anything to throw it up into that old vault.

16 Q. And you were not aware that these books of original entry of Davenport & Co., that are now introduced, covering the period of 1863, were in existence, until recently when they were found by an examination into that old vault?

A. I was not.

17 Q. I will ask you, Mr. Wortham, if the handwriting of the entries in the three books that you have referred to, of Davenport & Co., appears to be the same, or not?

A. They all appear to be in the same handwriting. If you will allow me—you can trace the entries from the Blotter to the other books.

18 Q. I was going to ask you to trace one. I will ask you to trace from the Blotter the entries through the Journal and the Ledger.

A. Here is what appears to be the March, 1863, sales.

19 Q. On what page?

A. On page 34 of the Blotter. These sales appear to have been transferred from the Blotter—

20 Q. The aggregate amount, you mean?

A. The aggregate amount; here appears to be the gross amount of sales for March, $79,153.38—for March, 1863—on page 34 of the Blotter—carried forward to the Cash Book, page 102, $78,323.38. There is a difference there, you will see, of $830.00 $650.00 there on the same date, added to this amount makes a discrepancy of $180.00, that is, between those two cash entries and this amount here; that is accounted for by an item of Bolling Haxall, of $180.00, which does not appear to be paid for. In other words, the total of this, less $180.00, is the amount of the two cash book entries. Then from the Cash Book, these two amounts were transferred to the Journal, and from the Journal they were posted to the Stock Sales; the total amount is $153,338.87. That completes the entry. They are transferred from the Blotter to the Cash

Book, from the Cash Book to the Journal, and from the Journal to the Ledger.

21 Q. What date is that?

A. This appears to be April 1st, 1863, and these were evidently for transactions in March, 1863, and put into the Cash Book the 1st of April.

22 Q. Then, beginning with page 34 of the Blotter you will find the aggregate amount of sales—gross sales—for the month of March, $79,153.38?

A. Yes, sir.

23 Q. You find on that page that Bolling Haxall was charged with $180.00?

A. Yes.

24 Q. Now the next transfer is to what book?

A. From the Blotter to the Cash Book.

25 Q. Then you find the aggregate of those sales, less the $180.00?

A. Made up by these two items.

26 Q. Transferred to the Cash Book—is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

27 Q. And the total appearing on the Cash Book is transferred to the Journal?

A. The Journal.

28 Q. At what page?

A. Page 300.

29 Q. The total of $153,338.87 appearing on the Cash Book, on page 102, and transferred to the Journal on page 300, does that complete it?

A. It is transferred from the Journal to the Ledger, page 54.

30 Q. That amount, $153,338.87, is posted on the Ledger, page 54, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

31 Q. And that completes the transaction?

A. That completes the March sales.

MR. LILLY: Why do you call them the March sales?

WITNESSS Because the caption in the Journal is "Gross Sales, March 28th."

32 Q. The caption in the Blotter, page 34, is "Richmond, Va., 1863, Debtors. Gross Sales, March 28th"?

A. You see that is simply a resume of two or three pages of the Blotter before that.

33 Q. Do I understand that the method you have described, of the original entries in these books, was the system used as shown by these books, of making the entries on the Blotter, and transferring them to the various other books of entry, as you have just shown?

A. Yes, sir.

36 Q. I may have been inaccurate in describing the Cash Book, Journal, and Ledger, as books of original entry. Please state whether they are books of original entry, or whether the "Blotter" or "Scratcher," in which the original sales are entered and recorded, is the only book of original entry?

A. The Blotter is the record of the sale—that is the original entry—and from the Blotter the items are carried to the Cash Book, and from the Cash Book they are journalized; that was an old system they had; and from the Journal they were posted to the Ledger. So the entry was originally made in the Blotter and went on through to the Ledger.

37 Q. I find published in the Richmond Dispatch of Tuesday, April 7th, 1863, under the caption "Financial and Commercial," a list of bonds and stocks sales at Messrs. Davenport & Co.'s auction sale "today"; and among the stocks and bonds sold are Virginia Sixes, registered, at 112 and 114. Do you find a corresponding entry on the Blotter?

A. On page 38, this is April 7th, 1863, there is a record of

$1,400 and $500 of Virginia 6's, sold at 114 and 112, respectively.

MR. HOLT: Those are bonds, are they?
WITNESS: I imagine so, from the record here.
MR. HARRISON: They are described as Virginia Sixes.
MR. HOLT: But I mean, they are bonds?
MR. HARRISON: Oh, yes.

By Mr. Harrison:

38 Q. Does the Blotter show for whose account they were sold?

A. For account of C. W. Purcell & Co., and sold to W. M. Sutton & Co.

39 Q. I find under the market quotations of the date mentioned above, Farmers Bank stock appears to have been sold at 131. Do you find a corresponding entry on the Blotter?

A. Yes. Farmers Bank, 40 shares at 131. That is on page 36. Sold by Samuel J. (or I.) Harrison, to W. M. Sutton & Co.

40 Q. I also find in the same market quotation, for April 7th, 1863, described above, Bank of the Commonwealth stock sold at 121. Do you find a corresponding entry in the Blotter of Davenport & Co.?

A. Yes, sir. Bank of Commonwealth, 16 shares sold at 121; sold for account of Isaac Davenport, Jr., and bought by B. H. Nash.

41 Q. I also find in the same market quotations published, of sales made April 7th, 1863, James River & Kanawha Company's stock sold at 19. Do you find any corresponding entry on the Blotter?

A. Yes, sir. James River & Kanawha Company, 100 shares at 19.

42 Q. For whose account?

A. Sold for account of H. Hancock, and bought for account of George S. Palmer.

NOTE (By Mr. Conrad): It is hereby agreed by the parties, by their counsel, that the photographs, numbered consecutively 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, herewith produced, are accurate copies of the Richmond Dispatch of the dates mentioned thereon.

NOTE (By Mr. Holt): But the defendant, the State of West Virginia, objects to them on the ground of their immateriality and irrelevance in this case.

43 Q. I find in the Richmond Dispatch under date of July 20th, 1863, under the caption "Financial and Commercial," the following: "Bonds and Stocks—At Messrs. Davenport & Co.'s auction sale last week." In this statement of sales dated July 20th, 1863, as having been made "last week," I find Virginia registered bonds at 160. Do you find any corresponding entry on the Blotter? The sales were made on a date prior to July 20th, 1863—Virginia registered, at 160?

A. Here is a record of Virginia sixes, at 160, on page 64, July 16th, 1863.

44 Q. I also find here Virginia Central Railroad stock, at 116.

A. Here is an entry of 18 shares at 116, on page 62 of the Blotter, July 16th, 1863.

45 Q. I find in the advertisement last referred to, Bank of the Commonwealth stock sold at $135. Do you find any corresponding entry on the Blotter? These sales are published in the Dispatch of July 20, 1863, as having been made "last week"; they would be of a date, therefore, prior to July 20, 1863?

A. I do not find that sale recorded.

Cross-Examination.

By Mr. Holt:

1 XQ. Mr. Wortham, how old are you?

A. Forty-two.

2 XQ. When did Davenport & Co. go into business in the city of Richmond, so far as you know?

A. I could not answer that question—I do not know.

3 XQ. When did you first know them?

A. I knew them when I was a youngster in tow, Judge Holt; my cousin was a member of the firm of Davenport & Co.

4 XQ. Do you recollect when that was?

A. Certainly as far back as 1891 or '92.

5 XQ. You didn't know them then in the '60's?

A. No, sir, not very well; I didn't know anything then.

6 XQ. Now you have produced three books here. Please name them.

A. We call this book the Blotter—the book of original entry.

7 XQ. And the next two?

A. This is the Cash Book, and this is the Ledger. The back part of the Blotter was used for the Journal.

8 XQ. Then the three books you have produced may be described as "Blotter," "Ledger" and "Cash Book."

A. I would describe them as the "Blotter and Journal" (because the Journal is kept in the back of the Blotter), "Cash Book" and "Ledger."

9 XQ. When did you first see these books?

A. About two weeks ago, when they were found in this vault.

10 XQ. And you never saw them before?

A. No, sir.

MR. CONRAD: Do you see anything on those books, anywhere, to indicate what business house they belong to?

WITNESS: Yes, sir; we see the auction sales; the first entry in the book, on the auctions—here is an auction sale held on March 28th. This auction sale was carried through the proper channels into the Journal, which is in the same book as the Blotter, and the Journal is marked "Journal, Davenport & Co., Richmond, Va."

MR. HARRISON: Both are under the same cover?

WITNESS: Yes.

11 XQ. Then your answer to Major Conrad's question is that they carry the name of Davenport & Co.?

A. Yes, sir.

12 XQ. Do you know who made the entries in those books?

A. I do not.

13 XQ. Are you familiar with the handwriting in those books?

A. I never saw it until the books were discovered a short time since, that I know of.

14 XQ. Then you can not say whether the books are genuine, or not; all that you know about them, as I understand it, is that you found them in the vault in the building you now occupy?

A. I found them in the vault of Davenport & Co., with their papers and old books in there.

15 XQ. In the building you now occupy?

A. Yes.

16 XQ. You are not familiar with any writing in those books?

A. No, sir.

17 XQ. And you could not swear to their genuineness or correctness, either, could you, from personal knowledge?

A. Not from personal knowledge.

18 XQ. All then you know about them is what you infer from the place you found them?

A. And from what I see in the books.

19 XQ. Do you find anything in either of those books bearing the date of January 1st, 1861?

A. I have not found it, Judge—I have only looked at these that are here. (Witness here turns the leaves of one of the books.) Here are some entries made back in September, 1858; I will see whether they go further than that. Here are some entries in 1861. Here is (reads) "May, 1861, Paid Dispatch for advertising."

MR. HARRISON: How much?

WITNESS: $45.00.

20 XQ. Do you find any entry in either of those three books —any market quotations—as early as January, 1861?

A. I have not found them.

MR. CONRAD: Have you looked?

WITNESS: No, sir.

21 XQ. Will you look and see if you find any entries relating to market quotations as early as January, 1861?

A. From these books, the stock sales appear to have begun in March, 1863—March 28th.

NOTE (By Mr. Holt): The defendant, State of West Virginia, through counsel, objects to the whole of the testimony of this witness relative to the three alleged books of Davenport & Co., discovered by him, upon the ground that the same are irrelevant; and it further objects to the photographs heretofore introduced, upon the ground that they do not relate to any market quotations that were embraced in the plaintiff's revised exhibit No. 2, heretofore filed in the record.

NOTE: The three books referred to in the testimony of this witness are marked respectively, "Exhibit C. W.—A," "Exhibit C. W.—B," and "Exhibit C. W.—C."

And further this deponent saith not.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

THURSDAY, June 25, 1863.

SPECIE AND BANK NOTES.—The market is dull, with a downward tendency in the rates for specie. Some of the brokers have paid, we understand, as high as $7.25 premium for gold, but $7 is now the lowest, whilst they are more willing to sell at $7 50 premium. Silver is quotable at $6 50 to $7; Sterling Exchange $8 75 to $9. Bank notes $1 05 to $1.10 premium.

BONDS AND STOCKS.—We have to renew last quotations of the leading securities, viz.: Confederate bonds, 100 M., 102@109; and int; do. do., 15 M. coupon, 200 and int; do. do. registered, 125 and int; Va. regis'd stock 131 and int; Tenn. bonds, 4 coupons on, 225; North Carolina sixes, new, 134 and int.; do. eights, 135 and int; Va. Cent'l R. R. bonds, 24 mort., 132 and int; James River and Kanawha stock, 22; Clover Hill R. R. Co., 200; Insurance, Bank and Trading Co.'s shares, as last quoted. It is announced that the Secretary of the Treasury will soon invite bids for $50,000,000 bonds—interest payable in cotton at the rate of 6d. sterling per pound—in accordance with the provisions of the "Funding Act," passed by Congress at its last session.

PRODUCE, PROVISIONS, &c.—Bacon—We quote hog round at $1 45 to 1 50 per lb.—Beans, $12 to 15 per bushel. Butter, $1 25 to 1 50 per lb. Cheese, $1 50 to 1 75 per lb.—Dried Fruit—Apples, $10 to 11; Peaches, $15 per bushel. Eggs, $1 50 to 1 75 per dozen.—Forage—Hay, $3 to 10 per 100 lbs; Sheaf Oats and Fodder, about the same price. Lard, $1 45 to 1 50 per lb. Peas, $12 to 15 per bus. Potatoes—Irish, none in market; would bring $20 per bushel. Corn, $10 per bushel, and scarce. Corn Meal, $10 50 to 11 per bushel. Flour—Superfine, $31 to 32; Extra, $33 to 34; Family, $35 to 36 per bbl. Oats, $6 per bus. Wheat—but little offering, we quote at $6 50 to 7 per bushel.

[illegible]—Sugar has declined; we now quote Brown at [illegible] per lb. Coffee [illegible] per lb. Tea [illegible] per lb. Molasses [illegible] per gallon. Salt 45 cts per lb. Rice [illegible] cts per lb. Candles $2 70@3 per lb. Soap 50@55 cts per lb.

TOBACCO.—The market [illegible] except for the finer grades. There is no change in prices. We quote inferior Leaf at $10@12 50; good do. $16 to 18 00; fine bright do. $[illegible]; Lugs, $[illegible]; good do. $[illegible]; fine bright [illegible]; Manufacturing, $75@110; fine bright [illegible]; Stemming, $[illegible]; Shipping [illegible] morning was appointed for secret session, for the examination of charges against some one or two members of the Conference, involving their integrity.

Rev. D. J. C. Slaughter was, at his own request, placed on the supernumerary list.

Financial and Commercial.

Since our last report specie has gone up considerably. We now quote $15 as the buying, and $16 as the selling price for gold. Silver is bought by the brokers at $12, and sold at $13.

Bank Notes.—Southern bank notes are bought by the brokers at $2.75, and sold at $3.

Bonds and Stocks.—At the auction sale of Lancaster & Co., on Wednesday, bonds and stocks commanded the following figures: Confederate 8 per cent. coupons, 1861, 114; do., 1871, 112; registered bonds, 1868–9, 110; convertibles, 113 to 115; 15 million loan coupons, 100; do. registered bonds, 133½ to 135; Virginia registered bonds, 1891–'94, 253; do., 1890, 255; do., 1887, 257; registered bonds, past due, 197 to 198; North Carolina 8's, coupons, 235; city of Richmond 6's, 246; Lynchburg coupon bonds, 255; Norfolk bonds, registered, 165 to 166; Alexandria coupon bonds, 235; Va. and Tenn. railroad bonds, second mortgage, 242; Va. Central railroad bonds, second mortgage, 245; Va. Central railroad dividend bonds, 6 per cent., 210; R., F. and P. railroad 7 per cent. convertibles, 253; do. 6 per cent., 205; Orange and Alexandria railroad bonds, first mortgage, 6's, 230; Manassas Gap railroad, first mortgage, 6's, 150; Orange and Alexandria railroad stock, 56; Richmond Importing and Exporting Company, 930 to 960.

Grain.—The receipts of Grain are still very light. We have heard of sales of Wheat ranging from $10 to $15 per bushel, according to quality—the latter figure for a choice article. Corn is selling at from $15 to $18 per bushel, and very little in market.

Country Produce and Vegetables.—Bacon, hog round, $2.75; Lard $2.50; Butter $3.75; Eggs $3; Irish Potatoes $8; Sweet do. $10 to $12; Tallow Candles $3.75 to $4; Salt 40 to 45c. These are the wholesale rates.

In the city markets fresh meats are worth $1.25 to $1.50 for Beef and Mutton, and $2 for Pork; Chickens, $6 to $8 per pair; Ducks, $7 to $8 per pair; Butter, $4.50 to $5 per lb.; Sweet Potatoes, $2.50 per half peck; Irish Potatoes, $2 per half peck.

Groceries.—Coffee, wholesale, $9 per lb.; retail, $10; Sugar, $3 to $3.25; Sorghum Molasses, wholesale, $12 per gallon, and $14 to $15 at retail.

Liquors.—Whiskey, $55 to $65 per gallon; Apple Brandy, $45 to $50; high proof Rum, $50; French Brandy, $60 to $100.

Leather.—The supply of Leather in the market is somewhat improved. We quote Sole Leather $6.50 to $7.50 per lb.; Upper do., $7.50 to $8; Harness do., $6.50 to $6; Hides are quoted at $2.50 to $2.75 for dry, and $1.50 for salted green; Tanners' Oil, $4 to $5 per gallon.

Tobacco.—The demand for the different brands of Tobacco is improved, and prices tending upwards.

The "English" Imported Goods.—The remaining cargo of the Margaret and Jessie, a block ade running steamer, captured by the Fulton, has been taken out at New York. Most of the original cargo had been thrown into the sea or burned before she was captured. A New York paper says:

landed. The town of Brownsville was set on fire by Confederate cavalry, but the Unionists resisted them and a bloody fight occurred. (?) The 13th Maine regiment was ordered to the support of the Unionists.

Gen. W. H. F. Lee, confined at Fortress Monroe for several months, has been sent to Fort-Lafayette.

The steamer Sunnyside was destroyed by fire a few days ago, near Island No. 16, twenty-six miles below New Madrid. The cargo consisted of 1,300 bales of cotton, which, together with the boat, is a total loss. Thirty passengers, including eight ladies, were drowned in attempting to get ashore.

It is rumored that Gen. Gamble and Lieut. Gov. Gamble, of Missouri, will shortly tender their resignations.

An arrival from Havana brings later advices from Mexico. It is said that the Interventionists have been defeated in various engagements by the troops of the Juarez Government. It is also said that the party of the Republic is gaining strength with the people. Gen. Comonfort is at the head of the National troops. The arrival of Maximilian is anxiously looked for by the friends of the monarchy.

The Confederate steamer Georgia put into Santa Cruz, Tenneriffe, on the 15th ult., to obtain supplies of coal and provisions.

A lot of rebel documents were captured in the Cornubia, among them letters from Mr. R. De Leon, of Paris, to President Davis, in one of which he expresses the belief that there is no intention on the part of France to recognize the Confederacy.

Earl Russell has proposed a basis of negotiation between Germany and Denmark on the Holstein question.

It is stated that the authority to build the rebel rams in France was given under the assurance that they were intended for the Chinese.

From Texas-Mississippi.—A correspondent of the Mobile Advertiser, writing from Houston, Texas, gives the annexed news:

Investigations are being made into the alleged cotton frauds in Texas. No discoveries have yet been made, though it is believed there will be such, implicating several agents of the Government, if not officials.

Public meetings are being held all over Texas, and a serious revival of patriotism is in progress. Gov. Lubbock, Col. J. A. Wilcox, Judge Gray, Col. W. Carter, Judge Oldham, and Gen. Gano, are the principal speakers.

The Yankee General Franklin, with a force said to number 20,000, has been for several weeks slowly advancing from Vermillion, La., in the direction of Alexandria, on Red river. At this date his force is divided, one section being at Opelousas and the other at Washington. Alexandria is threatened; but, unless heavily reinforced, the Federals will hardly be able to reach that point, for Gen. Dick Taylor, with his force, is in a position to oppose their advance much further in that direction. A battle at or near Moundville is imminent, and we have not much doubt that the result will be favorable to our army.

Confederate money in Houston, which has been as low as twelve for one, is now five for one, and steadily advancing.

Our troops throughout the Mississippi Department are now well clothed, well fed and in the best of spirits.

In regard to the rumors about disaster among our troops west of the Mississippi river, the Advertiser's correspondent says: "Do not believe any report that may reach you that our troops in Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas are deserting or becoming demoralized for any cause. Such is not the case anywhere. On the contrary there was never more loyalty than at present among them, as the enemy will yet learn, if he ventures too far within our borders. Do not give yourselves any uneasiness about us on this side; we are all right, and will keep up our end of the pole."

The Federals hold Little Rock, but no other point in this vicinity, and at present seem disposed to remain very quiet.

There is an abundance of everything to eat all through this country—plenty of salt at $3 per bush-

RICHARD B. WASHINGTON, being first duly sworn, deposes and says, as follows:

By Mr. Harrison:

1 Q. Mr. Washington, please state your place of residence, your age and your occupation.

A. My present place of residence is Richmond, Virginia; I am in my 27th year; I am a clerk in the employ of John L. Williams & Sons.

2 Q. Mr. Washington, did you make a comparison of some of the quotations and sales of stocks and bonds shown on what is called the record of exhibits filed in this case by the plaintiff—I refer now to Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit No. 2—with the book of Davenport & Co. introduced in evidence, being the "Blotter," showing the record of sales of stocks and bonds made by them during the year 1863?

A. Yes; Mr. Le Gendre and myself checked those up, and then I went back over it and compared them, and also compared them with the Dispatch, I believe.

3 Q. I hand you a statement, which I will ask you to file with your deposition as "Exhibit No. 1," containing certain data in relation to the sales of the securities named thereon. Will you please state if that is the result of the work which you did, and which you have just mentioned in your preceding answer?

A. Yes, sir, this is one of them. I believe there were several.

By Mr. Conrad:

4 Q. Do you know that they are accurate, and correct?

A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOLT: The defendant objects to the exhibit just filed, upon the ground that it is irrelevant and immaterial; and upon the further ground that it does not fall within the purview of the supplemental testimony that is now being taken at the suggestion of the Master.

By Mr. Harrison:

5 Q. Now, Mr. Washington, the first reference on the exhibit you have just filed is to Davenport & Co.'s folio, page 36. Does that mean the Blotter? If so, please turn to that page and see if you find there the record of the sale described on your exhibit.

A. I would not recognize the book by its name, but would recognize it when I see it. (Witness here turns to page 36 of the Blotter.)

6 Q. Do you find on that page the entry of the sale under date of April 8th, 1863, of Virginia State sixes, at 114?

A. Yes, sir, here it is, $5,000 sold at the price of 114.

7 Q. Now on page 38 do you find the entry of the sale of $1,400 Virginia State sixes?

A. Yes, here it is, 1400 at 114, and 500 at 112; and another 500 at 114.

8 Q. Those entries then which appear on your exhibit, are found on pages 36 and 38 of Davenport & Co.'s book—the Blotter?

A. Yes.

9 Q. You say you checked those entries with the Dispatch, as of those dates, and found the sales advertised there, as shown on your exhibit?

A. Yes. Have you the other exhibit? I can tell better by that.

NOTE: An adjournment was here taken to 3:15 P. M. at which time the deposition of the witness was resumed, as follows:

By Mr. Harrison:

10 Q. Please look at page 330 of the printed record, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2, and state whether or not any quotation is shown of Virginia State sixes, under date of April 8th, 1863.

A. Yes.

11 Q. What is it?

A. Virginia sixes, registered, Davenport & Co., 112, asked 114.

12 Q. Now look at page 36 of Davenport & Co.'s Blotter, and state whether there is any sale of Virginia State sixes corresponding to that quotation.

A. On page 36 of Davenport & Co.'s book, I see Virginia State sixes, 5,000 sold at the rate of 114.

13 Q. Now look at page 330 of the printed record, Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit No. 2, and state whether there is any quotation of Virginia State sixes for April 8th, 1863?

A. Yes.

14 Q. What is it?

A. Virginia sixes, registered, Davenport & Co., at 112 and 114.

15 Q. Now look on page 38 of Davenport & Co.'s Blotter, and state whether or not any sales of Virginia sixes were made on that day, corresponding with that quotation.

A. On page 38, I find Virginia State sixes, 1,400 were sold at rate of 114; 500 were sold at rate of 112, and 500 again, at the rate of 114.

16 Q. Now look at page 335 of the printed record, Plaintiffs Revised Exhibit No. 2, and state what quotation is shown there of James River & Kanawha stock, under date of May 2, 1863?

A. On May 2, 1863, Davenport & Co., 20, James River & Kanawha Company.

17 Q. Those are the quotations?

A. Yes, sir.

18 Q. Now look at page 48 of Davenport & Co.'s Blotter, and see whether there are any sales of that date corresponding with that quotation?

A. James River & Kanawha, 3 shares were sold at $20 per share.

19 Q. Do you find any other sales on that day?

A. James River & Kanawha, 128 shares at $20 a share.

20 Q. For whose account?

A. For the account of John Jones & Co., the first one—and John Jones for the second one.

21 Q. Now look at page 337 of the printed record, Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit No. 2, and state what market quotation is there shown of Virginia Central Railway stock under date of May 2, 1863?

A. Here it is—Davenport & Co., 94; that is the quotation.

22 Q. Now look at page 48 of Davenport & Co.'s Blotter, and state whether any sale is there recorded of Virginia Central Railway stock, corresponding with that quotation.

A. On page 48, the Virginia Central Railroad stock, 10 shares, were sold at $94 per share.

23 Q. Now look again on page 337 of Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit No. 2, printed record, and state if there is any market quotation shown of Virginia Central Railroad stock under date of July 22, 1863.

A. Under date of July 22, 1863, Davenport & Co., 116 is the quotation.

24 Q. Now look at page 62 of Davenport & Co.'s Blotter and state whether any sale is there recorded of Virginia Central Railroad stock, corresponding with that quotation.

A. On page 62 of Davenport & Co.'s Blotter there were 18 shares of Virginia Central Railroad stock sold at 116, on that day, July 22, 1863.

25 Q. Now look at page 339 of the printed record, Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit No. 2, and states what quotation is there shown under date of May 16, 1863, of Richmond & Danville Railroad Co.'s stock.

A. On May 16, 1863, Davenport & Co., 121 is the quotation.

26 Q. Now look at page 54 of the Davenport & Co.'s Blotter, and state whether or not on the same day any sale of Richmond & Danville stock is shown, corresponding with that quotation.

A. Richmond & Danville Railroad stock was sold, 10 shares at the rate of 121, on that date.

27 Q. Now look on page 341 of the printed record, Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit No. 2, and state what quotation is there shown under date of April 8, 1863, of Farmers Bank stock?

A. April 8, 1863, the quotation was 131.

28 Q. Now look at page 36 of Davenport & Co.'s Blotter, and state whether on the same date any sale is shown of that stock, corresponding with that quotation?

A. Farmers Bank of Virginia, 40 shares at 131, sold.

29 Q. I now hand you, and ask you to file as Exhibit No. 2 with your deposition, a schedule of sales taken from the books of Davenport & Co. relating to the plaintiff's revised exhibit No. 2, showing sales of Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac stock, Virginia Central Railroad stock, James River and Kanawha stock, Richmond & Danville Railroad Co.'s stock, Virginia & Tennessee Railroad stock, and Richmond & Petersburg Railroad stock, under the dates in 1863 shown on that schedule. Please state whether you prepared that from the Blotter of Davenport & Co.

A. This is the one I prepared from Davenport & Co.'s book, right here.

30 Q. Please state if that is an accurate transcript from the Blotter of Davenport & Co. which has been introduced in evidence.

A. This was taken direct from the Blotter of Davenport & Co.

31 Q. By you?

A. By me—by Mr. Le Gendre and myself together, and I checked it up.

32 Q. And is correct?

A. And is correct.

33 Q. Now I hand you a schedule of sales from Davenport & Co.'s books, relating to the plaintiff's revised exhibit No. 2, showing sales of the Farmers Bank stock, the Exchange Bank stock, and the Bank of Virginia stock, under the dates in 1863, shown on that schedule. Please examine it and state whether you prepared it, and whether it is an accurate transcript from the Blotter of Davenport & Co.

A. This was prepared by me, and is an accurate transcript from Davenport & Co.'s Blotter.

34 Q. Please file it with your deposition, marked "Exhibit No. 3."

A. I file it herewith, marked as requested.

35 Q. I now hand you a schedule showing sales of Virginia State bonds under the dates in 1863 shown on said schedule, showing also the number of the page of Davenport & Co.'s folio. Please examine it and say whether you prepared it, and whether it is a transcript from the blotter of Davenport & Co., and whether it is accurate.

A. This is a transcript that was prepared by Mr. Le Gendre and myself, and was copied by me and checked up by Mr. Le Gendre and myself, from Davenport & Co.'s Blotter, and is accurate.

36 Q. Please file it with your deposition as Exhibit No. 4.

A. I file it herewith, marked as requested.

Cross-Examination:

By Mr. Holt:

1 XQ. How many exhibits have you filed with your deposition?

A. Four, I believe, sir.

2 XQ. And those exhibits show a list of sales of bonds and stocks by Davenport & Co.?

A. Yes, sir.

3 XQ. You say that you made them up from the books of Davenport & Co.?

A. Yes, sir, they were taken off of the Blotter of Davenport & Co.

4 XQ. How do you know that that is a book of Davenport & Co.?

A. I do not know, of my own personal knowledge, that that is a book of Davenport & Co., but it shows, I believe, that the sales were made by the firm.

MR. CONRAD: They were produced to you as the books of Davenport & Co.?

WITNESS: Yes.

5 XQ. Where did that Blotter come from?

A. My understanding is that this Blotter was taken from the old vault in the room there (indicates room).

6 XQ. Did you take it therefrom?

A. No, I did not.

7 XQ. Are you familiar with the handwriting in that book?

A. I am not.

8 XQ. Did you make the entries in it?

A. I did not.

9 XQ. Do you know who did?

A. I do not.

10 XQ. You have no personal knowledge with respect to that book, at all, Mr. Washington, as I understand you?

A. No personal knowledge.

11 XQ. Then when you made up these exhibits you made them from the book which you have described, but you do not know who made up the book?

A. No, sir.

12 XQ. You did not take those exhibits where they purport to give the sale prices of stocks, from any newspaper, did you?

A. I do not understand the question. Do you mean did I compare them with any newspaper?

13 XQ. No. You made up the exhibits—you got the data for your exhibits out of this book supposedly of Davenport & Co.; you did not get the data for those exhibits out of any newspaper, did you?

A. No; the first transcript was made direct from the Blotter of Davenport & Co., and where the Dispatch quotation is shown it was compared with the paper, only.

14 XQ. How many sales are mentioned in your first exhibit?

A. I have not the faintest idea, without counting them. (Witness here counts them.) Twenty-four.

15 XQ. What dates do they cover? What period of time do they fall within?

A. April, '63, and July, '63.

16 XQ. Twenty-four sales then, occurring in the months from April, '63, down to and including July, '63; is that right?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

17 XQ. Are any of those sales given in the plaintiff's revised exhibit No. 2, printed in the record in this cause?

A. Yes, sir.

18 XQ. How many of them?

A. I believe all of them are given in plaintiff's revised exhibit No. 2, except one that was compared with the Dispatch.

19 XQ. How many of those 24 sales were bond sales, and how many were stock sales?

A. Sixteen of them were of bonds, and 6 of stock—that is, including the one that was compared with the Dispatch, and that does not show whether it is stock or bonds.

20 XQ. How many sales are given in your exhibit No. 2?

A. Thirty-four—all of which are stock.

21 XQ. How many of those are set forth in the plaintiff's revised exhibit No. 2?

A. Well, I have not compared this one; I can pretty quickly tell though.

22 XQ. Within what periods did those sales occur?

A. They fall between April, '63, and October, '64, inclusive.

23 XQ. How many sales are embraced in your exhibit No. 3?

A. 17.

24 XQ. How many of them are bonds and how many stocks?

A. They are all bank stock.

25 XQ. Within what period of time did they fall—or during what period were those sales made?

A. They were made during the period from April, '63, to October, '64, inclusive.

26 XQ. How many sales are embraced in your exhibit No. 4?

A. 137.

27 XQ. What period of time do they cover?

A. From April, 1863, to March, 1864, inclusive.

28 XQ. Do any of those sales embrace stocks, or are they all bond sales?

A. All on this exhibit seem to be Virginia sixes, bonds, and Virginia Treasury Notes; also Virginia Treasury Bonds.

29 XQ. They are not stocks then, in any company?

A. No, they are not stocks of any company, at all.

30 XQ. Now, all of these exhibits, as I understand you, Mr. Washington, were made up from what you have supposed to be the books of Davenport & Co.?

A. That is true.

31 XQ. You have not made up those lists of sales embraced in those exhibits, or either of them, from any newspaper publication of quotations, have you?

A. They are not made up from any newspaper publications; they are made up from the book of Davenport & Co.

32 XQ. Do those four exhibits cover all of the sales that are disclosed on the books of Davenport & Co.?

A. No.

33 XQ. There are other sales, are there?

A. There are other sales.

34 XQ. Covering other periods of time?

A. Yes.

35 XQ. How old are you, Mr. Washington?

A. I am in my 27th year.

36 XQ. How long have you been in business in the city of Richmond?

A. I have been with John L. Williams & Sons since March of this year.

37 XQ. Did you ever know Davenport & Co.?

A. No.

38 XQ. Did you ever know any member of the firm of Davenport & Co.?

A. No.

39 XQ. Did you ever work in their office, at all?

A. No.

40 XQ. Have had no business transactions with them, or either member of the firm?

A. None whatever.

41 XQ. I believe you have already stated that you have no personal knowledge with respect to the genuineness of this book of Davenport & Co.?

A. Yes.

42 XQ. You have told us all that you know about it?

A. Yes.

And further this deponent saith not.

(Signature waived.)

MR. HARRISON: We will ask the stenographer to copy into the record the market quotations shown in the Richmond Dispatch, of Richmond, Va., which are on file in the State Library, in the city of Richmond, under the following dates: April 8, 1863; April 18, 1863; May 2, 1863; May 16, 1863; June 16, 1863; July 22, 1863; January 4, 1861, and November 2, 1860.

MR. HOLT: To the copying into the record of the quotations requested, the defendant objects; first, because they are irrelevant; second, immaterial; and third, because they are beyond the purview of the direction of the Master.

NOTE: The following lists of quotations were copied from the Richmond Dispatch, of the dates mentioned, by the Stenographer, pursuant to agreement of counsel.

RICHMOND DISPATCH.

Saturday Morning, May 2, 1863.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

Friday, May 1, 1863.

SPECIE AND BANK NOTES:—The market is dull at last quotations—$4 premium for gold, $3.75 for silver, and 65 a 70 per cent. for bank notes.

BONDS AND STOCKS:—At Messrs. Davenport & Co.'s sale, today, the following prices were obtained: Confederate Bonds, 15M. loan, coupons, 195, closing at 192 for 16,550; do. do. registered, 121 a 122; do. do. 100M. loan, 106⅛ a 107; do. do. new issue, eights, 102 a 103; do. do 8 per cent. convertible, 106 a 108; Va. 6's, registered, 111¼ a 111½; North Carolina bonds, old issue, 173½; Missouri 6's, 4 coupons, 154; Va. and Tennessee Railroad bonds, 2nd mortgage, 121 a 123⅛; Richmond and Liverpool Packet Co. stock, 650; 1 share Richmond Importing and Exporting Co., 725; Traders Bank, 117; Bank of Richmond, 98 a 99; Virginia Central R.R. 94; James River and Kanawha Canal, 20; $10,500 coupons of the 15M. loan, 161; $1000 Alabama bank notes, 158½.

PRODUCE AND PROVISIONS:—The Bacon market varies, according to quality, from $1.10 to 1.30 for hoground; some that is badly salted is run off at the first-named price, while as high as $1.35 has been obtained for an extra fine article, within two days past; Beans, $18 a 20 per bushel; Butter, $2.25 a 3 per pound; Corn, $6 a 6.50 per bushel; with an advancing tendency. Corn Meal is unsettled, sales at $7.50 per bushel; Dried Apples, $12.50 a 13; do. Peaches, $18 per bushel; Flour—Superfine, $31 a 32; Extra, $34; Family, $35 per bbl.; Eggs, $1.25 per dozen; Hay—sales at $15 per cwt.; Lard, $1.65 a 1.70 per pound; Oats, $5 a 5.50 per bushel; Potatoes—Irish, $8 a 10, Sweet, $10 a 11; Pease, Black-eyed, $18 a 20 per bushel; Wheat, $6.50 a 7 per bushel.

TOBACCO: There is no new feature in the tobacco market, except a continued activity in the demand for the finer qualities, which are scarce. We correct our quotations from actual sales, as follows: Common Lugs, $10 a 15½; good, $16 a 22½; common Leaf, $25 a 30; good, $35 to 45; fine Shipping, $50 to 57½; fine Manufacturing Leaf, $75 to 100, and Wrappers of bright color from $100 to 205.

GROCERIES: Sugars, $1.20 to 1.40—the latter the retail price; Molasses, $10 to 12 per gallon; Coffee, $4 to 4.50; Tea, $10 to 14; Rice, 20 to 25c.; Salt, 45 to 55c. per pound; Soap, 50 to 60c.

RICHMOND DISPATCH.

Saturday Morning, May 16, 1863.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

Friday, May 15, 1863.

MONEY, BONDS, Etc.:—The brokers have had a dull season for the past ten days. The transactions in gold have been confined to occasional sales at $4.25 premium. Nothing of importance in Bank Notes. At Messrs. Davenport & Co.'s auction sale, today, Confederate Treasury Notes, interest bearing, were sold at 98½ a 99; also the following bonds, with interest added: Confederate Bonds, coupon, 15 million loan, 188 to 184; do. do 100 million loan (1868 to 1871) 102¼ to 103; do. do. registered (1881), 106; Virginia sixes, 111¾ to 112; Va. Central R.R. bonds, first mortgage, 125; also North Carolina 6's, old issue, at 171 flat; and the following stocks: 2 shares Richmond and Liverpool Packet Co., $645; 9 do. Importing and Exporting Co., $735; 10 do., Richmond and Danville R.R. Co., 121; 3 do. Richmond and York River R.R. Co., $50.

PRODUCE, Etc.:—Breadstuffs continue scarce and high. Corn is nominally $8.50 per bushel, and Corn Meal, $9. Wheat, $6.50 a 7 per bushel; there is but a limited supply of flour in market, and we give the quotations as follows: Superfine, $31 a 32; Extra, $35; Family, $36 per bbl. Oats, $5 a 5.50 per bushel; Irish Potatoes, $8 a 9 per bushel; Sweet, $10 a 11; Bacon firm at $1.35 for hoground; Baled Hay, $12 per cwt.; Butter, $2.50 to 3.50, the latter at retail.

TOBACCO:—There have been no recent sales in public, and there is no data by which to fix quotations. We will give this in our next semi-weekly report.

GROCERIES, Etc.:—The following prices were obtained at the auction sale of Robinson, Adams & Co. today: Common Sugar in hhds., $1.21 to 1.23; in barrels, $1.22 to 1.27; Molasses, $10.30 per gallon; Coffee, $3.85 to $4.; Black Teas, $6.30 to 6.70; Young Hyson and Imperial, $7; Bacon, $1.40; Peanuts, $11.75 a 12 per bushel; Dried Apples, $11.50 to 12.25; Candles, $2.75 per lb.; Rice, 18 to 20c.; Clover Seed, $20 per bushel; Potatoes, $6.50 to 7.25 per bushel

RICHMOND DISPATCH.

Tuesday Morning, June 16, 1863.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

Thursday, June 15, 1863.

SPECIE AND BANK NOTES:—The rise in the "precious metals" continues, and curiosity will soon be excited to discover to what height of premium they will go. If there were only one hundred barrels of flour in Richmond, prices would in a very short time go up to a "pretty figure," and so, when the amount of gold offered for sale is reduced to a mere handful, as comparatively speaking it is today, we should not be surprised that the premium ranges high, very high. The brokers are now offering $7.50 for $1 in gold, and offering to sell, when they have any, at $8 a 8.50. Bank notes are now quotable at 90 a 95 per cent. premium—auction sales of $5,650 a 92½.

BONDS AND STOCKS:—The market continues active. At Messrs. Richmond, Virginia, November 5, 1914.

I, Richard B. Washington, hereby certify that the items herein before given on pages 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, are transcripts of sales made by Messrs. Davenport and Company of the City of Richmond, and are taken from their Sales Record Book found in an old vault, the said Sales Record Book not having been heretofore known to exist until found on October 30th, 1914, as certified to by Coleman Wortham, Esq., a member of the firm of Davenport and Company, dated November 3, 1914.

RICHARD B. WASHINGTON.

STATE OF VIRGINIA,
CITY OF RICHMOND. To wit:

I, William R. Trigg, a notary public for and in the City of Richmond, State of Virginia, do certify that this day personally appeared before me in my said City, Richard B. Washington, whose name is signed to the foregoing writing, bearing date of November 4, 1914, and made oath that the statements made therein as of his own knowledge are true.

Given under my hand and notarial seal the 5th day of November, 1914.

WILLIAM R. TRIGG, Notary Public.

GEORGE L. CHRISTIAN, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

Examined by Mr. Anderson

1 Q. Judge Christian, please state your age, residence and occupation?

A. I am in my 74th year; I reside in Richmond, and my occupation is that of a lawyer.

2 Q. Please be kind enough to state what positions, civil, political or judicial you have held during your life in the city of Richmond?

A. I have been President of the City Council; President of the Chamber of Commerce; President of the National Bank of Virginia; President of the Virginia State Insurance Company, and I was at one time Clerk of the Court of Appeals of Virginia.

3 Q. What judicial position have you held?

A. I was Judge of the Hustings Court of the City of Richmond, five years.

4 Q. Are you acquainted with the standing and reputation of the Dispatch newspaper of the city of Richmond?

A. I think so, sir.

5 Q. How long have you known that paper?

A. I have known it ever since I have lived in Richmond, which has been the 1st of July, 1860.

6 Q. Please state what is the character of that paper—whether it is a reputable newspaper, and regarded as reliable?

A. I think it has always been regarded not only as a reputable newspaper, but a very reliable and accurate newspaper.

7 Q. Are you prepared to state what the standing of that newspaper has been in reference to its financial and commercial reports?

A. I never heard them questioned in any way, Major. I believe the financial reports as contained in that paper were generally relied on, as much so as reports in any newspaper.

8 Q. What are you prepared to say in reference to its quotations of the market values, and sales of stocks and bonds, and securities generally, sold in the markets of Richmond?

A. My opinion is that they were recognized as being reliable, and were regarded as authentic, not only by this community, but by the different communities throughout the circulation of the paper.

9 Q. Have you been acquainted, and if so, how long, with the brokerage firms of John A. Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co.?

A. I have known them—at least I knew the concern of John A. Lancaster & Son, afterwards Lancaster & Williams —as long as the concerns existed, I mean from the period I came to Richmond to live. I came here as a boy, in 1860.

10 Q. What has been the character, standing and reputation of those firms, in this community?

A. Very high.

11 Q. Will you answer the same question with reference to the firm of Davenport & Co.?

A. I would make the same answer with reference to the firm of Davenport & Co. I knew all the members of both firms, personally.

12 Q. And both were reputable firms?

A. Just as high as any firms in the country, I believe.

Cross-Examination.

By Mr. Holt:

1 XQ. Judge Christian, have you any personal knowledge with respect to the market reports, or market quotations, upon stocks, furnished by Lancaster & Co. or John A. Lancaster & Son, to the Richmond Dispatch?

A. None whatever, sir.

2 XQ. Have you any personal knowledge with respect to the fact, whether or not Davenport & Co. ever furnished to that newspaper market quotations on stocks?

A. No, sir. Personal knowledge, you say?

3 XQ. Yes.

A. No.

4 XQ. Then you have no personal knowledge, as I understand it, Judge, as to whether Davenport & Co. ever furnished any market quotations upon stocks, to the Richmond Dispatch, in the years 1860, '61, '62 or '63?

A. None whatever, sir.

5 XQ. You have no personal knowledge upon the subject whether or not John A. Lancaster & Son or Lancaster & Co. ever furnished any such quotations, in said years, to said newspaper?

A. No, sir.

And further this deponent saith not.

(Signature waived)

JAMES B. PACE, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

Examined by Mr. Anderson:

1 Q. Mr. Pace, will you please state your age, residence and occupation?

A. I am in my 78th year, sir. I am a resident of the city of Richmond, and am at this time Treasurer of the City.

2 Q. What positions, civil or financial, have you held during your life of constant credit and honor?

A. I was President of the Planters National Bank of this city for thirteen years, from 1882; prior to that I was a manufacturer of tobacco.

3 Q. Where did you reside during the War between the States?

A. Danville, Virginia.

4 Q. What was your occupation during the war?

A. I was a manufacturer of woolen cloths.

5 Q. In the city of Danville?

A. Yes, sir.

6 Q. Were you acquainted with the Richmond Dispatch newspaper during the period of the war?

A. Yes, sir.

7 Q. Do you know the character and standing of that paper, in the community in which its circulation extended?

A. The character of it was of the highest order; it was so regarded.

8Q. What was the standing and credit given to its financial columns and reports?

A. It was considered very reliable.

9 Q. Please state whether the reports published in that paper of sales of stocks and bonds and securities generally, and the market quotations of those securities, were accepted by the business public as reliable, during that period?

A. I think so. As far as I know, the public received them as being accurate and reliable.

10Q. Were they, within your knowledge, of that character?

A. I really could not say of my own knowledge. I, of course, noticed the quotations every day or two, as made by the different brokers of the city, which were regarded as reliable.

11Q. Were you acquainted with the standing and reputation and character of the firm of brokers and bankers doing business under the firm names of John A. Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co., during that period?

A. Only by reputation.

12 Q. I wish to know what their reputation was.

A. It was considered to be of the very best, and of the highest order.

13 Q. What was the reputation, standing and character of the firm of brokers and stock auctioneers doing business in this city at that time under the firm name of Davenport & Co.?

A. It was considered to be of the highest order.

Cross-Examination.

By Mr. Holt:

1XQ. Mr. Pace, when did you move to the city of Richmond; in what year?

A. I moved here, sir, in December, '65.

2XQ. You were not then a resident of the city of Richmond at any time prior to the year 1865?

A. No, sir; not prior to December, 1865.

3 XQ. Where did you live prior to that time?

A. Danville, Virginia.

4 XQ. How far is Danville from Richmond?

A. One hundred and forty miles southwest.

5 XQ. Did you know the editors or proprietors of the Richmond Dispatch prior to 1865?

A. Not personally.

6 XQ. Did you know any member of the firm of Lancaster & Co. or John A. Lancaster & Son?

A. Not personally.

7 XQ. Did you know any member of the firm of Davenport & Co.?

A. Not personally.

8 XQ. Did you ever have any stock dealings with either of those firms prior to 1865?

A. None whatever.

And further this deponent saith not.

(Signature waived.)

STIPULATION.

It is agreed by and between counsel that the following may be taken and read as the testimony of RICHARD W. MAURY, a gentleman who resides in the city of Richmond, Virginia, who is over 80 years of age, and who was engaged in the brokerage business in the said city, during the period of the Civil War:

Richmond, Va., October 30th, 1914.

The firms of Lancaster & Company, Brokers, and Davenport & Company, Stock Auctioneers, were to my personal knowledge, reputable firms in Richmond during the Civil War, 1861-1865. The members of the above firms were personally known to me. I further beg to state that the Richmond Dispatch was a reputable paper during the above mentioned period, and in its columns were found Stock and Bond quotations which were deemed reliable.

STIPULATION

It is agreed by and between counsel that the following may be taken and read in this cause as the testimony of John B. Purcell:

Richmond, Va., Nov. 4th, 1914.

I, JOHN B. PURCELL, of the City of Richmond, President of the First National Bank of Richmond, hereby certify that I have known the firms of Jno. A. Lancaster & Son and Lancaster & Co. for many years up to the time the succeeding firm went out of business, and during this period was embraced the time occupied by the late Civil War in which I was engaged; that they were dealers in stocks and bonds and other securities in the City of Richmond, and that I further have known and seen advertisements of market reports of stocks and bonds advertised to be sold and as sold in the financial columns of public prints. I have also been acquainted with the firm of Davenport & Co., of Richmond, who have also been dealers in stocks and bonds and are at this present day, and were during the period of the Civil War. The above firms were known to me as reputable concerns of this city.

I recall financial notices and market reports in the Richmond Dispatch, a newspaper in good standing in the city of Richmond, and in the prints of its predecessor known as The Dispatch and published in the city of Richmond, and that such market reports have always been regarded as dependable and relied upon by the business community of this city.

STATE OF VIRGINIA,

CITY OF RICHMOND, to-wit:

I, O. RAYMOND BROWN, a Notary Public in and for the City of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, do hereby certify that the foregoing depositions of John L. Williams, William A. Anderson, William H. Palmer, John P. Branch, Coleman Wortham, Richard B. Washington, George L. Christian and James B. Pace, were duly taken before me at the times and places mentioned in the caption thereof, after the said witnesses had been sworn according to law. And I do further certify that by consent of counsel both for the plaintiff and defendant, the signatures of the witnesses to their respective depositions were waived.

Given under my hand and Notarial Seal, this 21st day November, 1914.

O. RAYMOND BROWN,
Notary Public.

Fee of Notary (and Stenographer as such) $41.60.

New York, December 7th, 1914.

Met pursuant to direction of the Master.

PRESENT:

Hon. William A. Anderson,
Hon. Randolph Harrison,
Sandford Robinson, Esq.,
of counsel for plaintiff.

Hon. A. A. Lilly, Attorney General,
Hon. Charles E. Hogg,
Hon. John H. Holt,
of counsel for defendant.

THE MASTER: I understand that the counsel for Virginia claim that there are authorities which show that the book value is not a legal factor to be considered in determining the value of the stock. My recollection of my examination of the authorities is that I have not found any such authority. Now what I would like the counsel for Virginia to do is to give me the name of the case on which they rely for that proposition, and I will have the book sent for, so that we can discuss it, so that we can submit it to the other side, and I can also see it myself. If there is a case or cases that hold that, I would like to see them and look them over before we get through with this hearing. Now, Mr. Robinson, if you will give me, at your convenience, the volume or volumes that contain the cases that you rely on for that proposition, I will send out and get them, and we can look them over, and can have that point cleared up before we adjourn this hearing.

How far along are the counsel on each side with the analysis of the facts bearing upon all the items, that I desired to have them make?

MR. ROBINSON: I will be ready not later than Wednesday.

THE MASTER: How is it with you, Mr. Lilly?

MR. LILLY: Ours is under headway. There are some possible corrections and additions.

MR. HOGG: That is the analysis that you called for in your letter?

THE MASTER: Yes, that is the analysis of the facts. What I want to be able to do with regard to that is, I want to be able to state in my report, and I want to be able to refer to everything that either side contends ought to be considered under any of the items, and the various items, so that I shall not overlook anything that ought to be taken into account. Without that analysis I could not be sure that I would do that.

MR. HOLT: Is it your purpose, Mr. Robinson, to print your analysis?

MR. ROBINSON: No.

THE MASTER: I do not require either side to do that. I would like it better, but I do not require it.

MR. LILLY: If we have the time of course we will print ours.

MR. HOLT: It is more easily handled.

THE MASTER: You both realize the purpose for which I want this analysis. I do not want to go on with a lot of these items, and later on discover that I have omitted something that I ought to have taken into account, when I reach my conclusion, when I come to take up the item. I assume that the counsel are better qualified to call my attention to everything involved than I am. And unless I happened to have an index that stated everything, it is quite possible that I might leave out something that I ought to have had in mind; and that I do not want to do.

MR. HOLT: Our analysis is practically completed. There are a few additions and corrections; and we went over it last night. But I suspect we will print it. That will take a day or two.

THE MASTER: That will be agreeable to me.

MR. HOLT: I do not like to read caligraphy, and handwriting I positively cannot read. I can scarcely read my own.

MR. ROBINSON: Do you want those cases now?

THE MASTER: Yes.

MR. ROBINSON: I gave you a memorandum dated November 12th, 1914, which I sent to the gentlemen from West Virginia. It was an examination of the cases cited by them. I confine myself to that. And certain of those cases decided the point that book value was not evidence of value.

THE MASTER: Now let us have those cases.

MR. ROBINSON: They are Carey vs. Williams; it is cited in West Virginia's brief and in my memorandum.

MR. HOGG: What is the citation of Carey vs. Williams?

THE MASTER: He will give us the page.

MR. ROBINSON: That is cited on page 57 of Professor Hogg's brief.

THE MASTER: What do you say that holds?

MR. ROBINSON: I claim that it is a distinct authority against the principle contended for by the defendant. It holds that entries on the books of a corporation showing the purchase of stock by a person, and payments made by him thereon, are not prima facie evidence that he is a stockholder. The Court says at page 909 of that volume, that "Corporations are not exempt from the ordinary rules of evidence, and there is no stronger presumption of honesty, or regularity or accuracy as to their books or records than there is in the case of natural persons."

At page 911 the Court said:

"The books and records of corporations, when properly kept, are evidence of the acts and proceedings of the corporate body."

At page 912 the Court said:

"The business entries in the books of a corporation are no more evidence against its members than they are against strangers."

And it cites for that purpose Rudd vs. Robinson in 216 New York, page 113.

THE MASTER: That does not reach the point I have in my mind.

MR. ROBINSON: Now Rudd vs. Robinson, 216 New York, 113, the Court there states this, they say that after a careful consideration of all the cases they can find no principle upon which the account books of a corporation are evidence against a member of the corporation as to the accounts and entries therein. The officers and bookkeepers of a corporation are not agents of the members.

THE MASTER: That does not reach the point.

MR. ROBINSON: What is the point?

MR. HOLT: Upon this point, before you leave it, I know that we have a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that holds exactly to the contrary.

THE MASTER: I will tell you what I am inclined to think—I do not say that I have reached my conclusion about this—but I am inclined to hold that the reports of corporations in which the state was a stockholder, and where the state required the returns to be made to it on oath, and where the state published those reports as verities, I am inclined to hold for the purposes of this case that that is equivalent to an admission on the part of Virginia of whatever those reports show are true and in accordance with the facts. Now, that proceeds on an entirely different basis from the discussion of the Court in these two cases. I do not say that I hold that, but my mind is leaning that way. This case is differentiated from nearly every case in that respect. It would be rather unusual if Virginia was to require reports to be made to it on oath under the sanction of a statute enacted by itself, and then publish those reports to the public as accurate information, that they would not be treated later on at least as admissions of hers that the facts therein stated were correctly stated. But that is not the point that I have in my mind.

MR. ROBINSON: Just on that point—what stocks other than the banks had to be reported on under oath?

THE MASTER: All these stocks in the various improvement companies. The case before me shows that there is a statute of Virginia that requires reports of banks to be made on oath, and reports of navigation companies and railroad companies to be made on oath. Those reports were made on oath, and Virginia published them to the world as being accurate reports. Now, that was away back in 1861 and 1863, and as I say my mind is drifting towards the conclusion that that is an admission on the part of Virginia. I do not mean to say that that cannot be explained. That is only a question of the method of proving. I am speaking now of the manner of proving, not the effect of the proof. The impression that I got was this, that Virginia claimed that there were authorities that held that the book value was not a factor to be considered in reaching the actual value. Now, those cases are what I want my attention called to. The manner of the proof is one thing, and the effect of the proof is quite a different thing. Now, what I want is, if there are any cases that completely hold that book value is not a factor to be considered, I do not mean the determining factor, but is not a legal factor to be considered in reaching the actual value, I want my attention called to those cases, and I will get the cases and look them over and thresh them out here, and see what we all think about them. Do I make myself clear on that, Mr. Robinson?

MR. ROBINSON: On that proposition Judge Holt has cited a line of cases, on page 41 of this brief, under this heading:

"If stocks have no known market value, or if the quotations thereof be not obtainable, or, if obtainable, be not dependable, the actual value of the stock, by all the authorities, may be ascertained by a comparison of the assets and liabilities of the company issuing them, coupled with its activities, as evidenced by dividend declarations, or otherwise."

Now, there is a line of cases, and there does not one of them say that the book value can be considered in determining either the value of the stock or the value of the assets. I have criticised all those cases in this memorandum.

MR. HOLT: Let me reply to your brief, because it is certainly a remarkable document in the light of those cases.

THE MASTER: I have examined all those cases myself, and I have not yet found, either in your brief or in the brief submitted by the other side—and it may be that I have not carefully enough examined the cases to ascertain—I have not yet found a concrete case that holds that book value is not a factor under certain circumstances to be considered. Now, if there is such a case that holds that—I have examined Judge Holt's cases, and quite a number of them do not sustain his general proposition, but the Judge evidently was not intending to state the substance of all of his cases in his omnibus statement as to what he expected the cases to show, at least I assume that is so——

MR. HOLT: That is true.

THE MASTER: Some of them do not sustain the general statement, and others do tend to sustain it.

MR. ROBINSON: When I was interrupted by Judge Holt, when he said it was a remarkable document, I would be glad to have him point out any inaccuracies in the statement, because I tried to make it accurate.

The case of Cabbel vs. Cabbel, 111 Appellate Division, page 426, is in line with the Rudd vs. Robinson case. There the value of the stock was proved by the testimony of the person having knowledge of the corporation. The Court rejected an inventory of the assets prepared by the corporation, the Court rejected consideration of it. And they cited People vs. The Insurance Company, 107 New York, 541. And then they laid down the rule——

THE MASTER: That is a tax case, People vs. Insurance Company?

MR. ROBINSON: Yes. Then they laid down the rule that the value of shares should be determined by considering the business, property, value of the assets, amount and nature of the liabilities, dividends, market value, or any or all of these. And then the Court in that case went on to say that to get the book value of corporate assets the value of the assets would have to be estimated independently, and they could not be considered at what they were carried on the books.

THE MASTER: That all may be, but that is a question of proof. That case, I understand it, in terms does hold that the book value is an element of value.

MR. HOLT: Absolutely.

THE MASTER: That is the question I am asking. The extract you have just read in almost so many words holds that the book value is an element to be considered in reaching the value. I examined that case with great care, and also the case which precedes it, which were cases as to values under the Tax Statute. Was that the opinion of Judge Finch?

MR. ROBINSON: I do not remember.

THE MASTER: But that does not reach the point.

MR. ROBINSON: When they reject the inventory of corporate assets and take a man's testimony over the inventory prepared by the corporation, and you say that is not an authority of value, you and I cannot argue any more.

THE MASTER: I say that that authority does not pass except affirmatively in favor of the proposition that the book value of the assets, which is the same thing, the assets and property, is to be considered in reaching the value; that the question that you now refer to, or the phase of it you now refer to, is an element of proving what that value is. What I want to get is, if there is any case that holds that the book value of the assets, the property and the business of the company, which is the basis of book value, is or is not a value to be considered in reaching the value. Now, as to whether it would be proved by an inventory, one way or another here, without the testimony of witnesses, is entirely beside that proposition. What I want to get is, what the effect of the proof is if the proof is made. I am not disturbed very much as to how the facts are going to be proved under the peculiar circumstances of the case. I want to get at, is there a case that holds that the book value, or the assets and property, is not a factor to be considered in reaching the value of the stock.

MR. ROBINSON: Of course I would concede at once that the value of the assets should be considered in reaching the value of the stock. But I say that the book value is no evidence whatever, no competent evidence whatever of the value of those assets, as between Virginia and West Virginia.

MR. ANDERSON: Unless the book value is made upon some sore of approximately accurate value of the assets.

MR. HOLT: Suppose it is made under a statute and upon oath, and accepted by Virginia as being correct, and published to the world as true?

MR. LILLY: And kept in her archives.

MR. HARRISON: That is a mere assumption. No such condition of things exists, as a matter of fact.

THE MASTER: I think it comes pretty nearly being shown by the record. The record shows that there are statutes of Virginia in case of banks and in case of railroads requiring the returns to be made on them.

MR. HARRISON: What returns, the values?

THE MASTER: Yes.

MR. HARRISON: I think your Honor is mistaken.

THE MASTER: The trial balances which have been put in in this case have been made in accordance with the statute requiring them to be made on oath. Virginia was a stockholder in all those concerns, she took those returns herself, made on oath, and published them as true, and they have been circulated as such for public information ever since. The only question for me is whether, under the circumstances, that is equivalent to an admission of Virginia that they are true; not a conclusive admission, but that is on the question of the manner of proof. It is quite a different thing as to how the thing presents itself, that is as to the method of proof. Now, the question as to how it should be proved does not disturb me so much, as, if it is contended that if proved the book value is not a factor, I would like to see the cases that show it. Do I make myself clear on that?

MR. LILLY: Yes.

THE MASTER: This case that you refer to, Mr. Robinson, does not cover that.

MR. ROBINSON: Mr. Harriman wants to know how this came up.

THE MASTER: Mr. Robinson called my attention to the fact that the book value was not a factor to be considered in determining the value, not a legal factor to be considered; and pending your coming in I was asking him to give me the cases upon which he relied to establish that legal proposition. The cases that you speak of I have examined myself very carefully, and in my judgment they do not either of them show it.

MR. ROBINSON: You do not think the case of Rudd vs. Robinson, in 216 New York, shows that?

THE MASTER: No, of course it does not show that the book value of the assets and the property is to be considered.

MR. ROBINSON: I do not understand that the book value is equivalent to that.

THE MASTER: The book value is nothing under heavens but the assets and the liabilities, that is all, when you come right down to it.

MR. ROBINSON: The book value may be fifty million dollars and the assets may be worth ten thousand dollars.

THE MASTER: That is all the book value is, the contrast between the value of the assets and liabilities.

MR. ROBINSON: It is a contrast between what the books carry the assets and the liabilities at.

THE MASTER: Then it is up to me to say whether the book value is actually proved or not. Virginia is a party to this controversy, she is a stockholder in all these corporations. Under her own statutes these returns are required to be made on oath, and she published them as true, and it is from those returns thus made on oath, and thus published by her, that the facts in this case have been drawn. It would be going a long ways for me to say that that was not equivalent to an admission by Virginia that the facts stated in those returns were true, not a conclusive admission. But in the absence of any other evidence, can it be said that Virginia in 1861, in a corporation in which she is a stockholder, for the public information would require the corporation to make a return on oath of these fundamental facts, showing their trial balances, and then publish them to the world—what did she publish them for?—and then not be affected, after putting them out to the country as facts in connection with those corporations? I cannot conceive any purpose for which Virginia should require those returns to be made, and have them published, in corporations in which she herself was interested, unless it was for the purpose of publishing the facts to the public, so that the public, who are interested, the people of Virginia, who are interested in these investments, who had contributed in taxes to pay these sums that were put into these investments, would know the facts concerning these various properties in which they were interested.

I cannot conceive any reason why that should be done, except to give them the facts relating to these various corporations. That, in a general way, gives you my idea of what the proof is up to date.

MR. ROBINSON: You talk about all these balance sheets. Now, in the case of the banks there were some balance sheets. It appeared on the examination that the title to some of those accounts had been changed from "contingent fund" to "profit and loss," that there were certain bad and doubtful debts that had not been taken into account.

THE MASTER: I have all those in my mind. That is one reason why I want you people on each side to give me a complete analysis from your point of view of these various facts. For instance—I remember all those circumstances, I have gone over that already, and I have my notes already made on those particular cases, and I do not mind saying that when I get around to it I am going to take out of the assets of those corporations those doubtful accounts. Wherever they appear to be doubtful or bad they are going to be cut right out; I can tell you that right now, on both sides, so that you will know how it stands. That is one reason why I want this analysis. If I should go on and take the statement of a bank, and inadvertently omit considerations of that sort, I might reach a wrong conclusion. And that is why I want both sides in this case to call my attention in detail to anything that they wish to have considered in connection with those.

MR. ROBINSON: This is the fact that I want to call your attention to. Outside of those banks, and the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company, where there was a balance sheet, there it not another balance sheet in this case. All the other book values are merely par value as of 1856——

MR. ANDERSON: Either that or cost.

MR. ROBINSON: Plus alleged paper profits. The existence of the profits, or the substance of it, is not at all attempted to be shown.

THE MASTER: That does not affect the principle at all. That detail I want you to give me when you give me your analysis. And if you will all give me your analyses, and give them carefully, you may be sure that everything you say will be considered by me in reaching my conclusion. I am discussing now the question of principle. There may be but one balance sheet to which this question applies. I do not see why Virginia is not to be treated here like any other party to a litigation. If she makes a statement and an admission—and as far as that is concerned there is very much more reason why a statement she makes as verity should be held as verity, as far as she is concerned—now whether that applies to one of the items or all of the items, I will take your various analyses, and I will see how far it does apply. I have no objection to your discussing it, but I am not discussing now the detail of the case as to how far this principle would affect my conclusion. In the first place I want to get two principles settled, the manner in which these facts should be proved with referenced to book value, and if proved whether they are a legal factor to be taken into account in reaching a conclusion as to the value. I do not mean that they may be the determining factor, because there are various factors involved in reaching a conclusion as to value. But if there are any cases that hold that the book value, or in other words the assets and liabilities, as shown by the balance sheet of the corporation, if properly established, are not to be considered as an element in reaching value, I want to get those cases so that we can look them over. But my attention, up to date, has not been called to a specific case that shows that.

MR. ROBINSON: Do you mean established by the fact of the entry or established by extrinsic proof?

THE MASTER: I mean book value as a fact, throwing out of account altogether the manner in which it is established.

MR. ROBINSON: What is book value? Is book value the value as shown by the figures themselves, or is it a value which may appear on those figures but which may be established by extrinsic proof as to what it is?

THE MASTER: That is the question of the method of proving book value. Does it exist? If it exists, that depends upon the proof. Suppose the proof shows that it does exist. If it exists, what weight is to be given to it in this case? Do I make that clear?

MR. ROBINSON: Not to me.

MR. HOLT: The point in Mr. Robinson's mind seems to be this, that the book may display a column of assets and a corresponding column of liabilities, but that is no proof of the value of those assets. But you have already answered that. And there is another answer to it, too. The very statute under which these reports were made to the Commonwealth of Virginia required these banks and canal and other internal improvement companies to report the condition of the companies, and they do that by reporting assets and liabilities. Of course that means the true assets and the true liabilities; otherwise you would not reach the result showing the condition of the company under the statute. That is the way the statute reads.

THE MASTER: It is for me to say whether this is proved. But suppose I hold it proved, under the circumstances of this case, and for the purposes of this case, then the question is, what effect is to be given to the proof. There are two propositions. Suppose I hold that the book value is established, now then am I to give any weight to it in reaching the conclusion as to the value of these assets?

MR. HOLT: Yes, because the book value is the accurate value if the books have been correctly kept.

THE MASTER: I understood Virginia to claim that the book value, if established, was not a proper factor to be taken into account in fixing the value of the stock. If there are authorities that hold that, I would like to have my attention called to them before I get through with this hearing, so that I can look them over, and so that the other side may comment on them.

MR. HOLT: I understood your position and the distinction you made between the method of proof and the conclusiveness of the proof.

THE MASTER: All I can say is that the cases to which my attention have been called up to date do not show this.

MR. HOLT: May I make inquiry as to what has been printed of that document No. 17? There was some correspondence between yourself and counsel on both sides about what of that document was to be printed. Has the whole thing been printed? Does it embrace everything relating to the James River and Kanawha Company?

THE MASTER: Judge Holt's inquiry is whether the printed copy headed James River and Kanawha Company embraces everything relating to the James River and Kanawha Company. My understanding is that it does, and if it does not I will have whatever there is of the original document that has been left out, added.

MR. HOLT: The reason for my inquiry, if your Honor will pardon me, is this——

THE MASTER: My instructions were to have everything in document No. 17 that related to the James River and Kanawha Company printed. From page 1187 to page 1194 is to be treated as though it had not yet been introduced, as I did not intend to have that printed.

MR. HOLT: The point of my inquiry, your Honor, was this. We lodged with you the other day, in response to some exhibits upon this subject tendered by Mr. Potter, three or four new exhibits prepared by Mr. Hillman, and the one of them marked Supplemental Exhibit No. 4 contains what purport to be a lot of extracts and excerpts from this document No. 17, and we do not find them in the printed pamphlet to which you have just referred. It may be that they have been overlooked in the printing, or it may be that I have overlooked them in reading the pamphlet

THE MASTER: The pamphlet ought to contain everything in that document No. 17 that relates to the James River and Kanawha Company. Whether it does or not I do not know.

MR. HOLT: The supplemental exhibit, as I said before, that we filed, is largely made up of extracts from document No. 17; but I do not find those extracts in this printed pamphlet, therefore everything relating to that is not included. This will illustrate. (Reading)

"Page 225, Document 17, September 30th, 1860. Resolutions of Investigating Committee of Stockholders. 'That they congratulate the stockkholders on the improved and apparently improving condition of the Company in every department of its affairs.'"

And then this:

"Page 232, Document 17, September 30th, 1860. Extract from president's report. 'And in the month of July, the water was withdrawn from some of the levels for the usual systematic repairs.'"

And then again:

"On page 692 of the same volume the president of the James River and Kanawha Company values the property at $10,000,000, which was in the year 1859."

And you will find that those extracts from the report, all the way through, of the president, show that the repairs had all been kept up, as we understand it, out of the revenues earned. So there was no depreciation.

THE MASTER: The first thing to be ascertained is whether or not this document as furnished to me is a correct transcript of that document. If it is not correct we will have it made correct. I read through Mr. Hillman's exhibit when I received it, and I started to try and pick out from the report which I have here, this page of the report, before I got the print, the references made by Mr. Hillman. Of course I found out right away that Mr. Hillman's references to pages were undoubtedly to the pages of the printed document on file in Virginia. I assumed that it was probably all in here somewhere, and that he could find it. If it is not all in here, as far as the James River and Kanawha Company is concerned the hearing stops right here until it is completed. I have had so much inconvenience in getting at this original data that I do not propose to make any move until I have what I believe to be the original report, or a transcript of it, so that I may know what I am looking at. I rather assume that Mr. Hillman could probably find his references in this, but if they are not here and this document is not complete, that is the end of the investigation this morning on the James River and Kanawha Company.

MR. HILLMAN: I am looking for those.

THE MASTER: You run it down while we are discussing something else. It may be that you will find it. If you do not find it, then we have not yet succeeded in getting the exact facts with relation to the James River and Kanawha Company. And I shall insist on those facts being in here. While Mr. Hillman is doing that, I call the attetion of the counsel for Virginia—I do not think Mr. Harrison has seen this, and Mr. Robinson has just hurriedly looked it through—West Virginia presents here now an extract from a public document which they find on the files in West Virginia, purporting to have been published by Virginia, which gives details that have not heretofore been available in connection with this Jeffersonville Branch. You look that through carefully and see what you have to say about it.

MR. LILLY: I can wire and get the book here tomorrow.

THE MASTER: We might just as well take our time now and clean this all up. My suggestion still holds, that if either of you finds that there is something that ought to be put into this case, that ought to go in, you will have a chance to put it in; and also if I find anything that I think ought to go in it will go in.

MR. HOGG: You do not want any unconsidered factors in this case.

THE MASTER: Not if I know it. Of course this exhibit tends to throw some light on this Jeffersonville business. I shall hold that the burden is on West Virginia to show the value of these various stocks on these respective dates, that is so far as the burden amounts to anything one way or the other on the question of proof. Now, on this particular matter the bearing would be this; Mr. Dixcy, who was the accountant for West Virginia in the former hearing, filed an exhibit in which he stated that West Virginia was chargeable with the full amount of that stock. And I held its value to be $427,250. I think the value that you claim now is less than that. That was based on everything I had before me at that time.

MR. HOLT: Had not Mr. Dixcy heard of the Graziers' Bank?

THE MASTER: He did not say anything about it, and, of course, nobody else said anything about it. What Mr. Dixcy had heard about and what he knew, I do not know. The practical situation about that is this; West Virginia stands here in this hearing with its expert in the former hearing conceding that the full amount of the Northwestern Bank stock was chargeable to West Virginia. Now under those circumstances the burden is on West Virginia to satisfy me that that is not proper. If West Virginia says the facts are the other way, it is up to her to show me some facts that will justify me in holding the other way. It is up to West Virginia to satisfy me by some legally competent testimony that I should reach that conclusion.

MR. HOLT: We recognized the difficulty from the beginning. We put in the statutes showing the lopping off of the Branch at Jeffersonville, and the subsequent establishing of the Grazier Bank. The question was how much of that should be subtracted from the charge against West Virginia on account of the Northwestern Bank. But at the time we were at Richmond we did not have any evidence on the subject. And all we could do was to establish the fact that that Branch had been lopped off, and the Grazier Bank established.

THE MASTER: That statute shows that there was $25,000 in gold still on deposit in Wheeling that was alleged to be the property of the Grazier Bank, if I remember right. This exhibit here tends to show that the stock of the Jeffersonville Branch was about $164,000.

MR. HOLT: There are two or three matters in the record now, in what I call the new record, showing that Virginia in the sixties, after the establishment of the Grazier Bank, continued to receive dividends on about $164,000.

THE MASTER: $146,000 I think it was.

MR. LILLY: $146,000.

THE MASTER: Let us get that right now. About all there is in this record that tends to establish the size of the Jeffersonville Branch—

MR. ROBINSON: It is on page 74.

THE MASTER: Page 74 of the exhibits?

MR. ROBINSON: Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: There was a dividend in 1862 of $14,000, April 1st; July 22nd, 1862, $640, ten per cent. What does that $640, ten per cent, July 22nd, 1862, represent? I cannot guess about this too much you know. Is there anything about it in the record? Here is $640, ten per cent., July 22nd, 1862. Here is July 22nd, 1862, $7,320, five per cent.; and January 20th, 1863, $7,320, five per cent. Will it be assumed that that is perhaps a yearly dividend of $14,640, at ten per cent.?

MR. HOGG: That is five per cent. semi-annually undoubtedly.

MR. HOLT: Suppose you look at page 80 also, on the same subject. There are some more dividends on Graziers' Bank stock there.

MR. ROBINSON: Judge Holt, where is the exhibit showing the incorporation of the Graziers' Bank?

THE MASTER: July 28th, 1863, $6,820, five per cent., dividend on 1,346 shares.

MR. HOLT: That shows that Virginia had at that date 1,346 shares in the Graziers' Bank; at least she was receiving dividends on that amount.

THE MASTER: It shows that she was receiving dividends. Now, the only other fact in this record that tends to establish the size of this Jeffersonville Branch is the fact that a certificate for $50,000, par value of the Graziers' Bank, was found on the files of Virginia.

MR. LILLY: That, your Honor, was a school fund.

THE MASTER: But that is all that appears. If there is anything further, that is if there is anything to connect these things—of course I do not know what they may say about this here, of course if this is a correct extract from an original record it may have some tendency to clear up the situation.

MR. LILLY: I will wire for the book, your Honor.

THE MASTER: It is almost incredible to my mind that there is not somebody in existence in Jeffersonville, or some books or records—if this does not prove to be what we want—if there are not some books or records or some living witnesses around Jeffersonville or Tazewell who have some knowledge about the size and condition of that bank. Of course, it may be that there are not. I do not suppose either side has made any effort to ascertain that fact from anybody living in Tazewell. Is that true?

MR. ANDERSON: We have not.

THE MASTER: Neither has the other side.

MR. HOLT: I think you will find the statute establishlishing the Graziers' Bank is March 13, 1862, page 984 of the record.

THE MASTER: Here I have on one hand dividends on a certain basis, and I have on the other hand a certificate of stock on an entirely different basis; and an entire absence of any evidence as to what may be obtained in Tazewell or Jeffersonville. Of course, I am not speaking now of the effect of what you produce here this morning.

MR. HOLT: I know that we left Richmond feeling distinctly that we had only, so far as our testimony then given was concerned, introduced an Act showing the cutting off of the Jeffersonville Branch, and another Act establishing it into the Graziers' Bank, but that so far we had discovered no evidence showing what deduction should be made from the Northwestern on that account, except as to the dividends.

MR. LILLY: There is a law in Virginia after a certain time not allowing her to invest in bank stocks, and the presumption is that it would be the old stock.

THE MASTER: Let me ask Mr. Robinson and Mr. Harrison—they present here this morning an extract from a document, and they say they can produce the document here. Do you want them to produce the document here? Of course that is a significant report.

MR. ROBINSON: We would like to see it.

MR. LILLY: I will telegraph for it at once.

THE MASTER: I suppose that perhaps is as far as we can go with this Jeffersonville Branch, right now.

MR. HOLT: This is a report by the cashier of the Jeffersonville Branch to Governor Letcher, in consequence of the fact that he could not report to the parent bank at Wheeling.

THE MASTER: That was the Confederate Government?

MR. HOLT: Letcher was the Confederate Governor of Virginia. His report is dated October 17, 1861. "I again enclose you quarterly statement of the condition of this office, being excluded from communicating with parent bank."

MR. LILLY: The idea I am suggesting, there is an Act prohibiting Virginia from investing, in the future, in any internal improvement stocks or bank stocks, and therefore this must have been the stock that was converted into the Graziers' Bank stock.

THE MASTER: I think the case shows this, that whatever appears to be invested by Virginia in the Grazier Bank, so far as I can see on this record, it is to be inferred it was her portion of the Northwestern Bank. The question now is what it was.

MR. HOLT: Mr. Lilly's idea was that that would show, by this statute, that she had not purchased any more stock in the Grazier Bank after it had been clipped from the Northwestern.

MR. LILLY: Our idea was that in the discussion of the matter we might refer to these various statutes.

THE MASTER: This is not a very large item. It certainly was not cleaned up at the previous hearing, except that West Virginia assumed the responsibility of the whole business, and there was not any occasion for going into it. When I come to go into it I find these things confronting me. Wherever my report may vary from my previous report, I must give some reason why I vary it, at least I shall try to, or else I won't vary it.

MR. HOLT: I do not know, I may misunderstand, but as I understood it you had invited us here, Mr. Littlefield, for the purpose of seeing where we were on the following matters. First, the James River and Kanawha Company, which would cover the exhibit since the last hearing, filed by Mr. Potter, and the reply exhibits filed by Mr. Hillman. Secondly, the exhibit filed by Mr. Potter, relating to the Blue Ridge Railroad Company, filed since the last hearing—

THE MASTER: That, I think, is not printed.

MR. HOLT: —and the reply exhibit filed by Mr. Hillman. Third, the Northwestern Bank; and fourth, the depositions taken at Richmond, under the suggestion of the Master, relative to the subject of market quotations. Those are the four matters.

THE MASTER: Yes.

MR. HOLT: And I suppose that none of the exhibits presented by Mr. Potter, and that none of the exhibits just now mentioned by Mr. Hillman, have been embraced or printed in the record.

THE MASTER: Some of Mr. Potter's exhibits have been printed, but they are not in the case, and until supported by Mr. Potter, or unless supported by Mr. Potter, they will be taken out of the case. I did not intend to have them printed. The Blue Ridge exhibit is not printed at all, I think, and I did not intend to have the others printed, because I was going to treat them all on the same basis. Those that have been printed may be treated as not in the case, and won't be in unless supported by Mr. Potter's statement. That I think covers your ground, does it not, Judge?

MR. HOLT: Yes, sir. Now, in what way can we make further progress this morning?

THE MASTER: Until Mr. Hillman makes such examination of this printed case, so as to be able to know whether that is a complete extract, why, I do not see that we can make much progress on the James River and Kanawha Company. We have tentatively cleaned up this matter of the Tazewell Branch, and that now awaits the bringing on of this original report, which can be brought on here. If the original report, when it is brought on, does not show sufficient detail I shall either want the counsel on one side or the other to make an investigation at Tazewell, or I will have it made myself; because, in the absence of being able to get satisfactory information, I do not think the case ought to be closed until somebody ascertains what is or is not in existence, by sending somebody to Jeffersonville or Tazewell to find out what facts may be ascertained there. Of course, if Virginia wants to concede on the record that what West Virginia claims should be allowed for the Tazewell Branch should be allowed, that will take care of it. But if they contest it, why I want that information. Of course they would not want to say about that, I suppose, right off the bat. All these items, as far as I am concerned, if the parties agree on them, if you set up a claim as to value and the other side admits it, I shall not spend any more time on it. But if you disagree, and there are facts which in my judgment ought to be available, and which have not been produced, why I shall wait until I get them.

Now, the Blue Ridge matter, of course Mr. Potter is not here.

MR. LILLY: Why not adjourn and let our accountants get to work, and be ready by the time Mr. Potter gets here?

THE MASTER: Suppose we suspend until two o'clock this afternoon, or ten o'clock tomorrow morning?

MR. LILLY: Will it do any good to meet at two o'clock this afternoon if Mr. Potter is the first witness?

MR. ROBINSON: We might take up the question of the depositions.

THE MASTER: The deposition matter is entirely a matter of comment and argument.

MR. HOLT: With one exception, and perhaps it is only an inquiry of General Anderson or Mr. Harrison—while in Richmond, as I recall, they instructed someone to copy from a book of Davenport & Company a list of sales of stock. I do not find that list of sales attached to or embodied in the stenographic report of the testimony anywhere.

MR. HARRISON: Won't you refresh your memory by looking at the evidence?

THE MASTER: Mr. Leeds calls my attention to the fact that there is a document on file in Richmond that shows, referring now to an element that we had in the discussion this morning, in which I stated that where it appeared that there were debts that were doubtful or uncertain I should cut them out—he says that that shows that most of those debts were collected. And he wants know what can be done about getting these reports. Of course that question was opened in Richmond, and Mr. Harrison disclosed on his cross-examination that infirmity about that trial balance. I did not state what I was going to do about it. Of course everybody must know that I would have to reach some conclusion about it. And that matter of course should have been produced by West Virginia at that time. But I am not going to hold them down to that. If there is evidence tending to negative the effect of the evidence disclosed by Mr. Harrison on cross-examination, under the circumstances of this case, with all the parties involved, why I am going to let the other side produce it. While, strictly speaking, I think it was their business to have produced it in Richmond, it was all disclosed there to them and they ought to have anticipated the effect that evidence of that kind would have on my mind—whatever should go in here, even though I do not think you have exercised the diligence you ought to have exercised—because I think the right kind of diligence would have produced that evidence in Richmond—it will be introduced, I will hear it. I am going to have an end of this, but, of course, I can understand that there are a good many details connected with it, and it may be that it will be a little rank to hold that counsel for West Virginia were not exercising due diligence if they did not dig this up. But if it is a fact, and they want to produce it, they may produce it. Now, the question is how are we going to get at that. Mr. Leeds wants to know. That is a document on file in Richmond.

MR. LEEDS: We ought to have the one about the James River and Kanawha Company.

MR. ANDERSON: Receipts from whom and by whom?

MR. LEEDS: There are trial balances of the bank which show that they lost this year fifty thousand dollars bad or doubtful debts, the next year the balance will show twenty thousand dollars bad or doubtful debts, showing that there have been thirty thousand dollars collected.

MR. HARRISON: It does not show that they were collected.

THE MASTER: If there is anything that West Virginia thinks is important on that line, I think it is incumbent upon me to let it in. I do not say now what weight I shall give to it, but I think they are entitled to the benefit of any fact that it is proper to show.

MR. ANDERSON: I am very sorry that Mr. Potter is not here, because I feel very sure that any stock ownership by Virginia in the Northwestern branch bank at Jeffersonville which afterwards went into the Grazier Bank, is shown by records in Richmond. It has been overlooked in some way. I do not think there is an item of ownership of stock that is not shown.

THE MASTER: I have called Mr. Potter in for the purpose of having Mr. Potter make some effort to get this information. All that Mr. Potter knows about that is this, and I think the record shows it, that there were found in Virginia at one time a certificate for fifty thousand dollars of the par value of the stock in the Grazier Bank. I think there was another certificate found, perhaps for the same amount.

MR. ANDERSON: The stocks owned by Virginia were either held by the literary fund or by the board of public works, and their records show all the facts.

THE MASTER: I am telling you now all that Mr. Potter knows about it, unless he has discovered something since he talked with me. Because I put it right up to Mr. Potter to give me what information he had showing how much stock Virginia held in this Jeffersonville branch, and all that Mr. Potter knew about it is what appears in this record. And, at my request, Mr. Potter wrote to the postmaster down at Tazewell to see if he could get some information from him, and he had not heard from him up to the last time I saw him. That is the whole case on the details as to the branch in Tazewell.

MR. LILLY: Do you suppose, your Honor, on the new phase, you could phone the Auditor at Virginia and get him to send us Volume 14 and Volume 17?

THE MASTER: I would be very glad to telegraph him. I suppose he would do that quicker for you, Mr. Harrison, than he would for me, wouldn't he?

MR. LILLY: It is the original volume of documents 14 and 17.

MR. ROBINSON: Document 14 is of the banks and document 17 is the railroad and canal companies, and shows the James River and Kanawha Company. Why not ask Mr. Page to send those up with a messenger at the Master's expense?

MR. HARRISON: If you want to try and get those books up here, why not telephone Mr. Page and ask him to send them up?

THE MASTER: Let us be sure and get the right book, and let us be sure that we do not want anything else, because I am fully as anxious, and more anxious than anybody else, to get this matter finished.

MR. HARRISON: Is there anything else that you want?

THE MASTER: In looking over Mr. Hillman's exhibit there were some references made to some original documents and extracts made from original documents. From now on whenever anybody makes any extracts from original documents I want the whole document; if it is a table, I want the whole table; if it is an abstract from statistics, I want all the statistics, because there is almost always a controversy between the parties as to what the facts may be. If either party relies on any original document I want the whole of that document to which they make reference, so if there is any controversy I can make up my mind as to whose contention is correct. We have had more or less confusion as to what this shows or that shows. If there is any controversy about it I want to know myself what it shows. If there is any dispute between the parties, then I can decide it in short order. If there is anything that Mr. Hillman refers to in his exhibit that would be covered by my suggestion, let us have it here. Then if there is a question about it I will hear both of you, and I will take the original and make up my mind about it very quickly.

MR. HOLT: If Mr. Page comes, upon your invitation, Mr. Littlefield, he might bring both document 14, which is referred to by Mr. Leeds, and document 17, which covers the James River and Kanawha Company; and then with the original here we can see whether this document covers those extracts.

MR. HARRISON: I think he will send them up to you.

THE MASTER: I will call him on the phone. The question is, is there anything more that we want.

MR. HILLMAN: We have an entry here from the James River and Kanawha Company reports on file in the Chesapeake and Ohio offices. We have no method of getting those that I know of.

THE MASTER: Mr. Harrison is attorney for the Chesapeake and Ohio, and he can get those.

MR. HARRISON: What would you ask for? What shall I send for?

MR. HILLMAN: Volume 5—I will make a memorandum of it for you.

THE MASTER: Mr. Page can either bring these himself or send them up by a messenger that he has confidence in, and let it stay here until we get through with the document.

MR. HOLT: If Mr. Harrison at the same time telegraphed to the Chesapeake and Ohio and had those documents sent to Mr. Page, they might be brought at the same time.

MR. ROBINSON: Can't you dispose of the depositions this morning?

MR. HOLT: When we get these things straightened out from those books, then is it your idea to print the last exhibits?

THE MASTER: Yes, whatever takes place here goes in as additional record.

MR. HOLT: You want to transmit these as part of your report?

THE MASTER: Yes.

Adjourned to meet at the Bar Association, December 8th, 1914, at 10 A. M.

After considerable discussion as to the production of original documents and some efforts to agree on a stipulation, adjourned to December 9th, 1914, at 10 A. M.

New York, December 9th, 1914.

Met pursuant to adjournment.

PRESENT:

Hon. William A. Anderson,
Hon. Randolph Harrison,
Sandford Robinson, Esq.,
of counsel for plaintiff.

Hon A. A. Lilly, Attorney General,
Hon. Charles E. Hogg,
Hon. John H. Holt,
of counsel for defendant.

ARTHUR G. POTTER, recalled for further examination on behalf of the plaintiff, testified as follows:

Direct Examination:

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Mr. Potter, have you made a schedule containing extracts from Document No. 17, James River and Kanawha Company, being part of the report of the Board of Public Works?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please state what that extract is?

MR. LILLY: What page is that?

MR. ANDERSON: Page 107 of the printed document.

Q. Please state what that extract is and how it was made up.

THE MASTER: In the first place state on what pages of the print it is to be found.

THE WITNESS: It appears at pages 1187, 1188, 1189 and 1190.

MR. LILLY: You might call this Volume 3, I suppose, of the last print.

THE MASTER: Yes, Volume 3.

THE WITNESS: This statement is a summarizing of the report of the James River and Kanawha Company of receipts and disbursements from the organization of the Company to the 30th of September, 1860, made as a statement in condensed form of the same information contained in this same volume, printed at pages 1148-A, 1149, 1150 and 1151. The figures are exactly the same in both instances, with the exception that the outstanding warrants at the end of the period are deducted from my cash balance, instead of being footed in on the other side. The totals are exactly the same, with that exception.

By the Master:

Q. You say page 1148-A?

A. Page 1148-A, this large statement, Mr. Littlefield, that is the beginning.

MR. HOLT: It is marked 1148-A at the bottom of the page.

THE WITNESS: Yes, and it goes over to the next following two or three pages.

MR. ROBINSON: Pages 1149 and 1150 and 1151 are a continuation of an account which starts on this wide sheet here.

THE MASTER: The big wide sheet I notice is marked at the bottom 1148-A.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Now, Mr. Potter, in computing the disbursements for the James River and Kanawha Company I notice you have omitted——

THE MASTER: Take first whatever you have to say about the receipts. I want this to go in its order, so that when I come to look at it it will all ravel right out in the order in which it comes. Then follow that up with your succeeding matter, unless that disarranges unnecessarily your mehod. Otherwise, when I come to look at the record I will have to keep shifting back and forth.

Q. Will you please explain how the total of receipts shown on the bottom of page 1187, of $5,434,443.35 was arrived at?

A. It was arrived at by adding the first three items on page 1148-A, namely, $793,345.55, $4,230,891.92 and $57,710.60, and one item which appears on page 1149, namely, $2,182.88, from interest on State stock. I combined that with other items of interest and premiums. It shows a total income of $5,434,443.35. In other words, I have merely excluded all of the capital receipts in this statement appearing at page 1148-A. and stated in that total the income from operations and interest, etc.

Q. If I understand you then, your statement of receipts includes all entries that are receipts of income, and excludes all entries that are receipts from capital account?

A. Yes, sir. I would like to amend my previous answer. I want to add that I included in the total of $5,434,443.35 the items of tolls appearing in the last total on page 1148-A, and income from the Richmond Dock, and income from the five locks, tide water connection, T. W. C. it is here.

By the Master:

Q. Does that include everything except bills payable?

A. No, sir; bills payable and insurance on New Canton Bridge.

Q. With the exception of those two items, it includes everything in that item?

A. Yes, sir. My total on page 1187 of $5,434,443.35 includes all the items at the left of page 1148-A, with the exception of bills payable $152,055.12, and insurance on New Canton Bridge, $10,000.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Mr. Potter, will you explain how you arrived at your statement of disbursements?

MR. HOLT: Where are they, Mr. Robinson?

Q. Contained at pages 1189 and 1190 of Volume No. 3.

A. The items on page 1189 are taken from page 1148-A, all of the items on the right hand side, except the following: dividends of the James River and Kanawha Company, $11,599.59, certificates of the First Auditor, $469,188.30; and certificates of the Second Auditor, $202,821.30; and it includes three items on page 1151, namely: loss by General Hamilton's Agency, $63,820,45; notes from delinquent subscribers and others, for arrearages, $4,241.84, and securities in agents' hands collecting stock arrearages, $381.73. The total of these items is $6,737,399.10, as shown on page 1189.

Q. Mr. Potter, referring to the entry or referring to the item, dividends of the James River and Kanawha Company, $11,599.59, please state when that dividend was paid.

MR. ANDERSON: What page is that?

MR. ROBINSON: That is page 1148-A.

THE MASTER: If there is something in the record that shows that, just state where it is, so I can check it.

THE WITNESS: It is Exhibit G-1, page 11 of that exhibit——

THE MASTER: It is Exhibit G-1 of the original record?

THE WITNESS: Of the original record, page 11 of that exhibit, paragraph 7 of the decree——

MR. HARRISON: Pages 820-L and 820-N of the original record.

THE WITNESS: This is on page 820-L of the original record; it shows that there was paid in 1836 $10,092 as dividend—that exhibit shows this to be dividends received by the Commonwealth; the difference between the $10,092 and the $11,000 shown in this report.

By the Master:

Q. $11,599.59?

A. Yes, sir; that is doubtless the amount paid to individual stockholders other than the State of Virginia.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. The dividend is also shown on page 193 of the Master's report as paid in 1836?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Why did you not include among your disbursements the certificates to the First Auditor for $469,188.30, and the certificates to the Second Auditor of $202,821.30?

MR. HOLT: What page is that, Mr. Robinson?

MR. ROBINSON: On page 1148-A.

A. Because I could not determine exactly what those payments were made for. I believe that they were made for interest—they were interest payments, but I could not prove it.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Interest payments paid by whom?

A. Paid by the James River and Kanawha Company to the First and Second Auditors for money loaned by the State to the James River and Kanawha Company.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. They are entries on the liabilities' side of the account, are they not, Mr. Potter?

MR. ANDERSON: Will you ask him the date of those?

A. They are entries on the disbursements' side, Mr. Robinson, which indicates that they were payments.

Q. Payments?

A. Yes, sir. And they are under the heading, additional charges on revenue. So I think that it is perfectly reasonable to put that construction on them, that they are interest payments.

Q. However, you have not included them in your schedule?

A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Will you please state the effect of not including them in your schedule?

A. The apparent deficit would be $672,009.60 more than I have stated it on page 1190. And in my certificate I said that the deficit was not less than $1,302,955.75, because under the construction that I have just indicated it would be nearly $2,000,000, not quite $2,000,000.

Q. Will you explain why you excluded any other entries upon the disbursements' side of this account?

A. The disbursements found on page 1150 are evidently all construction disbursements, amounting to $7,811,875.46, and $1,670,609 on page 1151—that is, pages 1150 and 1151.

Q. Do I understand that you have included all disbursements chargeable to income and excluded disbursements chargeable to capital, with the exception of the three entries that I have specifically called your attention to?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. What do you mean by disbursements chargeable to income?

A. The statement shows under the heading of disbursements, first, for repairs and maintenance; then it gives four items, then there is another group of three items, the first one says new canal, from Richmond to Buchanan, $1,811,-260.93; inasmuch as that came under the general heading for repairs and maintenance I take it that is what it means. It is followed by two items, damage to canal by fresh—I suppose that means freshet—of July, 1842, $67,542.23, and damage to canal by fresh of November, 1847, $21,424.48.

MR. ROBINSON: I think you have misunderstood the Master's question.

THE MASTER: My question was, what do you mean by disbursements chargeable to income? Do you mean by that that the disbursements are chargeable to operating expenses?

MR. ROBINSON: There were operating expenses and capital charges.

THE MASTER: I do not see the significance of disbursements chargeable to income.

Q. Do you mean by that disbursements properly chargeable to up-keep?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As distinguished from disbursements for capital account?

A. Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: I see it now. I wanted to get the significance of the disbursements chargeable to income.

MR. ROBINSON: We offer in evidence Mr. Potter's schedule as printed at pages 1187 to 1190 inclusive.

MR. HOLT: That does not then embrace, as I understand your offer, page 1148-A?

MR. ROBINSON: The Master has put that in.

THE MASTER: The document, James River and Kanawha Company, was put into the case under my instructions. That was an original document, and I put it in. And I understand that both sides propose to make a deduction from that.

MR. ROBINSON: That will be Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 24.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 24, December 9th, 1914, C. B.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Mr. Potter, referring to Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 24, just introduced, and which appears at pages 1187 to 1190 inclusive of the printed record No. 3, will you please state the difference between the receipts from income and the charges to operation, as shown upon that exhibit?

A. In dollars and cents, do you mean?

Q. Yes.

A. $1,302,955.75.

THE MASTER: Your question is not quite broad enough to cover that answer, unless by charges to operation you mean to include maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest. Of course, operation may be one thing, and a fixed charge of interest quite another thing. Do you see?

MR. ROBINSON: Yes, sir. Just change the question that way.

THE MASTER: I want you all to keep the distinction in mind between operating expenses and fixed charges.

Q. I will repeat my question. Mr. Potter, referring to Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 24, just introduced in evidence, and appearing at pages 1187 to 1190 inclusive of the printed record No. 3, will you please state the difference between the receipts from income and the charges for maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest, as shown upon that exhibit?

A. $1,302,955.75.

Q. The disbursements exceeded the receipts by that amount?

A. The disbursements from income.

Q. The disbursements we have just stated?

A. Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: What is that, the disbursements from income?

Q. That is the disbursements for maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That exceeded the income by that amount?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. And if the items of the certificates to the First Auditor and Second Auditor were items of expense, or expenditure for interest, it would add to the deficit how much?

A. $672,009.60.

THE MASTER: I want to inquire right here—and unless there is objection, as I go along on all of these items, as a matter occurs to me that I want to know about, I will make the inquiry at the time.

MR. ROBINSON: Of course that is proper.

THE MASTER: I would like to know why it is that the books of Virginia do not show what those two items of payment were for, and if any effort was made to ascertain what they were for from the books.

THE WITNESS: I went through the report of 1860, the auditor's report, and I could not see any amounts or descriptions which tallied with them. I think it may be there, but in smaller items, in groups of items which are designated under different heads; but I did not see anything that would tally, would seem to tally with those two amounts.

Q. You did not find any groups which compared with these two groups?

A. No, sir. You see, Mr. Littlefield, this extends over a period of twenty-five years.

Q. I understand this is supposed to have covered a period of twenty-five years, but you did not go over that period of twenty-five years of the account?

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. For the purpose of ascertaining what might have represented these?

A. No, sir; and furthermore, I found no entries on the books as certificates of the auditors. It seems that they had a certain kind of paper called certificates of auditors, but I did not find any.

Q. Did you make any examination of the books of Virginia for the purpose of ascertaining how much the James River and Kanawha Company had paid to the State of Virginia for interest during this period?

A. No, sir; I did not make such inquiry. But I can say this much about that, that the Board of Public Works had an account which they called revenue, and that revenue account contained the revenue from all the companies. It was not credited to an account called interest from the James River and Kanawha Company, it was credited to an account called revenue, with quarterly or half-yearly credits through the journal. It would mean analyzing the journal to find out where the interest came from.

Q. That is the credits of interest were in lump sums?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without indicating the sources from which the interest came?

A. In the final resting place in the ledger, but in the journal it indicated exactly where the money came from; but the items were legion.

Q. In other words, you did not ascertain the lump sum items for the purpose of ascertaining where the items came from, for the purpose of developing the source of those?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you did not find anything on the books of Virginia that gave any explanation of certificates?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or indicated that certificates were made an element of the account?

A. No, sir.

THE MASTER: That is all.

MR. HARRISON: They are included, however, here on the original document, as disbursements.

THE MASTER: The difficulty is, so far Mr. Potter is not able to state whether they are interest charges or not. They are certificates of some sort for some purpose. Whether they are interest or not, he is not able to say, and therefore he does not include them in the deficit. Is that it?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir; that is it.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Mr. Potter, do the receipts from capital, stated at page 1188 of your exhibit, exceed the charges to construction, plus the principal of the old James River annuity, plus the dividends of the James River and Kanawha Company, plus the certificates to the State auditors heretofore mentioned, by this same sum of $1,302,955.75?

A. It does, with the exception that there is a balance of cash of $103,000.

Q. Then I will repeat my question. Do the receipts from capital stated at page 1188 of your exhibit, exceed the charges to construction, plue the principal of the old James River annuity, plus the dividends of the James River and Kanawha Company, plus the certificates to the State auditors heretofore mentioned, plus $103,035.33, cash on hand, by this same sum of $1,302,955.75?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Stated at page 1190 of your exhibit?

A. Yes, sir; $1,302,955.75.

MR. ROBINSON: Whenever I refer to expenses of operation I always intend to include the maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest, because I look upon them all as expenses of operation.

MR. HOLT: Do you mean fixed charges or a part of expenses of operation?

THE MASTER: Strictly speaking, I suppose they are not, but if you intend to include them, we understand in what sense you use the language.

MR. ROBINSON: Usually a company does not operate very long after they stop paying their fixed charges.

MR. HOLT: That is true, but interest on bonds is hardly an operating expense.

MR. ROBINSON: We are just quarreling with words; our ideas are the same.

THE MASTER: We had better use the same words in the same sense all the way through, and then I won't have any confusion.

Q. Mr. Potter, have you prepared another schedule, showing the receipts and disbursements of the James River and Kanawha Company for four years, October 1st, 1859, to September 30th, 1863, taken from the printed volumes of annual reports of the Company in the possession of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Richmond, Virginia, printed at pages 1191 to 1194 inclusive, of Volume 3 of this record?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please explain how——

By the Master:

Q. The document you refer to is also printed in the record as the James River and Kanawha Company, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: The document you refer to upon which this statement is predicated is printed in the third volume of the record, is it not?

MR. ROBINSON: No, those are all in the books of the Chesapeake & Ohio.

MR. HARRISON: He has prepared this statement from that report.

THE MASTER: Is not this the original document I ordered printed?

THE WITNESS: So far as 1860 is concerned it is, but so far as 1861, 1862 and 1863 are concerned there is nothing printed in this report.

THE MASTER: As to September 30th, 1860, this statement you have prepared is predicated upon the document already printed in this case?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir; at page 1103 of Volume 3.

Q. The statement of receipts and disbursements contained in Document No. 17, and printed in this record at pages 1103 to 1105 inclusive, ending with the entry to balance, September 30th, 1860, $106,258.02, is the source from which you compiled this schedule, so far as the entries under September 30th, 1860, are concerned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please state how you arrived at these items of revenue?

THE MASTER: Suppose we dispose right now of 1861, 1862 and 1863. Those are predicated upon some original documents that are not here. Now, have they any such significance that you want to use them? If they have not I will strike them out; and if they have, those books ought to have been sent for along with the other books.

THE WITNESS: There is no point in printing this at all unless you are going to have the comparison.

Q. What volumes are they in? We have coming now Volumes 2 and 5 of the Chesapeake & Ohio. Are they not among those papers?

A. I judge they must be in Volume 5.

MR. ROBINSON: Do you know, Mr. Hillman?

MR. HILLMAN: In Volume 5 it has the years prior to 1860. I do not know whether it has these three years in or not; I could not say.

THE WITNESS: They were yearly volumes, 1861, 1862 and 1863; they were separate books.

Q. The statement of receipts and disbursements contained in Document No. 17, and printed in this record at pages 1103 to 1105 inclusive, ending with the entry to balance, September 30th, 1860, $106,258.02, is the source from which you compiled this schedule, so far as the entries under September 30th, 1860, are concerned. Will you please state how you arrived at those items of revenue?

A. I arrived at the items of revenue stated on page 1191, for the year ending September 30th, 1860, merely by taking the same items that appeared in the original document, which is printed at page 1103, and the figures are identical.

Q. How did you arrive at the items of disbursements shown on page 1193, the total of $219,441.57?

A. That figure is identical with the total in the original document, on page 1104.

Q. How did you arrive at the total shown at the bottom of the page, amounting to $406,943.23?

A. By adding the items appearing on page 1104, under the caption of interest, $186,126.89, which is the total of four items, and the State tax of $1,374.77.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. By adding those to what, Mr. Potter?

A. By adding those to the previous figure, I arrive at the total of $406,943.23.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Does this show that the disbursements for maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest exceeded the receipts for revenue for that year?

A. Assuming that all of these disbursements were made for up-keep and maintenance, all of the items contained in the total of $219,441.57, then the total that I have shown covers maintenance, up-keep, interest and expenses of maintaining the Company for that year.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Do they exceed the income from revenue?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. By how much?

A. $98,048.90.

MR. HOLT: Now that is for the year ending when?

MR. ROBINSON: September 30th, 1860.

Q. Are there any items for disbursements shown on page 1193 that you can say were disbursements for construction?

A. Not positively; no, sir. I merely copied the statement as it appears on page 1104, without making any inquiry as to whether any of those items were for actual capital account. My belief at the time was that they did not, because the captions of the account do not seem to indicate that.

By the Master:

Q. That is, whether they were construction proper, as distinguished from repairs or up-keep?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or renewals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, whether they would be additions to the plant or whether they were simply moneys expended in keeping the plant in condition?

A. There was nothing to show on the face of this statement exactly what it was.

Q. Is there anything in Document No. 17 that throws any light on that subject?

MR. ROBINSON: I was just going to ask him to state off the record——

MR. HOLT: What do you mean by stating off the record?

MR. ROBINSON: I do not want it on the record. The point I want to have you see here, as we go along, that even if all of that item were construction items, there would still be a deficit in that year, because Mr. Potter says the deficit is $98,048.90, as shown by his figures.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Now, Mr. Potter, if you will please turn to page 1194 of your Exhibit. And will you read the amount of interest on the State debt to Virginia, and the amount of annuity, of the old James River annuity, that was due and unpaid on September 30th, 1860?

A. The interest due the State was $1,301,500.15.

THE MASTER: You say that was due and unpaid?

MR. ROBINSON: Yes, sir.

MR. HOLT: I think that was paid off by taking preferred stock.

THE MASTER: But at that date in 1860 this Act was passed, which authorized the converting of the debt into preferred stock. What they are undertaking to do now is to bring the account up to that date, as I understand it.

MR. HARRISON: That is right.

THE WITNESS: The annuity was $118,500, as indicated on unpaid balances on the principal of $300,000.

Q. How was this unpaid annuity and past due and unpaid interest discharged by the James River and Kanawha Company?

A. By issuing to the State of Virginia capital stock.

Q. Will you please state the amount, and where that is shown in your exhibit?

A. This statement which we are discussing covers the receipts of cash from revenue and other sources, and takes up as a receipt the new capital stock issued, $7,400,000.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Just give the page please.

A. On page 1192.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Please state the pages of Document 17, as printed in the record, where the entries for the capital stock and for the past due interest and annuity are shown.

A. That is on page 1103.

Q. What does that show?

A. For new capital stock, $7,400,000—no, it says from new capital stock, $7,400,000; from State release, $360,214.44; from State loan, for Kanawha River, $40,000.

Q. Where are the statements of past due and unpaid interest and the over-due annuity, entered?

A. On page 1105, at the top of the page.

Q. Will you read what they are?

A. State of Virginia: Debt, $5,790,214.29; Interest, $1,301,500.15; Annuity, $118,500; Principal of annuity, $350,000.

By the Master:

Q. How do I understand, right here, that if this item of interest unpaid of $1,301,500.15, as you say, and annuity, $118,500, if those two items had been paid it would have increased this deficit of $1,302,955.75 by that amount, is that the way you understand the account?

A. You are talking about two different statements now, Mr. Littlefield.

Q. I want to get them straight in my mind.

A. This is the statement of 1860, wherein they take up on the debit side and credit side the items that offset each other.

Q. For that year, do you mean?

A. Because the transactions occurred in that year.

Q. Does that show there was a balance of interest still due and unpaid to the State, of $1,301,500.15?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that balance included in the $1,302,955.75, the general statement covering the whole period of twenty-five years, or should it be added to it?

A. No, the summary statement is a complete summary statement, including these offsetting items.

Q. Then the fact that $1,301,500.15 of interest was not paid does not in any way affect the deficit that you have reported from the statement covering the period of twenty-five years?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Mr. Potter, I call your attention to an extract from a report to the stockholders, presented by General Taliaferro, printed at the top of page 4 of Document No. 17, as contained in Volume 3, and reading as follows, "While the great measure of converting the debt into stock, granted by the Legislature last winter, has relieved the Company from a load of oppressive embarrassment, and contributed to produce a most happy effect upon the public mind in reference to the value of the improvement," and ask you to state to what that refers.

A. It refers to the conversion of the debt owed by the James River and Kanawha Company to the State of Virginia, as shown on page 1105.

Q. What was the amount of that debt?

A. $5,790,214.29.

THE MASTER: As shown on page 1105, and as provided for by Act so and so. Just put that Act in there, so I can have it all together.

MR. HARRISON: I think it was March 23d, 1860.

THE MASTER: Is not that already printed here?

MR. HARRISON: It is all in the old record.

THE MASTER: Let us have a reference to it.

MR. HARRISON: I had the date right, March 23rd, 1860. It is page 108 of the appendix to the old record.

MR. ROBINSON: It is re-printed in the new record at page 67 of the exhibits, Volume 2 of the new record.

Q. What was the amount of that debt?

A. $5,790,214.29.

Q. What does that represent?

A. It is entered under the heading of debt to the State of Virginia.

By the Master:

Q. What page is that?

A. Page 1105 of Volume No. 3.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Give the balance of the items.

A. Interest, $1,301,500.15; annuity, $118,500; principal of annuity, $350,000; total, $7,560,214.44.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. What did the State accept from the Company in exchange for the discharge of these obligations?

A. The capital stock of the James River and Kanawha Company.

THE MASTER: And when? What does the account show?

MR. ROBINSON: It shows that it happened in that year, that is all.

THE MASTER: Is there anything to show the date when?

MR. ROBINSON: No, there is not.

MR. ANDERSON: Before the 30th of September, 1860. A part of the claim was realized by the State, $360,000.

By the Master:

Q. There is no doubt about the identity of the two items?

A. No, sir; none whatever.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Now, Mr. Potter, referring to the items on your exhibit at page 1191, under date of September 30th, 1861, please state whether all the items under that column, on pages 1191, 1192, 1193 and 1194, are exact copies of the whole of an account similar to the one stated for the year 1860 on pages 1103 to 1105 of Volume 3.

A. Yes, sir; they are.

THE MASTER: Before you go into that, what is the significance of the years 1861, 1862 and 1863?

MR. ROBINSON: They show that there was the same deficit for each of those years.

MR. ANDERSON: There was a deficit—not the same deficit.

MR. ROBINSON: Showing a deficit for each of those years.

THE MASTER: Let me see if I get this. Your contention is that these reports for 1861, 1862 and 1863 show a deficit of maintenance, up-keep, expenses, repairs and interest, notwithstanding the conversion of the debt of Virginia into capital stock?

MR. HARRISON: Yes, sir, down to the year 1863.

MR. HOLT: That is beginning with September 30th, 1860, and running to September 30th, 1863; that is the way I understand it.

THE MASTER: Now then, I get that. Now of course if the other side requires it, and if I think as it develops that I want to see it, I shall have to see these original reports for 1861, 1862 and 1863. They ought to have been here.

MR. HILLMAN: It is possible that they may be included in Volumes 2 and 5.

THE MASTER: From now on I shall want to be in a position where I can see either the original records or what I can look upon as the complete extracts.

MR. HARRISON: These statements were furnished to other side.

THE MASTER: It may not be enough for me, to satisfy the other side, I have got to be satisfied. We will see how that works along. But, subject to that suggestion, of course we will go right along. I want to treat both sides exactly alike on this proposition, and no matter what may be developed, if anything turns up where I want to see the original I shall have to have it.

MR. HOLT: As I understand, Volumes 2 and 5 will disclose this.

THE MASTER: I hope they will.

MR. ANDERSON: I would like to ask Mr. Potter whether he examined any volume of higher number than 5.

THE WITNESS: I cannot remember; I cannot answer that.

(Testimony read by stenographer.)

Q. Do they show that the disbursements for maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest exceed the receipts from revenue, and if so, by what amount?

A. They show, for the year ended September 30th, 1861, there was a deficit——

THE MASTER: Put that in this way, please——give the total receipts and the total disbursements, and then give the difference, so that I will know just exactly what you take it from.

THE WITNESS: For the fiscal year ended September 30th, 1861, the revenue receipts are stated at $160,547.63.

THE MASTER: That is at page 1191?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir; that is, at page 1191. The disbursements for maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest are $230,357.17.

THE MASTER: That is, at page 1193, is it not?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir; that is at page 1193. Leaving an indicated deficit of $69,809.54. There is an item in there of $5.70, down at the bottom of the page, that might possibly be thrown on to the next page. It was so small I did not pay any attention to it. I do not know what it is.

Q. Please state the same facts with reference to the year ended September 30th, 1862.

A. The revenue receipts for that year are shown to be $143,190.84.

THE MASTER: That is at page 1191?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir; that is at page 1191. And the disbursements for maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest are shown to be $189,800.70.

THE MASTER: That is at page 1193?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir; that is at page 1193. Leaving an indicated deficit of $46,609.86.

Q. Please state the same facts with reference to the year ending September 30th, 1863.

A. The receipts from revenue are $302,443.96; that is on page 1191; the disbursements for maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest are $431,480.21; that is on page 1193; showing an indicated deficit of $129,036.25.

MR. ROBINSON: I ask to have this schedule, headed James River and Kanawha Company, printed at pages 1191 to 1194 inclusive of Volume 3, marked in evidence as plaintiff's Exhibit No. 25, and filed in this case.

MR. HOLT: That is the one, the original source of which we have not before us.

THE MASTER: Subject to the suggestions before made, it is admitted.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 25, December 9th, 1914, C. B.

THE MASTER: In regard to the Blue Ridge Road, I want to make a general inquiry and see whether anybody is able to state the facts from the record. I got the impression that the Blue Ridge Railway was substantially a tunnel through the mountain. I want to get on the record the fact about that. How long is the road, and how much of it is tunnel?

MR. ANDERSON: There are several tunnels.

MR. LILLY: The road is sixteen miles long.

MR. ANDERSON: No, no; ten miles long.

THE MASTER: See if there is anything in the record. I would like to have this stated here before we begin on this subject. I want to see just what that Blue Ridge tunnel is.

MR. LILLY: I can show your Honor where it is on the map.

THE MASTER: I would like to get approximately the facts about that. I have searched the record a good deal for that, and I did not find anything that satisfied me about it. In the first place, does the Blue Ridge Railroad tunnel——

MR. HOLT: It begins on the eastern side, as I understand it, of the Blue Ridge, and runs up the Blue Ridge, and tunnels through two or three spurs of it before it finally reaches the main tunnel through the Blue Ridge Mountains.

THE MASTER: Now, what is the total length of the Blue Ridge Road, approximately?

MR. ANDERSON: I understood it to be ten miles of railroad; that may be exclusive of the tunnel.

MR. HOLT: Does that embrace or exclude the tunnel?

MR. ANDERSON: I do not know whether it embraces or excludes the tunnels.

MR. HOLT: It is nearly all tunnel, is it not?

MR. ANDERSON: No, the main tunnel is seven-eighths of a mile—the Hoosac Tunnel was the only tunnel in America that was longer when that was built, as I understand it. And then there were three or four small tunnels, from a few hundred feet to a quarter of a mile in length.

THE MASTER: Is it agreed practically that the whole road is ten miles in length?

MR. LILLY: I think it is sixteen miles.

THE MASTER: I would like to have the physical character of the road right in the record here, and then if I have occasion to discuss it I will have it before me.

MR. ANDERSON: The Blue Ridge Railroad cost nearly $1,700,000.

MR. HOLT: It was very expensive on account of the tunnels.

THE MASTER: The impression I got was that it was such an expensive piece of railroad that the State had to build it, no railroad company wanted to build it. Am I right about that?

MR. ANDERSON: I know the State built it and owned it exclusively.

THE MASTER: Is there anything here to show when it was built? Look at the origial record in the table of Acts appropriating money, that may tell when it was started. That is in the back part of the book, General Anderson.

MR. ROBINSON: Why not leave it until Mr. Harrison finds out just exactly what that was?

THE MASTER: I would like to have it right in a nut shell at this point, while I am at it. According to this table of Acts appropriating money, the Blue Ridge seems to have been started in 1849.

MR. ANDERSON: It was not built for several years after that. They had a temporary road over the Gap for several years while they were building it.

MR. HOGG: It was incorporated as a railroad on the 5th day of March, 1849.

THE MASTER: Well, put that in. That is near enough.

MR. ANDERSON: It was probably built by about 1853 or 1854.

MR. HOLT: I think one of our exhibits here gives the expenditures up to a certain time.

MR. LILLY: I do not think it was completed until about 1859. I am not speaking for the record, but that is about the time they commenced getting toll for it.

MR. HOLT: If you will turn to page 27 of Volume 2, new record, you will find that the cost of construction up to January 1st, 1861, was $1,604,000. Then you will find that there was invested in it after that date $90,000 more.

THE MASTER: Yes, but that does not give us when it was started.

MR. HOLT: But that tells you when it was completed.

THE MASTER: I have been all over this to find out something about that, and I have read that statement over and over again. All these statements, practically, when they give acts up to a certain date—I do not know as one of them tells when the construction was begun. I have dug up more or less of it by looking into the index of the appropriation Acts.

MR. LILLY: There are reports here that show the number of miles, and then the next year it would show a different number, and what part was under construction.

THE MASTER: We won't keep everybody waiting here while we are looking that up, but I would like to have that put right in there. What I want is the approximate length and the approximate amount of the road that is tunneled, so as to get some sort of an idea about it.

MR. ANDERSON: Did your Honor have a volume of the Board of Public Works report sent to you?

THE MASTER: Document 14 is here.

MR. ROBINSON: Why don't we go along, and put it in afterwards?

THE MASTER: That is all right, put it in afterwards. We won't stop for it now.

Q. Mr. Potter, I call your attention to a paper marked Blue Ridge Railroad Company, basis of valuation April 1st, 1870, by joint commission, Virginia and West Virginia, and ask you to state what that paper is.

A. That paper is a copy of an original pen written document found on file in the office of the State Corporation Commissions in Richmond, Virginia, in a box of original documents labeled Blue Ridge Railroad. This box cotains copies of contracts and other miscellaneous papers.

Q. Relating to the Blue Ridge Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state whether the copy is a correct copy?

A. I cannot state positively. I think it is a correct copy, because it is signed by both the cashier——

Q. Can you state whether your copy is a correct copy of the paper on file?

A. Yes, sir, it is a correct copy.

MR. ROBINSON: I ask to have that paper marked in evidence.

MR. HOLT: I do not understand that to be a copy from which he took it, that was the original paper, was it not?

THE WITNESS: I understood Mr. Robinson to refer to the original document. I want to withdraw that, and simply say that I know this is a correct copy of the original document, from which it was copied.

MR. HOLT: I understood what you wanted to get at, but then you were discussing the one in the box down there as if it were a copy.

MR. ROBINSON: I am much obliged to you, Judge.

By the Master:

Q. Let me get the significance of your answer. Does your answer imply that all of the typewritten material upon this exhibit is an accurate extract from the original on file, beginning, "Value on the 1st day of April, 1870, ascertained by the rule established by award of the Commissioners of the Covington and Ohio Railroad, dated May 25th, 1867"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That statement appeared in the original document?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that this document here is a literal transcript?

A. Yes, sir; that is a literal transcript of the original document down to the final footing of $122,187.77. Then it is signed and certified correct by the cashier of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad and by the secretary of the Board of Public Works; but in both cases their signatures appear, which I did not copy at the time. This copy was taken for another purpose, and then it was used for this purpose afterwards. Then the endorsement on the back of that report, the stars there indicate that something has been omitted, I believe. Are there some stars in that endorsement, Mr. Littlefield?

THE MASTER: Yes.

THE WITNESS: That is not a complete endorsement. In other words, there was something omitted here.

MR. ANDERSON: I find the length of the Blue Ridge Road given here, at page 127, as 16.8104 miles, being the report of the Virginia Central Railroad Company for 1860, page 129 of Document 17.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Is the endorsement as stated in the paper a correct copy of the endorsement on the original document?

A. It is not a complete copy. So far as it goes it is verbatim.

Q. Are the signatures the same?

A. They are.

Q. All the signatures appearing upon the original document are contained in your copy?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no signatures are omitted, on the endorsement?

A. No, sir.

MR. ROBINSON: I ask to have that paper marked in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26, December 9th, 1914, C. B.

THE MASTER: Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26 does not contain any comments of Mr. Potter?

MR. HARRISON: None whatever. It is simply a transcript.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 26.

Commissioners of Virginia Commissioners of West Virginia

MR. HARRISON: I want to call attention to the Acts, Mr. Littlefield. The document or paper just filed, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26, being the value, ascertained by the Commissioners of Virginia and West Virginia, of the Blue Ridge Railroad, as of April, 1870, was made under and in pursuance of the concurrent Acts of the State of Virginia and the State of West Virginia, which are published and contained in the appendix to the original record, beginning at page 35 and extending to page 49, inclusive. I think these Acts have been refiled.

MR. LILLY: I think they have been reprinted.

MR. HARRISON: Perhaps I had better give a list of them, for convenience. The Acts referred to are as follows:

An Act of the State of Virginia to incorporate the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company, passed February 26th, 1866, found at page 35 of the appendix to the original record.

An Act of the State of West Virginia to incorporate the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company, passed March 1st, 1866, and found at page 37 of the original record.

An Act of the State of West Virginia to provide for the completion of a line or lines of railroad from the waters of the Chesapeake to the Ohio River, passed February 26th, 1867, found at page 40 of the original record.

An act of the State of Virginia to provide for the completion of a line or lines of railroad from the waters of the Chesapeake to the Ohio River, passed March 1st, 1867, found at page 43 of the original record.

An Act of the State of West Virginia confirming and amending the charter of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, passed January 26th, 1870, found at page 46 of the original record. This Act includes the contract with the Commissioners for the completion of the Covington and Ohio Railroad.

MR. HOLT: Do you recall, Mr. Harrison, whether or not any of these Acts detailed the power of these Commissioners?

MR. HARRISON: It gave them carte blanche power.

MR. HOLT: By what authority, in other words, is my inquiry, did they undertake to value the Blue Ridge Railroad?

MR. HARRISON: The authority conferred upon them by the Act of the State of West Virginia, which is identical with the Act of the State of Virginia, which is as follows, "And may also purchase"—that is the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad that had been chartered —"And may also purchase the right of the State of Virginia in and to the Blue Ridge Railroad by the surrender of State bonds to an amount equal to the value of said road at the time of purchase, under the contract with the Virginia Central Railroad Company, said amount to be ascertained by the Commissioners of the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company." In other words, there was no limitation upon the power of the Commissioners of the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company imposed by the Act of either State, but they were given unrestricted authority to ascertain the value.

THE MASTER: Are those the same Acts that required the Covington and Ohio to construct a railroad from Covington to the Ohio River?

MR. HARRISON: Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: This map indicates that at that time, or in 1861, the road from Covington to the Ohio River was simply located and not built.

MR. HARRISON: It was was not built; no, sir.

THE MASTER: This map indicates that about nine-tenths of that road would be in Virginia and about one-tenth in West Virginia. Have I got it right in my mind here?

MR. HARRISON: If your Honor will recall, the little town of Covington——

THE MASTER: It was constructed up to Covington, according to this map.

MR. HARRISON: It was. When the War began they were building the tunnel, several millions of dollars were spent in building the tunnel under the Alleghany Mountains.

THE MASTER: The practical fact is that in 1861 a road had been constructed to Covington and was in operation.

MR. ANDERSON: No, sir; in 1861 only to Jackson's River.

MR. HARRISON: How far is that from Covington?

MR. ANDERSON: About six or seven miles.

MR. LILLY: And it had been graded up to Covington.

MR. ANDERSON: A great deal of money had been spent west of Covington, there had been three or four millions spent west of Covington. The State was the sole owner of the Covington and Ohio.

THE MASTER: Let me see if I have this correct. I want it in the record. According to this plan, the Covington and Ohio Road had been constructed to within about five or six miles of Covington, and was in operation in 1861?

MR. ANDERSON: Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: And it had been created and partly constructed to this line of division between the two States, and from that line on to the Ohio River it had simply been located and not constructed; and as a part of the consideration for this sale the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad agreed to construct the road from Covington to the Ohio River?

MR. HARRISON: Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: That road, as a part of this sale, was under obligation to construct and operate a railroad from Covington to the Ohio River, and that in 1861 had been built up to the line.

MR. ANDERSON: No, further than that.

THE MASTER: Beginning at Covington and going towards the Ohio River there had been grading done up to the White Sulphur Springs, and from the White Sulphur Springs on, to a point somewhere near Gumbot, the road had simply been located.

MR. ANDERSON: There had been some money spent there.

MR. HOLT: There was no road constructed up to Covington.

THE MASTER: The contract under which the Blue Ridge Railroad Company was sold required the Chesapeake & Ohio to construct and complete and operate a road clear to the Ohio River. Am I right about that?

MR. HARRISON: That is right, sir.

THE MASTER: We have not anything definite in the record to show how much of the roadbed had been constructed.

MR. ANDERSON: But your former report showed how much had been expended in Virginia.

MR. LILLY: $1,114,000, or something like that, that had been expended.

MR. HOLT: That was not done by the State of Virginia, however?

MR. ANDERSON: Yes, that was done by the State of Virginia. The State of Virginia was the sole stockholder of the Covington and Ohio Railroad.

MR. HARRISON: That was one of the things that the State of Virginia agreed to do in 1861, to build that road.

THE MASTER: One of the main considerations of this sale was the $625,000, or whatever the amount is, and the agreement to construct and operate the road.

MR. HARRISON: To build from a point near the State line to the Ohio River. In other words, to carry out the original design of the Covington and Ohio Railroad, and the two States passed concurrent Acts so as to satisfy the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company.

MR. LILLY: You charged under your report $1,146,460.42 as expended in Virginia.

THE MASTER: Up to 1861?

MR. LILLY: Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: What page of the report is that found on?

MR. ANDERSON: Page 83 of your report, Covington and Ohio Railroad Company, $1,146,460.42. How much, and where, that was spent, I think, did appear in the testimony in a general way. A good deal of it was on the tunnels.

MR. HOLT: What was the eastern terminus of the Virginia Central Railroad?

MR. ANDERSON: The eastern terminus was Richmond.

MR. HOLT: Was it Richmond?

MR. ANDERSON: Yes, it was Richmond.

MR. HOLT: Was that the headwaters of the Chesapeake?

MR. HARRISON: It was the James.

MR. HOLT: These co ent Acts of the Legislature contemplated building a road across both States, with a bigger mileage in Virginia than in West Virginia.

MR. ANDERSON: The contract required them to build from Richmond. The road was already built to Richmond.

THE MASTER: The mileage of the road when fully constructed would be how much?

MR. ANDERSON: About 420 miles, something about that, from Richmond to Huntington.

THE MASTER: Evidently it would be more in Virginia than in West Virginia.

MR. ROBINSON: You may cross-examine.

By the Master:

Q. I want to inquire of Mr. Potter this. Have we got anything here which shows what this rule is that is referred to in the first part of this extract, "The rule established by award of the Commissioners of the Covington and Ohio Railroad, dated May 25th, 1867"?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about the rule?

A. No, sir.

MR. ROBINSON: That is all, Judge Holt.

THE MASTER: I want to ask Mr. Potter another question.

R COPY

Q. We have an Act in here authorizing the organization of this road under auspices of these Frenchmen. What was that Act?

MR. ANDERSON: There was one before the War and one after the War.

MR. ROBINSON: That begins on page 176 of the exhibits.

THE MASTER: I want to inquire of Mr. Potter and see whether he knows anything about this. I understand that this proposed Virginia Canal Company and the arrangement with the French people never was consummated?

MR. ANDERSON: No, it never was.

THE MASTER: But this Act, in Section 6, page 189 of the exhibits, provided that the Virginia Canal should issue to stockholders of the James River and Kanawha Company, other than the State, certificates, etc., and then pay annually to the holders of such certificates five per cent. per annum on the amounts thereof. What I want to find out is whether there is anything in the history of this legislation or of the James River and Kanawha Company upon which that peculiar provision was predicated, and whether that Act would have required that Company to pay to the stockholders other than the State, five per cent. Can anybody give me any information about that? This is February 3rd, 1866. Can anybody give me any information of any facts, legislative or otherwise, upon which the peculiar provisions of that Act were apparently predicated?

MR. HARRISON: Nothing but the expectation——

THE MASTER: Was there anything in legislation or anything in the records of the Company that would lead to the differentiation, so far as the dividend is concerned, as far as stockholders other than the State are concerned?

MR. ROBINSON: It appears that that was embodied in the statute passed March 29th, 1861, and that that statute incorporated a resolution of the stockholders passed on the 1st day of September, 1860.

THE MASTER: Where is that?

MR. ROBINSON: That is in the Act.

THE MASTER: Where do you find it in the Act?

MR. ROBINSON: If you begin at page 176 you will find the Act quoted, and the first paragraph is a Whereas, and then at the second paragraph there begins the agreement. That Whereas recites that the James River and Kanawha Company at their meeting in August, 1860, authorized an agreement between the president of the Company, in pursuance of such authority, and Bellot des Minieres and his associates, to which the Board of Public Works of the State gave its assent, as evidenced by the signature of its president. And then the agreement recites that it was entered into on the 1st day of September, 1860, and that agreement, among its other terms, provides, on page 178, that the outside stockholders may exchange two shares of their stock for one share of the new five per cent. stock.

MR. ANDERSON: They gave up half their stock, in other words.

THE MASTER: That Company was never incorporated?

MR. ANDERSON: The Virginia Central was incorporated.

THE MASTER: There is a tentative piece of legislation under which nothing was done.

MR. LILLY: I think the answer would be this, your Honor. At Section 6, the outside stockholders had certain rights there, but in Section 17 Virginia took care of herself by requiring an annuity of $135,000 a year, or the equivalent of six per cent. on $2,500,000 —I believe it to be $2,500,000.

MR. ANDERSON: Five per cent. on $2,500,000.

MR. LILLY: She was taking $135,000 a year.

THE MASTER: That is Section 17, on page 182?

MR. LILLY: Yes.

THE MASTER: That may take care of the whole situation.

MR. HOLT: And the whole thing fell through.

MR. ANDERSON: I suppose the State expected to get collateral benefit from the development of her territory.

THE MASTER: This clears the matter up, because it shows that the outside stockholders were taken care of in one way, and the State of Virginia in another way. The whole thing fell through, to be sure. This Section 17 shows that they were taking care of themselves as well as of the outside stockholders.

MR. LILLY: They were to invest not less than $20,000,000, and they had to widen the canal basin.

MR. ANDERSON: Where they would get water to fill the upper levels of that canal was left to conjecture.

MR. HOLT: Was that the thing they were going to carry over the mountains?

MR. ANDERSON: Yes, sir.

MR. LILLY: Section one on page 188 of Volume 2, shows the amount to be not less than $20,000,000, nor more than $35,000,000.

MR. HARRISON: It contemplated an expenditure of an enormous amount of money to carry that out.

At this point a recess was taken until 2 P. M.

AFTER RECESS:

MR. HARRISON: Mr. Littlefield, those books are here, four or five of them.

THE MASTER: Did you get all you wanted?

MR. HARRISON: It is understood that as soon as we are finished with them I would like to express them back to Mr. Axtell and get rid of the responsibility for them.

Continuation of the examination of ARTHUR G. POTTER:

Cross-Examination by Mr. Holt:

Q. In your Exhibit No. 24, Mr. Potter, relating to the James River and Kanawha Company, I understand that you cover a period of twenty-five years, from 1335 to September 30th, 1860; is that correct?

A. Is that page 68, Judge, in the exhibits?

THE MASTER: His question is whether in your Exhibit No. 24, beginning on page 1187 and running up to page 1190, you cover a period of twenty-five years of the James River and Kanawha Company.

THE WITNESS: I used the caption used in the report, and I am not sure whether it is twenty-five years. It is from the date of the organization of the Company to September 30th, 1860, and I have not inquired as to the exact date of the organization.

Q. And the object of your exhibit was to show that the expenditures exceeded the income during that period by $1,302,955.75; is that true?

A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. Now you embraced in your sum total of expenditures, on page 1189, the following items, as I understand it; annuity to the old James River Company, $517,500——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Likewise the dividends on the guaranteed loans, of $1,390,740.81?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Interest on State loans of $1,870,032.83?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Interest on North River Navigation Company bonds of $80,590.57?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Also interest on bills payable, interest on auditors' certificates, other interest and discount. All of those items which appear on page 1189 of Volume 3, new print, as I understand your exhibit, help to make up the sum total of what you call operating expenses; is that so?

A. No, sir; my certificate says for maintenance, up-keep, expenses and interest. I do not designate them as strictly operating expenses.

Q. Would the annuity to the old James River Company be an operating expense?

A. It was a constant charge on the revenue of the Company; I believe it would.

Q. It would be an operating expense, you think?

A. In that sense, that any money paid for the carrying along of the Company's obligations would be an operating expense.

Q. Would dividends on guaranteed loans be an operating expense?

A. I believe that is interest on guaranteed loans; that would be an expense.

Q. I am reading from the exhibit, dividends on guaranteed loans $1,390,740.81.

A. Well, I believe that the word dividends meant interest, because dividends, strictly speaking, would be declared by the Board of Directors, and these were obligations assumed for loans.

Q. Well, would that be an operating expense, call it interest or dividends?

A. I think it would be a charge against revenue, and I would not call it an operating expense, strictly speaking, but the result is about the same, that it would come out of revenue before any dividends could be declared by the Company.

Q. Interest on State loans, would that be an operating expense?

A. In the same sense that I have just stated, it would be.

Q. Interest on North River Navigation Company bonds, would that be an operating expense?

A. The same answer.

Q. And you make the same answer on bills payable?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Likewise as to interest on auditors' certificates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Also with respect to other interest and discount?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now it is by adding of these and other amounts together that you get the sum from which you deduct the total income for the period covered, in order to get at the deficit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us, without too much inconvenience, Mr. Potter, what those items would aggregate to which I have called your attention?

A. $4,098,109.73.

Q. Now if you will subtract the amount of that deficit from that, it will leave you what? Your deficit is $1,302,955.75.

A. $2,795,153.98.

Q. Then if the items aggregating the $4,098,109.73 were not to be treated as an operating expense and were to be stricken from your exhibit, it would leave you $2,795,153.98 as the net operating income covering that period, would it not?

A. The net operating income, exclusive of interest on the Company's obligations; it would be $2,795,153.98.

Q. When did this interest cease?

A. I judge from these figures that it ceased with the exchange by the State of Virginia of capital stock in the James River and Kanawha Company for the debt owed by the Company to the State.

Q. Do you recall what year that was?

A. 1860.

Q. Do you know what kind of stock she received in payment of these debts upon which this interest accumulated?

A. I judge from the Act that it was preferred stock.

Q. Was it preferred as to income or preferred as to income and principal both, under the Act?

A. I do not know. The Act I presume would show.

MR. HOLT: Is that Act in the record? I presume it is.

THE MASTER: Yes.

MR. HARRISON: In the old record or in the new one?

MR. ANDERSON: In the old record. That is the Act of the 23rd of March, 1860.

THE MASTER: The preference is as to income, as I remember it; not as to principal and income, but as to income only.

MR. HOLT: Of course that is always the way they arranged preferred stock, but Virginia had apparently a peculiar way of doing many things, by her Legislature. What is the date of that Act?

THE MASTER: I presume it is March 23rd, 1860; I presume that is right. What page is that found on in the new record? Wherever these references can go in, it saves me a good deal of work.

MR. HOLT: Page 1147 of Volume 3.

THE MASTER: That is right. It was passed March 23rd, 1860. The Act was to take effect when accepted by the stockholders of the James River and Kanawha Company. I do not know whether there is anything in the record that shows that or not.

Q. Now, I believe you said you excluded from your aggregate of expenditures certificates to the First Auditor amounting to $469,188.30, and the certificates to the Second Auditor amounting to $202,821.30?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those two groups were omitted, were they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you said you could find nothing that indicated to you what they were?

A. Well, in the limited time that I had at my command I could find nothing.

Q. Is it not a fact that all of those certificates to the First and Second Auditors represented dividends?

A. That I do not know.

Q. Will you turn to page 1145 of the James River and Kanawha, Volume 3, which analyzes those certificates for the year 1880, and tell me whether or not they do not all represent dividends.

A. It states that they are dividends, yes. I believe they are interest on loans.

Q. Well, page 1145 is part of a certificate of Mr. Rosewell Page, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the record—I mean that is a certified copy made by him from the records at Richmond, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, he sets down there the certificates to the First Auditor in each case to be dividends, does he not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And likewise the certificates to the Second Auditor to be dividends?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, why would you say then that you believe them to be interest?

A. Because I do not think the dividends would be paid except on capital stock, and there is no record anywhere of dividends being paid on capital stock; therefore I conclude that these dividends must mean interest on loans.

Q. Well, the record calls them plainly dividends.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In every instance?

A. Yes, sir.

MR. ANDERSON: No, not on page 1142.

MR. HOLT: I am talking about page 1145 now.

Q. How would a dividend be paid to the State of Virginia on capital stock?

A. I presume by a check of the Company, drawn to the First or Second Auditor.

Q. It would be a certificate, would it not, or a check?

A. It would be a check, yes, or a voucher.

Q. I believe you said this, Mr. Potter, that you did not find any evidence of construction account——

THE MASTER: Just a moment before you pass that, Judge. Do I understand that you think the item of $420,512.83 is practically identical with $469,188.30? You have just been inquiring about the dividends of 1839, dividends tide water connection, dividends S. S. and R. connections, and there are a lot of items that aggregate $420,512.83?

MR. HOLT: No, page 1145 simply gives the analysis of the payments for 1860, to the First and Second Auditors, and we thought that was indicative for all the years.

THE MASTER: The first item says dividend of 1839. I simply want to get it into my head as we go along. Here are certificates of Second Auditor, dividends of 1839. I would like to have explained, if it was a dividend, how a dividend of 1839 turns out to have been paid in 1860, twenty-one years afterwards.

MR. LILLY: They did that on the various railroads.

THE MASTER: I want to get something into the record, I do not want it to be a matter of conjecture, but I want to know if there is anything in the record that will give me any information about it.

MR. HOLT: All that we know about it is what this page shows. We have the record there covering the year 1860, in connection with the James River and Kanawha Company, which analyzes the certificates for that year to the First and Second Auditors. Well, they are said to be dividends, and we thought that that would be a pretty strong indication as to what the certificates back on page 1148-A meant.

THE MASTER: What I want to get at is, how a dividend for 1839 happened to be postponed until 1860.

MR. HOLT: There seems to be nothing here to show.

THE MASTER: Well, then that covers that.

By the Master:

Q. Do I understand you to say that interest to the State would be paid by certificates to the First Auditor?

A. No, I said it would be likely that it would be in the form of checks drawn to the First Auditor or the Second Auditor, according to the manner in which the loan was made to the Company.

Q. What are those certificates to the First Auditor, how do they come about?

A. I am at a loss to understand.

MR. ROBINSON: I was going to state, by way of explanation.

THE MASTER: Well, put it in later. Any statements outside of the record don't go.

MR. HOLT: I would like to hear Mr. Robinson's explanation, but the stenographer need not take it.

THE MASTER: Yes, let the stenographer take it. What is the use of asking Mr. Robinson to make an explanation that does not go into the record? I am not going to determine the case on something that is said that does not go into the record. Mr. Robinson or any other counsel need not make any explanation to me— what I mean is, whatever explanation goes in here on either side must be predicated upon some fact in the record, so that I can fall back on the fact.

MR. HOLT: I was asking for an explanation for my benefit.

THE MASTER: Go ahead and make it, Mr. Robinson, and take it right into the record. All of these things ought to go into the record, because I ought to have them where I can refer to them later on, if they are going to have any influence on me.

MR. ROBINSON: On the original hearing West Virginia filed an exhibit, Defendant's Exhibit G-1, found at pages 820-A to 820-M; and the last two pages of that exhibit, 820-L and 820-M, refer to the James River and Kanawha Company, and the dividends received by the Commonwealth on its capital stock in that Company are given in that Exhibit, and they show one dividend of $10,092, paid in 1836.

MR. LILLY: How does that explain other dividends?

MR. ROBINSON: Just a minute. That was the only dividend ever paid by this Company, according to this exhibit filed by West Virginia on the original hearing.

THE MASTER: Now, where does that exhibit show that it was paid in 1836?

MR. ROBINSON: The last two pages. The exhibit is about ten or twenty pages long. There it is right there (indicating).

THE MASTER: Oh, yes, I see it.

MR. ROBINSON: On the strength of this exhibit the Master found, at page 193 of his report, "The only dividend that the Company appears to have ever paid is $10,092. in 1836," referring to page 820-L of the record. Referring to page 1105 of Volume 3, being Document No. 17, it appears that there was overdue interest owing to the State amounting to $1,301,500.15. And as, according to West Virginia's Exhibit, no dividends were ever paid on the stock, I take it that these certificates are certificates issued to the State from time to time for interest that has not been paid. In other words, they are returns on loans and not on stock; you can characterize them as dividends or you can characterize them as interest, but they are returns on loans, and they are not returns on stock. The holdings of the State up to 1860 were very largely in bonds of the Company, and I think you can assume the accuracy of the statement and the correctness of the figures. That was checked by Mr. Potter, the accountant for Virginia, we understood.

MR. HOLT: But still the fact remains the same, that we find in this exhibit, certified from the records by Mr. Page, a declaration here of dividends, dividends, dividends——and what on?

MR. ROBINSON: You constantly say that dividends were paid on loans. Look at page 1145 and page 1144.

MR. HARRISON: Take page 1147.

THE MASTER: Let us have one page at a time.

MR. HARRISON: Take page 1147, and you will find that these dividends are described as dividends on guaranteed loan, $33,603.40.

MR. ROBINSON: Also page 1144.

MR. HOLT: I know, but on page 1146 and also page 1147 you find certificates here to First Auditor, interest on bond to the State, interest on loan of State stock, interest—wherever it is interest, it calls for interest.

MR. ANDERSON: I think the explanation is this, if your Honor please, and I think it is shown by this record; your Honor will find that at page 1148 there is an item among the disbursements of this Company of $118,500, dividends, declared on James River Company. That was an annuity which that Company, the James River Company, was primarily bound for, but which the State had guaranteed.

MR. ROBINSON: I would like to finish my statement. Now, referring to the items that Judge Holt mentioned on page 1145, and looking at the same items on the large sheet, page 1148-A, and comparing the dividends of 1839 on page 1145 with the dividends on guaranteed loan of 1839, it becomes apparent that they both refer to a loan as of that date.

MR. HOLT: They are separate items, are they not?

MR. ROBINSON: One is for the year, and the other is for the entire period. Then comparing dividends tide water connection with dividends on guaranteed loan for tide water connection, and in the same way comparing dividends S. S. and R. connections with dividends on guaranteed loan for the Southside and Rivana connections, and comparing dividends third division with dividends on guaranteed loan for the third division, the first statement referring to 1860, and the other to the entire period, it appears that the return is on a loan instead of on the stock, irrespective of the way that it is characterized.

THE MASTER: This will simplify it somewhat. On the strength of the exhibit that was put into the case originally on the first hearing, by West Virginia, checked up by the accountants of Virginia, the books of Virginia show that only a dividend of $10,000 was paid in 1836. Now, then, I shall hold that there was no other dividend paid on the stock of Virginia during that period, unless somebody can show me some record from the books of Virginia showing that an additional dividend was paid. That does not necessarily dispose of these items of course, but that takes care of that phase of it, so far as the stock is concerned.

MR. HOLT: These items on page 1145 are an exact copy of the record as it stands down there.

THE MASTER: Yes, I understand that.

MR. HARRISON: I would like to call your Honor's attention there to this fact—or perhaps Mr. Robinson did that——

THE MASTER: What is that

MR. HARRISON: It is in explanation of that entry on page 1145, of dividends in 1839, which you commented upon as being strange that they should be receiving a dividend in 1860 that was declared in 1839.

THE MASTER: Yes, precisely.

MR. HARRISON: Now, if you will look on page 1148-A you will find among the disbursements there dividends on guaranteed loans of 1839, $1,179,134.44.

THE MASTER: "Dividends of 1839, $60." That is evidently an abbreviated way of stating that interest amounting to $60. had been received and credited on the loan of 1839.

MR. ANDERSON: The total amount is $1,179,000.

THE MASTER: I get the point. But we are looking now at the accounts that appear to have been kept by somebody in the employ of the James River and Kanawha Company. Now, there are two sets of accounts that appear to relate to these accounts of the James River and Kanawha Company; one set is kept by Virginia, and now here is another set, and these are open to explanation and comment. I shall hold that so far as the books of Virginia are concerned, that she did not receive any dividends upon her stock, unless I can be shown that there is some book that shows that there was a dividend in excess of $10,000. What I hold about this is what I find about the items here and their relation to that.

MR. HOLT: I thought somebody could give us a little light, but instead they are simply indulging in commentaries on the record that we already have before us. In other words, that is a matter of argument rather than of proof or help.

THE MASTER: They are simply calling attention to other facts in the record which they think explain it, that is the idea, and that gives us the benefit of their idea at this time.

MR. HOLT: Shall we go on with the examination, your Honor?

THE MASTER: Yes, go on with the examination.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, I understood you to say that you saw nothing in the books that would indicate what portion or proportion of these expenditures, tabulated by you, were on account of construction. Is that the fact?

A. I so testified, with the exception that since I made these figures certain exceptions have been called to my attention.

Q. Well, now, look at the copy of the record of the James River and Kanawha Company, page 1143, Volume 3, and see if you do not find several items there under the general heading disbursements, that were on construction. Take the item of $23,477.31; that is expressly designated as construction, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, you have an item of $3,066.66, pay of engineers; that would be on construction, would it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, you have the Lynchburg feeder canal, $2,825.34; that would be construction, would it not?

A. It says construction, yes.

Q. Then, you have expenses of engineers, $637.70.

A. That might be either construction or general maintenance charge.

Q. Turn to page 1099 of the same record, and see if that item can be traced.

A. Those are the items which I have just referred to.

THE MASTER: At page 1099?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir, page 1099.

Q. On page 1099 of Volume No. 3, under the head of construction you have, Lynchburg feeder canal, $2,825.34; third division, $1,573.14; fourth division, $637.70. That is the sum of expenses of engineers on page 1143, is it not?

A. $637.70, yes sir; it is there designated as construction, yes, sir.

Q. Turn now, Mr. Potter, to page 1142, printed Volume No. 3, and see if you do not find another construction item of $1,559.43.

A. Yes, sir, New Canton Bridge.

Q. Also turn to page 1148 and tell us whether or not the item under disbursements, locks, of $1,573.14, is construction.

A. It is under the heading of unfinished improvements. The natural presumption would be that it was construction.

Q. It would be construction?

A. That is the natural presumption.

Q. Turn now to page 1099 and see if you do not find this item of $1,573.14 set down expressly as under the head of construction.

A. $1,573.14 on page 1099, that is right, construction, third division.

Q. Then these books and records down at Richmond do disclose the construction account, do they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you made up your exhibit regardless of construction?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not put everything into disbursements, whether it was construction or what not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, have you no construction items in there?

A. Yes, sir, page 1190, $9,482,484.46.

Q. No, I mean in striking your deficit, the difference between income and out-go, did you not——

THE MASTER: What do you mean now, for the whole period or for the first year?

MR. HOLT: For the whole period. I am going to take both.

Q. In striking your deficit, the differences between income and out-go, did you not utilize construction items?

A. I utilized them as capital expense, ignoring them as income and operating expense.

Q. Now, in the year 1860 did you not treat construction items, or moneys spent in construction, as if they were disbursements in the ordinary operation of the canal?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You did not?

A. I merely made a copy of the figures as they appeared in the reports of the Company.

Q. But construction items do there appear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, would they properly be chargeable to operating expenses?

A. Certainly not.

Q. But you have so used them, have you not?

A. No, sir, I merely made a statement of receipts and disbursements, classifying them as they appeared in the books containing the reports of this Company; and in my direct examination I simply stated that if those items contain construction items the deficit that I indicated would be reduced to that extent.

Q. But not having picked them out, you do not know what the reduction in the deficit would be?

A. No, sir.

Q. Therefore your deficit is unreliable, is it not?

A. The deficit that I have certified, and the only statement that I have certified, is not unreliable; it is reliable as based on the figures published.

Q. What I mean is this, Mr. Potter; is it not misleading? Does it in reality show the difference between income and expense of operation?

A. To which period do you refer now, before I answer that question?

Q. Well, I am referring to the year 1860 in these last questions.

A. I have told you that I have made no conclusions for the year 1860, except as qualified by the statement I made under the examination of Mr. Robinson.

Q. Well, the year 1860, a portion of it at least, was embraced in your first period, was it not, from 1835 down to September 30th, 1860?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the period during which you found this deficit of $1,300,000 odd?

A. A deficit of not less than $1,300,000.

Q. Not less than that now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that deficit was arrived at, as I understand you, in part at least, by using the construction items that were in part in the year 1860?

A. No, sir, your understanding is wrong. I testified that I took the figures that I found in the published reports, the secretary's report of the receipts and disbursements, from the beginning of the organization of the Company to 1860, September 30th, and in that group of accounts is a construction account to the extent of $9,482,484.46, which I understand contains all of the items which you have asked me about in these preceding pages. I have made no inquiry to determine whether they did or not, accepting the figures as they were reported, and certifying to that extent.

Q. Coming now to the Blue Ridge Railroad Company, Mr. Potter, I believe that you filed as your Exhibit No. 26. Am I right about that, Exhibit No. 26?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What valuation did these commissioners, according to this exhibit, put upon the Blue Ridge Railroad?

A. $625,348.08.

Q. Are you not in error about that?

A. I think not, sir.

Q. Did they not put a valuation on it of $490,734.99?

A. No, sir.

Q. And did they not obtain the $600,000 by adding to the $490,734.99 unpaid tolls?

A. The $490,734.99 is the present value of tolls to accrue, that is not the value of the road.

Q. What was it they were valuing?

A. They were valuing the tolls to accrue, as I understand it.

Q. They were valuing the tolls to accrue, and were treating that as the value of the road, were they not?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Then they never valued the road at all?

A. Maybe that is true.

Q. Well, I want to find out what it means. Did the Commissioners of Virginia and West Virginia value the Blue Ridge Railroad Company?

A. I rely upon the original document, to which I refer here, for the conclusion that they did.

Q. And you think the value they placed on it was $612,922.76?

A. No, $625,348.08. That is the price they paid for the road.

Q. What is the difference in the figures?

A. Interest.

Q. The $625,348.08 is made up of what items, Mr. Potter?

A. Amount of tolls, etc., accrued and unpaid, $122,187.77; present value of tolls, etc., to accrue, $490,734.99; and interest, $12,425.32.

By the Master:

Q. Where do you get that last item?

A. It is a combination of five items appearing at the bottom of the page, interest to April 1st, 1870, $2,289.43; interest to April 1st, 1870, $3,832.78; interest to April 1st, 1870, $3,438.63; interest to April 1st, 1870, $2,383.57; interest to April 1st, 1870, $480.91.

MR. HOLT: That interest, your Honor, explains the difference between the amount I gave as the valuation a while ago and the corrected amount that was given. I gave $612,922.76, and you said it was $625,348.08, which it is after you add that interest.

THE MASTER: I understand the $12,425.32 added to $612,922.76 amounts to $625,348.08; is that it?

THE WITNESS: Exactly, and that is the amount that the Commissioners ascertained to be the value of the road on the 1st day of April, 1870, as disclosed on the document that I have referred to.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now, then, can you tell us how they arrived at the $490,734.99?

A. No, sir, I have made no inquiry.

Q. Did they not ascertain it according to the actuary tables?

A. I do not know.

Q. What was the largest toll paid by that road for any one year?

A. I do not know. It says here, amount of tolls accrued and not paid—the largest amount there is $32,061.40.

Q. And that was in the year 1869, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the original cost of the Blue Ridge Railroad?

A. According to this statement it is $1,694,870.85.

Q. Now, if you will deduct $191,458.32 from the cost of the Road, leaving you $1,503,412.53, and divide that by the toll for the year 1869, you will get 43, won't you?

A. I merely copied this statement; I merely copied it.

Q. I understand, but we want you to analyze it now. You can do it better than I can, that is why I am asking you. You get forty-three years—well, we will call it years. Then when you look at the actuary table——

THE MASTER: What actuary table?

MR. HOLT: I have one here, furnished by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad; it is one they use.

THE MASTER: Have you got this rule referred to there? If you have, let me have it right now.

MR. HOLT: I was going right on through to show what they did, by Mr. Potter. They took the cost of the road, then they took the largest toll in any one year, and divided that toll into the cost of the road, and they got 43 as the result. They turned to the actuary tables to find out what number they must then multiply by in order to get the present value of those tolls—it is like the old mortality tables—and it gave them $490,000; to which they added tolls unpaid but accrued theretofore, which lifted it to the $600,000.

THE MASTER: On the theory that it was worth that much?

MR. HOLT: It would take the annual tolls just forty-three years to pay the cost of that road; and when you turn to the actuary tables you will find they used the decimal 15 to get the present value.

THE MASTER: If they had taken an average of those tolls——

MR. ROBINSON: It might have been more. $490,000 is the present worth of $32,000 for forty-three years; and $32,000, for forty-three years would give the total cost to the State, less the tolls already received.

Q. That is what they did, Mr. Potter—is not that evident to you now?

A. Yes, sir, it is evident on the face of the figures.

Q. Now let me put this case to you. Suppose, Mr. Potter, that the State of Virginia on the 1st day of January, 1860, had completed the Blue Ridge Railroad, at a cost of $1,600,000, and had turned it over to the Virginia Central to operate, upon the payment of tolls, and that the tolls from January 1st, 1860, down to January 1, 1861, had amounted to $32,000; and then this joint Commission had sat down to find the value of that road, and had taken the $32,000 of tolls, and ascertained that it would take tolls of that amount a period of 43 years to produce the cost of the road, and had arrived at a value on the 1st day of January, 1861, of $490,000, by that process, of that road, would you say that that would represent the value of the road at all?

A. No, I do not think so.

Q. In other words, the State of Virginia under such circumstances would spend $1,600,000, and then sell it on a toll basis, in less than twelve months, for $490,000—would not that be the result, taking the illustration I have given?

MR. LILLY: I do not want to criticize, and I know it is inadvertent, but I notice some counsel are suggesting or talking before the witness answers there.

THE MASTER: Is not the fact of more or less income a feature in the value of the property? Suppose they had spent $1,500,000, and it was not worth on the earning basis more than $500,000?

MR. HOLT: That may be true, your Honor, but so is my suggestion. You cannot tell what it was worth in 1861 by ascertaining what it was worth in 1870.

THE MASTER: I do not see how you can ignore the income bearing value of the property.

MR. HOLT: We ignore it for this reason, that the actuary tables do not value property upon the income basis at all. The theory of the actuary tables is the payment of a toll that will discharge principal and interest within a given time. And that is not the history behind this Road at all.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Potter, what the contract between the State and the Virginia Central Railroad Company was, upon which these tolls should be paid?

A. No, sir.

MR. HOLT: You need not take this in the record——

THE MASTER: Yes, take it in the record; I want it all.

MR. HOLT: It was never contemplated by the State of Virginia or by anybody else that they should lease this Road out until it should be paid for by tolls. Under the contract, as I understand it, the Virginia Central would have gone on paying the tolls, and after they had paid all the tolls, and the State had received them, the State would still own the Road.

THE MASTER: Have we got that contract in the record?

MR. HOLT: I do not know whether we have or not. I think we had better have it in.

THE MASTER: I think so, too. I want the contract.

MR. HOLT: Your Honor might construct a house today and rent it to me for $5,000 a year for five years; after I had paid you the $25,000, the rental for five years, you would have the rental and still have the house. In other words, they have adopted a rule of valuation here that goes to actuary tables, and that was never contemplated at all. The State of Virginia simply leased the Road to the Virginia Central.

THE MASTER: What you mean is that the Commissioners of Virginia and of West Virginia adopted a false basis, and the Legislatures ratified it.

MR. ANDERSON: They agreed in advance that that should be the value; it is West Virginia's act as much as Virginia's, and Virginia is the only person that suffered by it.

MR. HARRISON: If there was any suffering at all.

MR. ANDERSON: We will show you before we get through that that is undoubtedly the truth in this case.

MR. HOLT: We did not have, according to the theory of things here, any interest in or control over the property at all. We had an equity in it, it is true, according to our theory. But here is a Road that is valued—I do not care by whom—in the year 1870, which is an utterly immaterial date, on any horn of the dilemma, to take in this case, whether it is January 1, 1861, or June 20, 1863. But this exhibit we do not deem worth anything at all; they never did value the Road; they went upon the theory of annuities, that had nothing in the world to do with this transaction, nothing whatever.

THE MASTER: Well, what did it have to do with? Here are two sets of Commissioners, appointed by these two States, for the purpose of selling this property. Now they reach a certain basis for a certain reason. Now, what did it have to do with?

MR. HOLT: They undertook, and the language of the Act, as Mr. Harrison read it there this morning—they were given power to value, that is true, to value that property as of that date, 1870. They undertook to do that. Now, even if both States are bound by it, still that does not affect this suit, because its value in 1870 does not constitute its value at any other time. But even for 1870, the way they value it, even though everybody might be bound by it, it strikes me as being utterly ridiculous. I could, by leasing my road out one year, after it had cost me $100,000,000, by that process let some fellow take it away at one-tenth of its cost, and perhaps at one-tenth its actual value. They are applying to it an annuity table, which the history of the Road never contemplated at all.

MR. ANDERSON: That is just as much West Virginia's mistake as it is Virginia's.

MR. HOLT: I understand your point on that. My answer to that is this, that even though the two States, West Virginia included, had the power, under legislative enactments, to value that Road in 1870, that is an utterly immaterial finding so far as this case is concerned.

THE MASTER: You stopped when you stopped on your direct examination the other day. The only time when you made a change of base was when Mr. Hillman increased his schedule.

MR. HOLT: The value we claim in our exhibits is $1,600,000.

THE MASTER: You claim that that is the sales value, and the notes show it. Mr. Hillman testified before that that was the sales value, $625,000.

MR LILLY: That is what they got for it.

THE MASTER: That is what they say is its sales value.

MR. HOLT: Sales price.

THE MASTER: He said it was the sales value, and you stopped your case on it

MR. HOLT: Oh, no, your Honor.

THE MASTER: In your examination in chief you stopped your case on Mr. Hillman's statement that it was the sales value; and then he said on the cross-examination that, under the circumstances, to make the schedules consistent, he would make the claim for 1861 $1,600,000. That is exactly how the case developed.

MR. ROBINSON: If you will turn to page 13 of the exhibits you will find defendant's summary filed on the direct-examination, and you will see the Blue Ridge Railroad Company, built by the State, par $1,604,-723.23, value $625,348.08.

MR. LILLY: There is a double star, and it says, "Sales value;" that is what it brought.

THE MASTER: That is what I am saying; when you stopped your case in chief you stopped on the testimony of Mr. Hillman that that was the sales value. If he had seen this, he did not take the pains to give us the benefit of it.

MR. HOLT: That may be true, but let me give you the history of this exhibit here.

MR. HARRISON: Judge, will you let me interrupt you?

MR. HOLT: No, I want to make my statement first.

MR. ANDERSON: This argues the case in piecemeal.

THE MASTER: This is perfectly proper.

MR. HOLT: The Master asked me about this exhibit.

THE MASTER: Certainly, and we can develop this right here as well as we can later on. I want to get his views and your views.

MR. HOLT: If you will turn to Volume 2 of the present record, marked Exhibits, you will find on page 13 the original exhibit filed by Mr. Hillman. That gave as its value its sale price, $625,348.08. Now he corrected that by a substitute exhibit.

THE MASTER: What page is that?

MR. HOLT: That you will find on page 12-A, and that is where we ended our part of the case; and under the head of value we put it $1,604,723.23. And then under the head of claim disposed of for, just as an independent fact, $625,348.08. But the value claimed in that corrected Exhibit is the cost price of that Road.

THE MASTER: That is the corrected exhibit.

MR. HOLT: Yes, that is the corrected exhibit. Now, you have in mind this fact, that we never did correct it until his cross-examination came along; and as the result of that cross-examination we substituted this new exhibit on page 12-A for the old exhibit on page 13.

THE MASTER: Well, now, my recollection is correct, is it not?

MR. HOLT: Absolutely correct, except that when we rested our case we rested it on this exhibit.

THE MASTER: When you see the record you will notice I do not go so far as this exhibit. I say, when you rested your case on his examination in chief——

MR. HOLT: It was the cross-examination that resulted in the correction of the exhibit.

MR. LILLY: What I wanted to call your Honor's attention to about those two stars there, alongside of the $625,000, there is a marginal note there that that is the sales value; and what was meant by that is sales price, and what we meant by it was the cost of construction.

THE MASTER: Page 12-A is a schedule that is filed subsequently to the schedule on page 13.

MR. LILLY: Even in that, when he said sales value it referred to the price Virginia got for it.

THE MASTER: If Mr. Hillman knew all about these facts when he drew that original schedule, No. 13, I want him to explain to me why he did not put them in.

MR. HOLT: You mean the report of the Commissioners?

THE MASTER: Certainly. The way this thing stopped was on Mr. Hillman's schedule of $625,000, and one statement by you in the record of $625,000. Now, if he knew about this statement here, and the manner in which this result was ascertained, what I would like to have him explain when he gets on the stand is why he did not give me the information at that time.

MR. HOLT: All he was doing at that time, I presume, and he must have seen it, because there is where he would give the price at which it was disposed of——

THE MASTER: On this schedule he must have been expecting me to take his $625,000. Now, an entirely different condition develops. If he knew all about it at that time, I would like to have him explain, when he goes on the stand, why he did not put it in.

MR. HARRISON: Now I want to refer your Honor at this point——

THE MASTER: He is going on with the cross-examination.

MR. HARRISON: It is in connection with the cross-examination. I would like to call your Honor's attention to page 394 of the new record, where the cross-examination on the subject of the Blue Ridge Road began, my cross-examination there about the middle of the page:

"Q. Now take up item No. 5 of Defendant's Exhibit No. 3, page 13, the Blue Ridge Railroad built by the State. What was the total amount expended by the State for that Road January 1, 1861?

"A. $1,604,723.23, as shown on page 27 of the printed record.

"Q. What value as of January 1, 1861, do you put upon the total expenditure made by the State in the Blue Ridge Road which you have just given?

"A. $625,348.08.

"Q. How did you arrive at the value of that investment as of that period?

"A. It was the sales value as of that period.

"Q. When did the State receive the money or bonds, as the case may be?

"A. April 1, 1870."

MR. HOLT: That is all true, Mr. Harrison; I recall that; and it was as the result of your cross-examination that we put in the corrected exhibit, claiming the cost price instead of the sales price as of January 1st, 1861.

THE MASTER: That is the way I understand it.

MR. HOLT: That is the history that lies behind it. I thought the Master said when we rested our case we stood on it, but you did say and meant when we rested Mr. Hillman's direct-examination. Your statement was accurate.

MR. HARRISON: Your Honor will find by pursuing that—I do not care to go into all that, but when he was being cross-examined on that and asked to explain why he gave the sales value as of one period and the cost value as of another period, he wanted then to correct and make them harmonious, and exclude the sales value, and put the cost value at both periods, both 1861 and 1863.

THE MASTER: Go right along, Judge Holt. Anything further you have on that line you may reserve for your cross-examination, Mr. Harrison.

By Mr. Holt.

Q. Mr. Potter, have you ever examined the contract by which the State of Virginia let the Virginia Central Railway operate the Blue Ridge Railroad?

A. No, sir.

MR. HOLT: Do you know, Mr. Robinson, or you, Mr. Harrison, whether that contract is in this record anywhere, old or new?

MR. ROBINSON: It is not.

THE MASTER: It is not; I have looked for it very carefully. We had better have that contract, had we not?

MR. HOLT: I suspect we should have that contract. I do not know whether it is in existence or not. I never saw it.

THE MASTER: Does anybody know whether that is in existence or not?

THE WITNESS: I have seen it; it is in the records somewhere.

MR. HILLMAN: The cash book or journal where this entry starts, concerning this $90,000 which shall be added to the cost of the Road and expended by the Virginia Central, and then allowing them to reimburse themselves from the tolls, simply states that that is the agreement, but it does not enter into any details of the agreement. There must, of course, have been some understanding back of that, but I have never seen the agreement back of that, nor did I look for it.

THE MASTER: I think we ought to have that if you can find it.

MR. HOLT: Of course, that contract, if it is what I infer it is, would knock the valuation by mortality tables all to pieces.

THE MASTER: Well, whatever the fact is, it ought to be put in and given all the weight it is entitled to. We want to get all the facts, whatever they are.

MR. ANDERSON: I think there is a complete reply to Judge Holt's attitude.

THE MASTER: I cannot have go into this case as argument statements of fact that do not appear in this record, because they do not do me any good, and I cannot reach any opinion on them. Whatever there is that bears on this item that ought to be here in order to enable you to make your argument, and in order to enable me to reach a conclusion, must go into this record as a fact; because otherwise I have not anything to go and come on. I shall not make any finding unless there is something in this record that I can predicate it on. Arguments and explanations may be all right—I do not say now that the argument does not clean it up perfectly—but if the argument is not predicated upon something that is in the case it will fall right to the ground.

MR. HOLT: We could not expect you to do otherwise. What is it you suggest, Mr. Anderson?

MR. ANDERSON: It is all in the printed record, and was before we ever came here. I do not think it is wise to argue this case piecemeal as we go along; but there is an unanswerable argument in answer to your position.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, returning for a moment to your exhibit concerning the James River and Kanawha Company, you speak of a deficit occurring in a certain period of time of $1,302,955.75, without making any allowance for depreciation on the Company's property. Is it not a fact that they were renewing the property all the while, and spending money out of their revenues in that direction?

A. I have found statements in various reports indicating that that was done, but I have found also statements indicating that the property was in bad condition and needed further repairs, further replacements, etc.

Q. Can you tell me just where those statements are to be found?

THE MASTER: You mean the last statements?

MR. HOLT: Yes, sir, the ones indicating the property to be in bad condition.

A. On page 715 of this Volume 5 of reports of the James River and Kanawha Company for the years 1855 to 1860, at the top of the page, the chief engineer, E. Lorraine, reports——

THE MASTER: Is that printed here in this document?

THE WITNESS: It is not printed in the record in this case, but is to be found in Volume 5 of the James River and Kanawha Company reports.

THE MASTER: Very well.

THE WITNESS: The chief engineer reports, under date of December 14, 1859:

"Upon the first division the canal is generally in good condition, but the repairs of the mechanical work have not been kept up as well as usual, nor as well as economy and even safety demands."

Further on he says:

"The culvert near Pemberton, and the one on Mr. Mayo Cabell's Estate require re-building, both of them having been disrupted by breaches in the canal. There is constant danger at both of these culverts."

Then at the foot of the same page:

"I beg leave respectfully to urge upon you the propriety, nay, the absolute necessity of paying the present mechanics on the line, and re-instating those who have left because they were not paid."

Continuing, the report merely points out that there were many things that require—it is quite a long report—that require attention and require money.

Q. Now, you read the president's report for the same year, did you not?

A. I have read most of it, I believe, yes.

Q. And as you said a moment ago, you found some things indicating it was out of repair, and others that they were making renewals out of revenue?

A. Yes, sir. These notes presented by Mr. Hillman in these two sheets that I have looked over would indicate that many repairs were being made out of current revenue.

THE MASTER: Just exhibit that original record there to the counsel on the other side, so that either now or later they may read into the record anything that is explanatory of the statements that you have read, I want what both of you think is the whole record on this. You need not do it right now. When it is read in, read it at this place.

MR. HOLT: I believe that is all we care to ask Mr. Potter, your Honor.

MR. HARRISON: We do not care to re-examine Mr. Potter.

MR. HOLT: Then that is all with Mr. Potter.

By The Master:

Q. Mr. Potter, have you made any examination of the books of Virginia or any of the accounts for the purpose of ascertaining whether any dividends were paid by the James River and Kanawha Company after January 1, 1861?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have not made any examination?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Then you do not know anything about it?

A. No, sir, I do not.

THE MASTER: Now we have these original documents here, and, unless it is agreed to, the statement of no witness as to what the original documents show will be accepted. If there is no objection made, I have no objection to these witnesses stating what they think the record shows, provided the record is handed to me so that I can see what it shows.

MR. HOLT: What I want to get at with Mr. Hillman is this, all of the extracts that he has in this exhibit come out of the president's report, do they not?

MR. HILLMAN: Some of them from document No. 17, but they are already printed in the record.

MR. HOLT: Then all those that have not heretofore been printed come out of the president's report?

MR. HILLMAN: Yes, sir.

MR. HOLT: In other words, we will get all we want by printing the president's report.

THE MASTER: I suppose it would be competent for West Virginia to ask Mr. Hillman if he had a certain document, and if the document did or did not contain certain things, and on cross-examination they might go into it. Of course, on objection, I won't allow any witness to put in a statement of what is in the record, as long as I have the original record here. You can pick out what you want and they can pick out what they want, all subject later to the fact that I am to see the whole original myself.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN, recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

By the Master:

Q. What is the fact, does the president's report that you are looking over now contain the facts upon which you predicate the statements in your summary, outside of the facts that are already in the record?

A. Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: They may read in such parts of the report as they like, and the other side may read such parts as qualify it, if that is agreeable. Meanwhile, I want the whole report myself to look over, because there may be something that I think ought to go in which does not impress the distinguished counsel as being necessary to put in.

MR. HARRISON: Judge, might you not go on now with the first exhibit, and we can deal with this when we get to it? We might make progress if you can begin with the figures that you want to examine Mr. Hillman about.

THE MASTER: Have you the rule that was referred to in this Blue Ridge Railroad matter?

MR. HOLT: I am going to see if I can ascertain that from Mr. Hillman.

Direct-examination by Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, have you examined Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26, today filed by Mr. Potter, relative to the Blue Ridge Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Have you prepared a counter-exhibit embodying your criticisms upon the method adopted by the joint Commissioners of Virginia and West Virginia for the valuation of that Road?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. (Handing paper) Take the paper now handed you and state whether or not it is the counter-exhibit prepared by you.

A. It is.

Q. Are the figures therein used correct?

A. Yes, sir, they are.

Q. Did the Commission appointed by Virginia and West Virginia, as shown by the Exhibit 26 of Mr. Potter, value the Blue Ridge Railroad as of January 1, 1861?

A. No, sir, they did not.

Q. As of what date did they value it?

A. They valued it as of the date of 1870.

Q. Can you explain to the Master the process resorted to by them in arriving at this valuation?

A. Yes, sir, I have figured it out, and it is as follows: the tolls for a certain year, namely, 1869, as shown on Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26, were taken and divided into the cost of the Road, as shown on the books of the State of Virginia, after deducting from that cost the amount of tolls which the Blue Ridge Road, or its lessees, had turned in; which left the value $1,503,412.53. Paying in that much per annum, a little over $32,000, it would take 43 years to amount to the $1,503,-412.53. Therefore the actuary's table was referred to as to the present value of one dollar, for a payment which would extend and pay principal and interest in 43 years. That amounts, according to the exhibit filed, which exhibit is a copy of a paper or report of this Commission, to 15.3061. The $32,061.40, the tolls for 1869, is then multiplied by 15.3061, and produces the sum of $490,734.99, as the present value of annuity of $32,000. To that sum is then added the amount of tolls for which the lessee was in default, and then certain items of interest which had accrued on those tolls, the total of which makes up the $625,348.08, for which the Road was sold. I have before me one of the actuary tables, which is an extract from the interest and bond tables of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, by William H. C. Bartlett, LL.D., their actuary, dated 1878, which was furnished me by the Chesapeake & Ohio people, and was evidently the one they have used, since by reference to it, on a 6 per cent. basis the 40 year figure would be 15.0463, and the 45 year figure would be 15.4558. Therefore it is evident that the 43 year figure which details happen to be omitted on the paper before me, would coincide with the figure used on Exhibit 26, of 15.3061.

By the Master:

Q. Is that a method of capitalizing the earning power—assuming $32,000 to be the earning power per year, is that a method of capitalizing it?

A. No, sir, not unless you were capitalizing it with a view that the earning power should be not only the interest on the investment, but at the same time should be sufficient to pay the principal.

Q. That would be capitalizing both the principal and interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would that be a method of capitalizing the earning power of that amount, would it be a proper method of capitalizing the earning power of $32,000, if you wanted to take care of both principal and interest?

A. If it was assumed, sir, that this amount was the amount which was to take care of both principal and interest.

Q. Well, assuming that this was a total earning power, the $32,000, would that be a proper method of capitalizing the sum that would take care of the principal and interest?

A. No, sir.

Q. How would you capitalize it?

A. I would capitalize it on the basis of its earning power, upon the basis of six per cent per annum, and allow the principal to run indefinitely as an investment.

Q. Then, would that be a proper basis of the sale of property, or ought it not to be capitalized on the basis of taking care of both principal and interest, on the transfer of the title of the property? Here was a case where the transfer of the title of the property was made, and the seller must receive its equivalent in some way.

A. I should not think that he was receiving its equivalent.

Q. Why not?

A. For the reason that in this method he would receive no return upon his investment. He has simply taken and divided——

Q What do you mean by receiving no return on the investment; do you mean the aggregate investment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or, the investment measured by its earning power?

A. The investment measured by its earning power.

Q. That is $32,000 a year, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, on this basis of capitalization he would not receive the principal?

A. No, sir; he would simply receive his interest.

Q. What would be the sum that would have been reached by these Commissioners if they had taken an earning power of $23,000 a year, instead of $32,000 a year? That is, what principal sum would they have reached on the same basis of calculation, on the basis of $23,000 earning power as compared with $32,000? Would it be 23/32 of $625,000?

A No, sir; it would not. I will figure it out for you. I will use the value of $1,503,000, the same as he has.

Q. Yes, exactly, figure it on the same basis that he has.

A. That runs a little beyond my actuary table—I can give it to you approximately.

Q. You need not stop to do it now, you can make it and put it in later

A. It will only take a moment.

Q. I was simply getting at a hypothetical estimate here I have taken the five years of tolls, and the average is $23,548, and roughly speaking I wanted to see what that would be as compared with the $32,000 on the same theory.

A. About $379,500. Your Honor, I will say that that is somewhat approximate—it will not be far from the value—for the reason that my actuary tables only run for 50 years, and I had to add an estimate for 65 years.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Do you consider that a proper method of arriving at the actual value of the Blue Ridge Railroad?

A. No, sir.

Q. You may tell the Master at this point whether or not you had ever seen before this computation which is Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26.

A. No, sir; I had never seen it before.

Q. Where had you gotten the sales price of that Road for your former exhibit, named as about $620,000?

A That is taken from the records of the Company in toto, amounting to $625,348.08, shown on page 27 of the exhibits in this case, which is journal D, internal improvement fund, page 171.

Q. That then was the source of your information upon the subject of sales price, and not this paper that has been exhibited as Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Master:

Q. You took that item without any knowledge as to how the result was reached.

A. I did; yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt.

Q Will you file this exhibit relative to the Blue Ridge Railroad Company, prepared by you, as a part of your testimony, and mark it Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 1?

A. Yes, sir; I file it so marked.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 1, December 9th, 1914, C. B.

Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 1 is as follows:

State of West Virginia.

Cost of the Blue Ridge Railroad.

Comments on exhibit as given by A. G. Potter, as to value of the Blue Ridge Railroad.

Mr. Potter's exhibit is merely a statement as to how the price for which the Blue Ridge was sold, was arrived at by the Joint Commission, and for which price the road was afterward sold.

The whole transaction was based upon 1869 toll payments, and has little or no relation to the value of the property on January 1, 1861.

It is erroneous for two fatal reasons. First, that it is based upon a date 10 years subsequent to the date contended for, and secondly, because the whole matter is based upon an erroneous method of valuing property, (the actuary process), which unfortunately has been followed in final settlement.

Its fallacy is evidence because of the fact that they treat the return as an annuity, that pays principal as well as interest, when no such construction was ever intended when the road was built by the State of Virginia and leased to the Virginia Central R. R. for its tolls.

Page 19, Volume of C. & O. Reports of 1867-76, shows that they took up the cost of this road on their books as follows, Sept. 30, 1871:

Amount of tolls paid as per last report	$ 271,687.53
Common stock issued for purchase of road & tunnel	2,000,000.00
Total added to cost of road and property of the C. & O. R. R. on account of the acquisition of this Blue Ridge Railroad	$2,271,687.53 which looks a little better than the meager $490,734.99 allowed as its value by the actuary process.

It would seem that the road having cost $1,604,723.23, in 1861, and valued by a railroad at $2,271,687.53 in 1871, would suggest very strongly that it was worth its cost in 1861 and always continued to be.

I certify that all the figures used in the above exhibit have been correctly taken from the original records as noted above.

C. W. HILLMAN,
Accountant for West Virginia.

MR. HOLT: I do not know whether we have any other supplemental exhibits that conflict with that or not.

Q. I note from this exhibit, Mr. Hillman, that you give the figures at which the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad carried this Road upon its books. Will you state what those figures were?

A. $2,271,687.53.

Q. What do they represent?

A. The amount added to the cost of property by Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company upon the acquisition of this Blue Ridge Railroad.

Q. From what record do you take those figures?

A. Page 19, Volume of Chesapeake & Ohio reports, 1867 to 1876, the date being September 30th, 1871. This book is in the room now, having been sent up by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company officials for our inspection.

Q. Have you correctly transcribed those figures into your exhibit?

A. Yes, sir.

MR. ROBINSON: I have a question or two on that exhibit. Shall I ask them here and let it go right into the record now?

MR. HOLT: I think that will do just as well as any other time.

MR. ROBINSON: I think the Master might like to have it with the others.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Mr. Hillman, this reference to which you refer, page 19 of the report as of September 30th, 1871, contains the entry, "For cost of Blue Ridge Railroad and Tunnel by last report." Referring back to page 15 of the report for September 30th, 1870, there is an entry for Blue Ridge Railroad and tunnel, "Tolls to the State for the Blue Ridge Railroad and tunnel, by last report," carried down to a total of $271,687.53. So that your characterization of that item appears to be correct. There is also an entry, total added——

THE MASTER: Over what period were those tolls paid?

MR. ROBINSON: Oh, away back, a number of years.

THE MASTER: I want to know about it.

MR. ROBINSON: That is all the tolls to date.

THE MASTER: Is there anything there that shows what the annual sum received was for tolls?

MR. ROBINSON: The entry as of September 30th, 1870, is as follows, "For Blue Ridge Railroad Company tunnel, tolls to the State for the Blue Ridge Railroad and tunnel, by last report, $247,352.46; tolls and interest in April 1st, 1870, $80,508.24; express charges on bonds and expense of settling with the State, $445; making a total of $328,305.70." Then there is an entry, "Less difference value Virginia registered bonds and interest, $56,618.17," making a total of $271,687.83. In other words, tolls of a face value of $80,508.24 are settled in Virginia bonds, which have a discount of $56,618.17, making a difference of a little less than $24,000 in money paid to discharge the tolls for that year. But the point that I want to bring out here, before we come to these tolls, relates to the entry of capital stock. The entry reads, "For capital stock issued for purchase of road and tunnel, $2,000,000."

Q. I would like to ask you, Mr. Hillman, if you looked into the report to see what consideration the State got for that $2,000,000 of capital stock. You looked up the other item; did you look up this item?

A. The State?

Q. No, the Company.

A. I do not know.

Q. You did not look that up?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Well, I refer to page 10 of the report to the stockholders at their annual meeting, November 25th, 1870, where, under the heading, "Purchase of the Blue Ridge Railroad Company and tunnel," page 10, the report states, "Under the administration of our immediate predecessors arrangements were made for the purchase by this Company of the interest of the State of Virginia in the Blue Ridge Railroad and tunnel. These arrangements have been carried out on the terms and conditions approved by the late Board of Directors in November last, and by you at your last annual meeting. This object has been accomplished by the issue of 20,000 shares of the capital stock of the Company, which have been given in payment for the requisite amount of the bonds of the State of Virginia." Would that indicate to you what the State received for its $2,000,000 of capital stock?

A. Do you mean the State?

Q. What the Company received for its $2,000,000 of capital stock I should have said.

A. It would indicate that they had bought the bonds with it, or exchanged it for bonds.

Q. You say that it would indicate that they had given $2,000,000 of stock for sufficient Virginia bonds with which to purchase the Blue Ridge Railroad?

A. Yes, sir; that would be a proper interpretation, provided that is the proper statement.

MR. HARRISON: That was a report of the president and directors to the stockholders.

THE MASTER: This $625,000 odd was paid in bonds of the State?

MR. ROBINSON: Yes, the $625,000 odd was paid in bonds of the State.

THE MASTER: And the $2,000,000 of capital was issued for the bonds?

MR. ROBINSON: Yes, sir. This is a report of the officers to the stockholders.

Q. Now I refer to page 13 of the history of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, dated at Richmond, 1868, found in the same volume, which states in regard to the Blue Ridge Railroad and tunnel as follows: "Blue Ridge Railroad and tunnel at Rock Fish Gap built by the State, costing $1,800,000, by a contract with the Commissioners under the Act of 1867, can be bought for $300,000, adding to the above unencumbered basis $1,500,000 for the value of the Road." Would that entry indicate to you the cash value of the Virginia bonds or the amount which would have to be expended to secure the Virginia bonds to purchase the Blue Ridge Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir; that would indicate that the amount of these bonds—that these bonds, some $625,000, could have been purchased at about 50 cents on the dollar.

By the Master:

Q. Cash?

A. Yes, sir. It would also indicate to me, from the excerpt read, that the valuation placed upon it by the Road was $1,500,000 more than that, since it added that to their unencumbered value of the road.

Q. Do you mean by that that the report to the stockholders gave them to understand that they were getting a property worth $1,500,000 for $325,000?

A. That is my interpretation of the excerpt that was read to me; yes, sir.

Q. Does that mean property that cost that sum of money?

A. Yes, sir; if you will deduct the $300,000 which these bonds are supposed to cost from the $1,800,000, which they have stated that the tunnel originally cost, it would leave $1,500,000, unencumbered, which they should add to the value of the Road.

Q. Does it mean any more than that they reported to their stockholders that they could buy a property that cost $1,800,000 for $1,300,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what it means?

A. It means that, and that therefore they had added to the value of their property $1,500,000.

Q. You would not think that they were conveying to the stockholders the idea that they were making a profit of $1,500,000?

A. That would be my interpretation of it.

Q. Do you really think that the officers were reporting to the stockholders that they could buy a property for $300,000, property that was actually worth $1,800,000?

A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOLT: Is not that what it says?

THE MASTER: I would like to inquire where the State of Virginia was when this transaction was going on. I think the practical situation is obvious enough. Have you anything more from Mr. Hillman, Mr. Robinson?

MR. ROBINSON: That is all.

THE MASTER: Suppose we go on until six o'clock, and then suspend for dinner, and get back at eight o'clock. I will suspend now for about five minutes.

THE MASTER: What about this rule established May 25th, 1867, have we got that rule anywhere?

MR. HOLT: I do not think we have; the only reference I have ever seen to it is in that document there. They evidently met and held some sort of a confernce, and agreed how they should do things, I infer from that statement.

THE WITNESS: I think I can explain that, your Honor, if Judge Holt is willing.

MR. HOLT: Go right along.

THE WITNESS: If you recall, on these large loans that they had, they have always been, we might say, discounted for cash. Those loans consisted of a return which should be paid in of 7 per cent., 6 per cent. to represent interest and 1 per cent. to represent the sinking fund. And evidently the rule of 1867 is the rule by which they determine the present value of those different loans, which you remember were settled for less than their face value frequently, as is shown in our prior exhibits.

THE MASTER: I do not see how that has any necessary connection with this. I do not see any evidence of any discount here; they seem to have taken an arbitrary sum and worked out a theory, but I do not see that they have made any discount for anticipation of payments made in advance.

THE WITNESS: The proposition was that 7 per cent., running a certain number of years, would pay both the principal and interest of the loan, and they have then applied that rule, which I suppose is the rule of 1867, although I have no evidence on the subject, about this loan.

THE MASTER: Our whole theory of computation is predicated upon a 6 per cent. basis, is it not?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: So that I do not see how that gives us any explanation, that they had a computation based upon a 7 per cent. basis in 1867, and then ultimately worked it out on a 6 per cent. basis. I do not know as that would be of any value, if we could get it, but I would like to see what they decided to do, and it may give some reasons why they decided to do it. Of course that was away back there, and there were three men representing each State. Is there any way we can get that rule?

MR. ANDERSON: I do not know.

MR. ROBINSON: Judge Holt has pointed out that the rule is arbitrary, and we have not said that it was not.

MR. HOLT: I think that paper shows on its face what they did.

THE MASTER: There is no doubt that it shows what they did; but my idea was that if we could get this rule, they might give some explanation as to how they reached the conclusion. Has anybody made any search for it?

MR. HOLT: I think not.

THE MASTER: No effort has been made to find it. Now what about the tolls, beginning when it first began to pay tolls? Do you know anything about that, Mr. Hillman? What is the first year in which tolls were begun to be paid, and can you give me the tolls for that year and the succeeding years, up to 1870?

THE WITNESS: Will you let me just think a moment, and see whether amongst my books and papers I have anything.

THE MASTER: Yes, certainly.

THE WITNESS: No, sir; I know that tolls were paid prior to 1861, January 1st, 1861. I remember that fact. How long prior I do not know. The sum total of my absolute knowledge upon that point is shown upon page 27 of Volume 2 of the present record.

THE MASTER: Well, that simply gives——

THE WITNESS: That shows actual payments up to December 31st, 1863, of $79,932.74, and forgiven tolls, at the head of the page, for the same period, of $90,147.62.

THE MASTER: Where is that, forgiven tolls?

THE WITNESS: Right after the cost of construction it says "Amount invested in road after January 1st, 1861, was $90,147,62, all of which was allowed to the Virginia Central Railroad, which was to do the work, as a credit on their toll account, and which amount was in addition to the tolls mentioned below."

THE MASTER: That evidently went into construction .

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir; but it was a toll account which was due, and they were allowed to offset it.

THE MASTER: They were allowed to use it in construction instead of offsetting it as a toll.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: When did they commence to pay tolls, do you know?

THE WITNESS: I do not know when they commenced.

THE MASTER: Here is a statement which has just been put in as plaintiff's Exhibit No. 26, showing amounts of tolls accrued but not paid, payable at the end of each year; for the year 1865, $8,976.16; for the year 1866, $19,655.33; for the year 1867, $25,471.36; for the year 1868, $31,780.99; for the year 1869, $32,061.40. Do you have any means of determining whether that is a fair statement of the average tolls that were paid in by this Road, or paid for the use of the Road? Would that average $23,548 a year?

MR. HOLT: Will your Honor let me interject something there parenthetically?

THE MASTER: Certainly.

MR. HOLT: Is it not the fact that what was meant by toils was simply that the railroad was to pay so much to the State for every ton of freight, and so much for every passenger transported? That being true, there would be no regular annual toll agreed upon at all, but it would be one thing one year and another thing the next year, according to the business of the Road. I think that was the situation.

THE MASTER: But in that event it would be the return to the State on its investment. I want it for each year, if we can get it.

By the Master:

Q. Have you any information except what is contained in the schedule that you filed, page 27, and this schedule filed today?

A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Have you ever made any investigation to ascertain what was paid in tolls during those succession of years?

A. Only from 1861 to the end of 1863, as shown on page 27 of my report, which shows for four years from January 1st, 1861, to December 31st, 1863, the aggregate was $170,080.36.

Q. That is adding the $90,000 to the $79,000?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You refer to your report and what exhibit?

A. My exhibit, Volume 2, page 27, which is an average of $42,520 per annum.

Q. Average of how much?

A. $42,520 per annum.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. That was during the War?

A. Yes, sir; that was during the War.

By the Master:

Q. And that is all the information you have, that schedule of yours and this schedule just introduced today?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose those figures are available, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is easy enough for somebody to find out just what those tolls were during a period of years?

A. Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: I want to know if the figures are available that show the amount of tolls that were received on account of this investment, from the date when the Road was first opened for traffic up to 1869 or 1870.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir; they could be determined from the very probable break from this date, I think, in 1863, to where they were taken up in 1865, at the close of the War, and there is a very probable break right in there.

THE MASTER: I would like to have furnished by one side or the other a statement of the annual tolls and of all the annual tolls that were received by Virginia on account of the use of the Blue Ridge Railroad, from the date when it was first opened for traffic up to the time when it was sold to the Chesapeake & Ohio. Who will furnish me with that?

THE WITNESS: I will send Mr. Leeds to Richmond for it, and if Virginia desires they can have one of Mr. Potter's men check it up.

THE MASTER: We have part of it, and I would like to get the whole of it, and I would like to have it made by years.

THE WITNESS: Before I make that statement perhaps I had better ask whether I am authorized to do that.

GOVERNOR HATFIELD: Certainly.

THE WITNESS: And at the same time have one of Mr. Potter's men check it up.

MR. ANDERSON: They have the records of the old Central Railroad, the contract was with the Central Railroad.

THE MASTER: If the contract is in existence I think it should be produced and put in the record, so that both parties may have the benefit of it.

THE WITNESS: Do you wish search made at the same time for that contract, or for the terms of that contract which might exist on a ledger entry?

THE MASTER: Yes, if the contract is in evidence I would like to have the contract; and if there is any statement on the records showing the substance of the contract, I would like to have that statement copied.

THE WITNESS: There is one point I am going to look up, for my own information, which you will pardon me if I report to you, and that is whether that $90,000 there was a forgiven toll prior to 1861 or subsequent to 1861.

THE MASTER: Your statement shows it was subsequent.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

THE MASTER: If you will get the statement I am speaking of it will cover the whole ground. I want you to begin at the time when this road was opened for traffic, then I want the amount that the lessee paid in tolls for the use of that Road for each year. Now when we get that we get the whole thing, so far as the tolls are concerned, and the $90,000 will take care of itself.

THE WITNESS: From the time that the State road was leased to the other road?

THE MASTER: Yes. Or if the State itself operated it and got anything from tolls, I want that. From the time it was opened for traffic I want to get everything that the State received during that period, if I can.

And with that and the contract, we have everything in the case, as far as I can see, that has any legitimate bearing on the value of the property.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, have you prepared an exhibit stating the net earnings applicable to return upon the capital of the James River and Kanawha Company?

A. Yes, sir; I have.

THE MASTER: During what period? Do you mean prior to 1860?

MR. HOLT: I am asking him generally about it.

Q. What period does that exhibit cover?

A. This exhibit which I hold in my hand covers a period of 7 years, from October 1st, 1853, to September 30th, 1860.

THE MASTER: This that I have here says September 30th, 1859.

THE WITNESS: You will find one year entered below there, to avoid the necessity of having two exhibits; and this is the consolidation of the two totals.

THE MASTER: That is all right; I had not run my eye down far enough.

Q. What do you find and state to be the annual earnings of that Company during the period you have mentioned, omitting the year 1860, the average annual income?

A. $109,646.55 for the 6 years ending September 30th, 1859.

Q. For the 6 years?

A. Yes, sir; 6 years.

MR. HARRISON: Does that appear on your exhibit?

THE WITNESS: He wants me to omit——

Q. I will repeat my question. I want to show what is on your exhibit.

A. Will you read the question, please?

Q. What do you find and state to be the annual earnings of that Company during the period you have mentioned, omitting the year 1860, the average annual income? Does your exhibit anywhere show? Look at it. Does it show what the average annual income of the Company was during the period covered by that exhibit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that amount?

A. $115,554.21.

Q. How do you arrive at that, Mr Hillman?

A. By taking the earnings, the net operating revenue for the period of 6 years, which amount to $657,879.33, and adding thereto the earnings of $151,000.14 for the following year, which makes a period of 7 years, and gives a net operating revenue for the 7 years of $808,879.47, which is an average of $115,554.21.

Q. Have you capitalized that average net income?

A. Yes, sir; I have

Q. What did that give you?

A. On a 6 per cent. basis, $1,925,903.50

Q. Does your exhibit show the net operating revenue of this Company for the year ending September 30th, 1860?

A Yes, sir; it does.

Q. What is that revenue?

A. $151,000.14.

Q. Have you capitalized that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did it produce?

A. $2,516,669.

Q Then a capitalization of the net operating revenue of that Company for the year ending September 30th, 1860, produces $2,516,669?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you arrive at the net operating revenue as stated in that exhibit?

A. For the revenue derived from operation I deducted the operating expenses.

Q. Did you deduct any items or any expenditures on account of construction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you consider that a part of operating expense?

A. No, sir; I do not.

THE MASTER: Either you are mixed or he is.

MR. HOLT: Yes, one of us is evidently mixed.

Q. I asked you how you obtained the net operating revenue. What was your answer to that?

A. I deducted from the operating revenue the operating expenses, which gave me the net operating revenue.

Q. Well, now, in the figure that was deducted from the other, did you embrace money spent on construction, I asked you?

A. No, sir; I did not.

By the Master:

Q. That is, in that computation you excluded all items that were disbursed for construction?

A. I did; yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Did you take into consideration, or did you exclude, in ascertaining that figure and arriving at that result, moneys paid by the Company on account of interest?

A. I excluded them.

Q. Why would you exclude them, Mr. Hillman?

A. Because moneys paid on account of interest are a return upon investment and not an operating expense.

Q. What is the difference between Mr. Potter's statement and your own exhibit to which your attention is now called, in that respect?

A. The difference is that Mr. Potter has charged interest on investment, or return upon capital, against his revenue account, and included those in amongst his operating expenses.

By the Master:

Q. How would you pay them on your theory, what would you pay them out of, fixed charges?

A. You would have to pay them out of the net revenue.

Q. If the fixed charges were paid, you would not have any net revenue, would you?

A. Yes, sir; you would have a net revenue but no net income.

Q. If the fixed charges were paid would you have any net revenue applicable to the payment of dividends on the stock?

A. No, sir; you would not.

Q. Your result would be just like Mr. Potter's then, in that respect, when you come to get right down to the final analysis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to whether anything was applicable to a dividend upon the capital stock, you would land right where he does?

A. Yes, sir; if the bonded indebtedness was still extant.

Q. Well, it was extant prior to 1860, was it not; and in 1860?

A. Yes, sir; it was.

Q. And the account for 1860 shows over $186,000 paid for interest in 1860?

A. I do not recall the amount.

Q. This James River and Kanawha report or document shows a payment for interest in 1860 of $186,126.89, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, of disbursement for that purpose?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so far as 1860 is concerned, there was evidently a deficit, when you take the operating expenses and the fixed charges and apply the revenue thereto?

A. Yes, sir; there was.

Q. And there was during the preceding 7 years that your computation covers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your figures in that respect, when you make the same kind of an allowance for fixed charges that Mr. Potter did, or if he made the same kind of a computation that you did, substantially agree?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Now, Mr. Hillman, Mr. Potter shows a deficit covering a period of 25 years, I think. What occasions that deficit?

A. The payments of interest and dividends, or in other words the payment of return upon capital or upon investment.

Q. Had there been no interest charges, would there have been a deficit during that period?

A. There would not.

Q. When did these interest charges cease?

A. During the fiscal year ending September 30th, 1860.

Q. Had not the bonds and debts that gave rise to these interest charges been taken up, paid or cancelled, and were they not out of existence on the 1st day of January, 1861?

A. They were; yes, sir.

Q. How was that bonded debt taken up?

A. By the issuance of preferred stock to the State of Virginia by the James River and Kanawha Company.

Q. Will you file the paper to which I have called your attention as part of your testimony, and mark it Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 2?

A. I file it so marked.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 2, December 9th, 1914, C. B.

DEFENDANT'S SUPPLEMENTAL EXHIBIT No. 2.

I hereby certify that the figures in this Schedule were taken by me from the original record as noted above of the James River and Kanawha Company or of the State of Virginia, for the periods mentioned, and that they have been so grouped as to show the true operating expenses as well as the earnings of the said Company.

C. W. HILLMAN,
Accountant for West Virginia.

Q. The operating revenues then of this canal exceeded the operating expenses, excluding interest therefrom?

A. Yes, sir; they did.

Q. What kind of stock did the State get for its debts, or bonds?

A. Preferred stock.

Q. What effect would that legislation and the issue thereon of preferred stock in payment of bonds have upon the value of the stockholdings of Virginia thereafter?

A. It would make them valuable, or give them a degree of value commensurate with the amount of net earnings which would be applicable to return upon that stock, there then being no interest charges which need to be taken into consideration.

MR. ROBINSON: I assume that is a statement by Mr. Hillman of his opinion, and not of a fact.

MR. HARRISON: You are asking for his opinion.

MR. HOLT: Let it go for what it is worth.

Q. (Handing paper) Take the paper now handed you and mark it Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 3, and state where you took the figures therein contained from.

A. I took those figures from Mr. Potter's Exhibit which is now filed in this case and numbered Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 24.

Q. Are the calculations in that exhibit correct, I mean in this Exhibit marked Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 3?

A. Yes, sir; they are correct. I have checked Mr. Potter's figures.

Q. Will you mark it as part of your testimony, marking it as I have indicated?

A. Yes, sir; I file it herewith, marked Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 3.

The paper was admitted in evidencee and marked Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 3, December 9th, 1914, C. B.

DEFENDANT'S SUPPLEMENTAL EXHIBIT No. 3.

State of West Virginia

James River and Kanawha Company.
Analysis of Mr. Potter Excerpt from Document 17, Pages 272-3 and 274-5, to Show Revenue, Operating Expenses and Net Operating Revenue from the Inception of the Company, June 27, 1835, to Sept. 30, 1860.
Figures all taken from Mr. Potter's Exhibit filed in this case after close of testimony and therefore not numbered.

Earnings from Operation		$5,434,443.35
Operating expenses:
Repairs and maintenance of the old Canal Richmond to Maiden's Adventure, Kanawha Road and River, Blue Ridge Canal Road and Ferry	$411,712.97
Repairs and maintenance of new canal Richmond to Buchanan	1,900,227.64
Expenses General Administration	177,642.46
Repairs to Richmond Dock and 5 locks	79,887.51
State Tax	1,374.77
Losses	68,444.02
Total operating expenses and taxes		2,639,289.37
Net operating Revenue applicable to return on capital stock		$2,795,153.98

And not an operating loss of $1,302,995.75 as would be inferred from Mr. Potter's statement, unless report had been properly analyzed and stated. Which loss of $1,302,995.75 if not so analyzed would indicate that the property was valueless as an earning proposition. It will be noted from the above statement of twenty-five years' earnings that the company averaged almost exactly $111,800.00 per year. It would not be proper to reduce this return to capitalization because of the fact that the property was not in full operation until 1859. By full operation we mean as far as it had progressed when stopped by the war.

I hereby certify that the above figures were checked by me and are the correct figures from Mr. Potter's exhibit above mentioned and have been arranged by me to show the true revenue, operating expenses and net revenue of the James River and Kanawha Company for the period mentioned.

C. W. HILLMAN,

Accountant for West Virginia.

By the Master:

Q. This excludes the fixed charges, does it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think that that is just exactly the kind of comment you ought to make on Mr. Potter's report, with the knowledge that he takes into account another factor, the comment you have got there? You say, "And not an operating loss of $1,302,995.75, as would be inferred from Mr. Potter's statement, unless report had been properly analyzed and stated. Which loss of $1,302,995.75 if not so analyzed would indicate that the property was valueless as an earning proposition." Now when you come to analyze this report there is not any difference between you and Mr. Potter at all. You simply ignore an element, which you do not take into account. Do you think that is a proper comment to make upon his statement, when you ignore an item, and a determining item, when you know you ignore it—do you think that is the way you ought to characterize his report?

A. I will admit that is expressed a little strongly, your Honor.

Q. But ought you to do that, when you know that Potter has taken into account an item which it is his duty to take into account, a fixed charge—do you think that is a comment you ought to make upon his report?

A. Yes, sir, if you will allow me an explanation.

Q. Yes, make any explanation you like, if you want to stand by it.

A. At the time that these were filed I did not suppose, nor did we suppose, that there would be any further testimony taken, or any chance for any other explanation than such as we might have by the filing of these contra exhibits, and hence there were comments made on them which would not have been made had we thought there would be further evidence taken.

Q. Even so, you know you made your statement on a basis entirely different from what Mr. Potter made his on, and you knew that Mr. Potter took into account, as he ought to have taken into account, the fixed charges; and with that knowledge, do you think that is the kind of a comment you ought to make on Mr. Potter's report, even though you thought you would not have a chance of explaining it? You could not help knowing it, because you understood the distinction between the two. That is quite a reflection upon Mr. Potter's statement, and I understand you now to state that Mr. Potter's statement is exactly right upon the facts as they existed.

MR. HOLT: Of course, your Honor understands this, that the sole object of our exhibits, contrasting them with Mr. Potter's, is to show that fixed charges, according to our theory, constitute no part of an operating expense. As a matter of fact, however, in the final analysis, of course they have to be paid, just as your Honor suggested a moment ago. And we wanted to emphasize the fact that the deficit that he speaks of took place in that portion of the history of the Company where it had interest charges to meet. While, when we come down to the period at which we seek to value the stock in that Company, 1861, those interest charges no longer exist. And our statement will show what that Company would have done in that period back there had it had no interest charges, as it had none in 1861.

THE MASTER: That all may be; that works out of it, but—I won't go any farther.

THE WITNESS: I would be very much pleased to strike that from this report, if you desire.

THE MASTER: These accountants put in propositions here before me that I suppose they expect me to rely on, and unless they are explained or they are overhauled by cross-examination, they expect me to take them as they leave them. And I think it is up to the accountants on both sides to put these statements in here so that they will hold water and stand analysis and stand criticism. Now nothing is gained by undertaking to present to me an exhibit that I know does not agree with the conditions that existed, and then undertaking to break down another exhibit that is in accordance with the conditions as they existed. There is no objection to calling attention to this fact, of course; I appreciate your position; but I do not like to have an exhibit presented here that, if I undertook to go by it, would be absolutely misleading. There is not a word said in your exhibits about fixed charges, you have to wait until it is drawn out on cross-examination or supplemental examination. If I took your exhibit as it stands I would capitalize this road on the basis of what you say was its net revenue. Now, there was not any net revenue during that period. I appreciate the argument that you have, but I do not want either side to present to me an exhibit that, on its face, would lead me into a place where I ought not to go, if I did not go any farther into it.

MR. HOLT: Of course our theory is, your Honor, that strictly and technically speaking the fixed charges are no part of operating expenses.

THE MASTER: I do not see how there can be any dispute about that.

MR. HOLT: And Mr. Potter presents an exhibit here covering a certain period, that shows a deficit. Then of course the only effect of our exhibit would be to show that that deficit was brought about in consequence of the payment of interest charges.

THE MASTER: There is not any question about that.

MR. HOLT: But that is the date as of which we desire to ascertain the value of this stock. The property ran along with the same business, but with the interest charges no longer in existence.

THE MASTER: That is an argument that you are entitled to the benefit of, but the difficulty with these exhibits is that on their face they do not present that conclusion, and they do not make any reference whatever to this other consideration. If I take them just as they stand, without explanation, I would be holding that there was a net revenue from this canal during that period, and a net revenue in 1860. Of course there was not any such. This is a criticism that I have on an exhibit like this, for instance, "Net operating revenue applicable to capital stock for year ending September 30th, 1860, $151,000.14." That is not correct, because there was not any net revenue applicable to that purpose; there was a deficit, and the accounts show it. Of course with the explanation that you give, I understand what you mean by it, but taking the exhibit as it stands, the exhibit is not accurate.

THE WITNESS: It was so thoroughly understood, at least by me ——

THE MASTER: But your exhibit on its face did not give me any thorough understanding. If I had taken this exhibit alone, without any cross-examination or any reference to the original exhibits, where would I have landed with it? I would have held that there was a profit of $150,000. There was another witness who has already testified that there was a profit of $142,000.

MR. HOLT: Is it not plain from this exhibit, though, that in this statement of Mr. Hillman it is just a difference in the two exhibits, the nomenclature, nothing else in the world? He undertakes to state what operating expenses are, and Mr. Potter calls something else operating expenses.

THE MASTER: No, Mr. Potter does not call it operating expenses, he calls it interest charges. The difficulty that I had with it was this—of course with the oral explanation that you give, it cleans up the exhibit all right, but you take the exhibit as it stands, and as far as I am concerned the exhibit would mislead me.

MR. HOLT: I thought that it was apparent from this that we were not considering fixed charges at all, but we were sticking strictly to what we defined to be operating expenses.

THE MASTER: The explanation clears it up.

MR. HOLT: We felt that here was a canal, with a great bonded indebtedness, the interest upon which was eating up its income, we will say; but, could it get rid of that, it would have a net income, as shown by its past experience, which would make its stock valuable. Then we come right along and show that this canal company would produce that result, and we follow it right up by showing that it then eventually got rid of the interest charges, and therefore the stock must be profitable thereafter; because, on the 1st of January, 1861, you had the same canal, the same business, practically the same or a greater income, increasing all the time, as shown by this very record, with the interest charges gotten rid of.

THE MASTER: Now suppose you run it right down to the time of sale, and see what happened then.

MR. ANDERSON: You have not gone into that, have you?

MR. HOLT: This exhibit of Mr. Page shows that.

MR. ROBINSON: We filed the exhibits for 1863, and so on, showing that the deficit existed.

MR. HOLT: We are utilizing this simply for the purpose of showing what the value of that stock would be on January 1st, 1861, with interest charges gotten rid of, which were excluded or done away with by this Act of March 23rd, 1860.

MR. ANDERSON: You do not now propose to prove anything as to the effect upon the business of the Company after 1861?

MR. HOLT: No, we are not going beyond January 1st, 1861, with this, because it is all here in this exhibit of Mr. Page, the whole thing.

THE MASTER: You have got more than that in your record.

THE WITNESS: Your Honor, perhaps I should explain, that to me the fact of a net operating revenue conveys such a distinct impression as to what it is, that it does not include interest charges, that perhaps I did not make it as plain as I should on these exhibits.

THE MASTER: The fault may be mine, because I may not be sufficiently familiar with the way in which these things were expressed.

MR. HOLT: That exhibit, to my mind, plainly excludes interest, as Hillman's Exhibit stands, and there is nothing deceptive about it at all.

MR. HARRISON: Well, Judge, is it not misleading in this, as it stands; you say there is $151,000.14 applicable to capital stock for the year ending September 30th, 1860; that could not be so applicable as long as interest charges remained unpaid, they having a primary right to be paid out of the operating revenue before there could be anything applicable to capital stock.

THE MASTER: I do not think we need to spend any more time on this phase of it. Perhaps I am overfussy. I understand the situation, and the oral explanation explains the situation so that I understand perfectly the circumstances under which the exhibit was made, and the idea that Mr. Hillman had in his mind when he made it. You have in here, Judge Holt, an exhibit No. 7,—1863—F, pages 207 to 220, which shows the accumulation of additional indebtedness of nearly $2,000,000. in this James River and Kanawha Company.

MR. HOLT: When did that take place?

THE MASTER: Some of this indebtedness was issued in 1856, some in 1857, some in 1870, some in 1877, some in 1880, some in 1878, some in 1879, and some all the way along there.

MR. HOLT: I think you will find this to be true, Mr. Littlefield, that the bonded indebtedness on January 1st, 1861, and the interest thereon that had been created in the one case and had accrued in the other prior to that date, were all gotten rid of under the Act of March 23rd, 1860.

THE MASTER: There is not any doubt about that.

MR. HOLT: And that as of the date March 1st, 1861, there was nothing of the kind in existence, unless perhaps it was some little interest that had accumulated before the Act of March 23rd, 1860, that remained yet unpaid. That may have been true.

THE MASTER: Now, your case shows the extinguishing of this debt in 1861 or in 1860.

MR. HOLT: March 23rd, 1860.

THE MASTER: Well, the next thing that you show is that up to the time of its sale to the Richmond and Allegheny its operation had resulted in accumulating an indebtedness of about $2,000,000, and your case does not show now the payment of any dividends, nor does it show any net income after 1860. They put in in 1861, 1862 and 1863—I want to call your attention to the condition of the record so that you will know exactly where this is—unless I am mistaken about it, and of course if I am I want to have my attention called to it, the debt to Virginia was extinguished some time in 1860. Now presumptively the earnings perhaps may have continued. Now, the other side have put in figures from 1861, 1862 and 1863, showing the deficit in those three years. You have put in an exhibit showing that from 1861, when this indebtedness to the State was extinguished, or from 1860, up to 1880, that the operations of this canal resulted in accumulating a further indebtedness of nearly $2,000,000., and it does not show any dividends during that period, and it does not show any net earnings during that period. Now, that is what the record shows, if I have got it right.

MR. HOLT: Well, there is a period of time there, we will say on January 1st, 1861, we have shown by this exhibit, that in the absence of, or relieved from, interest charges, what this property was doing. It was then producing an annual net income of $151,000. a year. Then came the Act of March 23rd, 1860, which eliminated the interest charges, through the settlement of the debt, and this exhibit of Mr. Page shows that up until, and even after, January 1st, 1861, not only the old business, that produced $151,000 net income, leaving interest charges out, kept up, but actually increased in volume. Now, you will see here in some portion of this exhibit that the articles that they were carrying multiplied very rapidly——

MR. HARRISON: Do you mean Mr. Page's exhibit in the figures shows an increase in the business?

MR. HOLT: Yes, it shows the sacks of coffee that were hauled at one time——

THE MASTER: Why is it not reflected in the receipts?

MR. HOLT: After you pass March 1st, 1861, and come down to April, 1861, or whatever it was, when the War broke out, then the volume of its business became nil, it all went to pot then. But if we are right in the date of our valuation, as of January 1st, 1861, we are not interested in the effect of the War upon the business of this canal. Let me state once more. We have exhibits here showing that in the year 1860 there would have been a net income of $151,000.14, with the volume of business it was then doing, had it at that time been relieved from the payment of interest charges. The exhibit of Mr. Page shows that that volume of business did not only keep up, that produced $151,000. a year, until, but even after, January 1st, 1861; and the Act of the Legislature shows that on March 23rd, 1860, we were relieved from the interest charges. So that even if its volume of business had kept up to just what it had been when it produced $151,000., why, we would have had a net income of $151,000. after the interest charges had been eliminated, and that would reflect some value upon the stock. But he shows that the business increased until and after January 1st, 1861.

THE MASTER: You mean this James River and Kanawha Company document?

MR. HOLT: Yes, sir. In other words we had the business there that, for the year ending the 30th of September, 1860, eliminating interest charges, produced a net income of $151,000.; which, capitalized at 6 per cent., would give a value to that property of between $2,000,000. and $3,000,000., $2,500,000. odd. The only trouble there was that we had no net income, because we had to destroy it by the payment of interest charges, but we kept along with the same business up to January 1st, 1861, with the elimination of interest charges, therefore it would be fair to assume that after the elimination of the interest charges the income would be $151,000. a year.

THE MASTER: What do you say about the property being operated at a loss of $2,000,000., and upon the sale the State receiving nothing for its stock?

MR. HOLT: This is from Mr. Page's exhibit. Take the item of coal alone; now in 1855——

THE MASTER: What page is that, Judge?

MR. HOLT: That is page 1110-A of Volume 3. Take by way of illustration the first item of coal; they transported 13,000 tons in the year ending September 30th, 1855. When you come over to September 30th, 1860, it is 29,897 tons. Then take coffee; in 1855, 5,000 bags, in round numbers; and in 1860, 24,000 bags, in round numbers. When you get down to the question of lumber, in 1855 you have nearly 5,000,000 feet, and in 1860 you have nearly 26,000,000 feet. And this business was growing right straight along up there until it was destroyed by the War. It went all to pieces almost immediately after April, 1861; but it had not done that on January 1st, 1861. So that if it would produce a net income of $151,000. in 1860, down to September 30th, it was still doing that well, or better, upon an increased business, on January 1st, 1861, and it was in reality at that time net income, because the only thing that had kept it from being net income before, namely, interest, had been by the Act of March 21st, 1861, eliminated. Now it ran into trouble again of course later on, as your Honor suggests. But that occurred during the War, and after the date upon which we rely. We are trying to ascertain, according to our theory—of course we know the theory of the other side, your Honor—the value of this property as of January 1st, 1861. Well, it did not have any $2,000,000 indebtedness at that time, it was a $2,000,000 indebtedness that was incurred long after that time. It was in pretty fair shape on January 1st, 1861, a large business and no interest charges, and an increasing volume of business.

MR. HARRISON: Did they not have an impaired capital on January 1st, 1861?

MR. HOLT: I think not. The truth of the business is that Virginia—her stock was all preferred stock, we will say, on January 1st, 1861, and the common stock may not have been worth anything at all, but her preferred stock, with that state of business, and with the capacity to make a net income of $150,000. a year, when rid of interest, would make her preferred stock worth a good deal, because that preferred stock would consume everything that was earned, the common stock got nothing.

MR. ROBINSON: Judge, if you will turn to page 1211 of Volume 3 you will see that the Company paid interest of about $23,000. for the year, and in 1863 it got up to $65,000.

MR. HOLT: The explanation of that is this, if I understand it, that at the time that this thing was refinanced, that is by the Act of March 23rd, 1860, some old unpaid interest charges were still hanging over, that were paid afterwards. Anyhow, in argument we will undertake to explain our position on that.

MR. HARRISON: Right there, I do not know what you rely on for that statement that there was some interest unpaid.

MR. HOLT: The interest was practically eliminated.

THE MASTER: Instead of the State holding a debt upon which they tried to get their interest, they took stock upon which they hoped to get a dividend.

MR. HOLT: They took stock in a property which, in the absence of interest, could earn a net income.

MR. ROBINSON: If it had been a different company it might have been otherwise.

MR. HOLT: That was another reason for filing out counter-exhibits. We get out of our exhibit—and that was the sole idea, we did not want to use any exhibit that would be deceitful or misleading to the Court—but he had not shown in his exhibit what the property would do with interest eliminated, and we undertook to present an exhibit to show what it would do with interest eliminated; because interest, at the time that we tried to fix the value, had been eliminated.

THE MASTER: Perhaps this is a good place to stop. What do you say to adjourning for dinner and coming back at eight o'clock?

MR. ROBINSON: It suits me.

MR. HOLT: I would rather not go on tonight. Now, I subscribe to the criticism of Mr. Harrison upon this little commentary at the end here, I mean from the standpoint of the law of evidence, and I think we will probably offer the president's report in lieu of that. Then I will be through with Mr. Hillman. I am going to put these papers in, and turn these gentlemen loose to cross-examine him if they want to.

THE MASTER: Whether we shall go on this evening I will leave to the counsel on both sides; I am ready to come here and go on. But of course I do not want to oblige Judge Holt to come here tonight if he does not care to.

MR. ANDERSON: I would like to see the case finished tomorrow, and I do not think we can finish tomorrow unless we sit tonight.

MR. ROBINSON: I cannot be here tomorrow. We think we will finish in an hour, and we take two days.

MR. HOLT: So far I am concerned I am only going to ask him a couple of questions, just to put these papers before the Master, and then give you an opportunity to cross-examine. That is about all I want to do. They speak for themselves, if they get properly in here once.

THE MASTER: Well, what do you say, Mr. Harrison and Judge Holt? I would like to have you agree as to what we shall do this evening.

MR. HOGG: I would rather come in in the morning myself, but I am willing to do whatever the other counsel want to do.

MR. HOLT: I do not believe anyhow that we will get through tomorrow, that is if we undertake to discuss some of these questions here, your additional testimony on market quotations and so on. I think we will probably be here longer than tomorrow.

THE MASTER: I think that the counsel ought to get through with Mr. Hillman, so as to let Mr. Hillman go. Mr. Hillman is attending these sessions under a good deal of personal strain, and I do not think you ought to keep him here after tomorrow anyway. If you can get through with Mr. Hillman tomorrow forenoon that may do, and if you are not sure of getting through with him by tomorrow afternoon you ought to come back here and examine him tonight.

MR. HOLT: We will guarantee to be through with Mr. Hillman in the morning in ten minutes. The matter that you read from this exhibit a moment ago, Mr. Harrison, which was made up of extracts, if we could strike from it the paragraphs you commented upon, we could perhaps get what we want without lumbering the record with the whole report.

MR. HARRISON: Suppose we leave that then until the morning, and deal with that then; but on the first two exhibits that you have examined him about, let us cross-examine him now.

Cross-examination by Mr. Robinson:

Q. Mr. Hillman, if you will refer to your Supplemental Exhibit No. 2, Volume 5 of the reports of the James River and Kanawha Company, extract from pages 712, 713 and 714, and looking at page 714 of that record, I will ask you if you have included in your report an item of the expenses of the committee for negotiating a loan, amounting to $950.

A. No, sir, I have not.

THE MASTER: Let me look at it so that I can get the significance of it as I go along.

MR. ROBINSON: This is a statement of the expenses of the Committee. He says he has omitted that item.

Q. There is another entry, annuity to stockholders of the old James River Company, $21,000. Did you include that item?

A. Certainly not. Are you going to ask me any other questions concerning that $950.?

Q. No.

A. Then if you will allow me to state that that Kanawha Board is a construction board entirely, as will be shown by the Act creating that Board and by this president's report which is quoted here, and is entirely a construction Board, and quite properly I would have been authorized in dropping all of those expenses. I took those, however, which might be considered as an operating expense; but when it came to the expenses of negotiating a loan, I cut it out, as a capital charge.

Q. Do you mean to say that that is a capital charge?

A. Yes, sir, the Kanawha Board is a construction board, it is not the management of the Kanawha Company at all.

Q. Would not this be a fair charge to construction if the Company cared to do it that way?

A. No, sir. The only receipts that the Company had were the $40,000. from the State which they were to apply to the Kanawha Board's expenses, and they were a construction board.

By the Master:

Q. How did you happen to omit the $21,000. annuity? Is not that an annual charge?

A. No, sir, it is not an operating charge, sir.

Q. Is it not a charge that should be deducted from your net sum applicable to the stock?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where do you pay it, where do you get it out of?

A. You understand, you Honor, according to our view of the matter, the capital charges for bonds and annuities had all been wiped out, and we are showing the net result when annuities have been disposed of and when interest charges have been disposed of.

Q. Was this annuity capitalized?

A. Yes, sir; that shows $350,000., capitalized.

THE MASTER: It is subject to the same argument as the capitalization is.

MR. HARRISON: Is not this a statement for seven years?

THE MASTER: That they have explained.

By Mr. Robinson:

Q. Then there are a collection of items under the head of interest on debts to the State, amounting to $137,203,23. Have you included them?

A. No, sir, that was interest on debt, and is not included.

Q. Then there are a collection of items under the heading interest on debt guaranteed by the State, amounting to $746,-460.90. Have you included those items?

A. No, sir.

Q. And then there are further items under the heading of interest, exchange and discount, amounting to $80,223.22. Have you included those items?

A. No, sir, they are not included.

Q. Will you please state the total of those times?

A. $985,837.35, subject to verification.

Q. If you had added this amount, $985,837.35, to the other expenses of the Company during those years, would you have had any balance applicable to the payment of dividends?

A. No, sir, there would have been a deficit of $327,958.02.

Q. As a matter of fact, on the actual transactions of the Company was there not that deficit of $327,958.02 for those years?

A. Including the fixed charges, yes, sir.

Q. You do not contend that the payment of dividends comes ahead of fixed charges, do you?

A. No, sir.

MR. ROBINSON: That is all. The other items have all been brought out. They are in Document No. 17.

THE MASTER: Then we will stand adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning?

MR. HOLT: Yes, sir. I would like to ask Mr. Potter a question before we adjourn.

ARTHUR G. POTTER, recalled for further cross-examination, testified as follows:

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, you showed a deficit, I believe, in this Canal Company's business for the year ending September 30th, 1863?

A. No, sir, the statement that I prepared and certified covered the operations of the Company from the organization to September 30th, 1861.

Q. Well, didn't you give us the actual operations for 1861, 1862 and 1863 also?

A. The cash operations, receipts and disbursements.

Q. Well, did you not show a deficit for the year ending September 30th, 1863?

A. I did, with this qualification, that if any of the times charged among the disbursements were capital expenditures they would reduce the deficit that I indicated by that amount.

Q. I am not trying to confuse or take advantage, I am trying to get the fact. What did that conditional deficit amount to?

A. For 1863?

Q. Yes.

A. $129,036.25.

Q. Is that expressed in Confederate currency?

A. Well, yes, I presume it is.

Q. If that were reduced, by the table that you have heretofore used, to real money, what would it amount to ? Will you make that calculation for tomorrow morning, please?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, coming to the year ending September 30th, 1862, what was the conditional deficit in amount there?

A. $46,609.86.

Q. Will you reduce that to real money?

A. I will.

Q. And the same way with respect to the deficit for the year ending September 30th, 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Adjourned to December 10th, 1914, at 10 A. M.

New York, December 10th, 1914.

Met pursuant to adjournment.

Of counsel for plaintiff.

Hon. A. A. Lilly, Attorney General,

Hon. Charles E. Hogg,

Hon. John H. Holt,

of counsel for defendant.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN, recalled for further direct-examination, testified as follows:

By Mr. Holt:

Q. (Handing paper) Take the paper now handed you and marked Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 4, and state who made it, prepared it.

A. I prepared that paper, sir.

Q. Of what does it consist?

A. It consists of excerpts from the report of the James River and Kanawha Canal Company to its stockholders, by their president, for the year ending September 30th, 1860.

By the Master:

Q. Is this the document I have just been looking at?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a letter from the president to this des Minieres, the Frenchman, is that it?

A. I beg your pardon, your Honor.

Q. Identify it so that I will know what you are talking about.

A. The excerpts that I have been talking about are from Document 17 of the Public Works Department.

Q. Are they from the same document that contains this reference to the opinion of the president?

A. That is one of them.

MR. HOLT: There is more than one document quoted from.

Q. Well, give us the next one.

A. The next is Volume 5 of the reports of the James River and Kanawha Company.

Q. What is that one, is that one that contains the reference to the president's opinion?

A. As to the value of property, yes, sir.

Q. That is the one I have just been looking at?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. What documents are those extracts taken from? Detailed documents. What original documents?

A. From Department of Public Works, Document No. 17, State of West Virginia, September 30th, 1860, and——

By the Master:

Q. Now, right there, is that the document that is already in print?

A. Yes, sir, it is.

Q. Now, go on.

A. And the president's report of the James River and Kanawha Company. Volume No. 5, pages 661 to 692.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Volume of what, do you mean?

A. Volume of reports of the president of the James River and Kanawha Company.

By the Master:

Q. Now, let me have that book that you are referring to.

A. It is right there at your hand, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. I will ask you this question, Mr. Hillman, whether or not these extracts that make up this exhibit give—whether or not the exhibit gives the document and the pages from which they are taken.

A. Yes, sir, it does.

THE MASTER: You see, the exhibit itself, your Honor, shows exactly where the extracts come from; in other words, it identifies the original sources.

THE MASTER: And I will identify it right here now.

By the Master:

Q. This document that you refer to containing the statement of the president is what purports to be a letter from the president to Mr. Ernest de Bellot des Minieres, dated November 21st, 1859, is that it?

A. I believe it is, yes, sir.

MR. HOLT: Look at it and see, Mr. Hillman; there is no necessity for saying what you believe.

Q. See if that is the letter of the president to Mr. des Minieres, if that is what you mean.

THE MASTER: I want to suggest now, while he is looking for this, that there is a lot that has gone into this record here that does not need to be printed. I shall not have time to submit this to the counsel on either side, and I am going to take the responsibility of censoring this transcript myself.

THE WITNESS: It is a letter from Mr. des Minieres, included in his general report to the stockholders.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Are the extracts that make up that exhibit correctly copied from the documents of original sources?

A. Yes, sir, they are.

Q. Will you take the one that is before the Master and is intended to be filed as an exhibit in the cause, and strike from it the paragraphs that you have stricken from this, so that they will tally.

A. Yes, sir, I will.

MR. HOLT: We offer this exhibit, your Honor.

The paper was admitted in evidence and marked Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 4, December 10th, 1914. C. B.

DEFENDANT'S SUPPLEMENTAL EXHIBIT NO. 4.
STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

STATEMENT AND EXCERPTS FROM VARIOUS DOCUMENTS, AS NOTED, SHOWING THAT PROPERTY WAS KEPT UP TO FAIR OPERATING STANDARD THROUGH CHARGES TO OPERATING EXPENSE AND THAT THEREFORE NO DEPRECIATION SHOULD BE CONSIDERED IN THE ULTIMATE VALUATION OF THIS PROPERTY.

My statement of the earnings and operating expenses for the years 1853-60 shows a charge to operating expenses for reconstruction items, which are certainly a renewal of property offsetting depreciation and amount to $98,435.75 in the five years 1853-59. In addition to these special items please note the following excerpts from the annual reports of the company and from their report to the State of Virginia as evidenced in Document 17, 1860.

Page 225, Document 17, Sept. 30, 1860. Resolutions of investigating committee of stockholders. "That they congratulate the stockholders on the improved and apparently improving condition of the Company in every department of its affairs."

Page 232, Document 17, Sept. 30, 1860. Extract from President's report. "And in the month of July, the water was withdrawn from some of the levels for the usual systematic repairs."

Page 232, Document 17, Sept. 30, 1860. The President speaking of the deposits brought down by the Tye and other rivers says that "This renders the constant employment of dredging machines more or less necessary. The present condition of the canal as far as it affects navigation is very good."

Page 249, Document 17. Extract from the report of superintendent of Second Division and North River Improvements. "The condition of the Canal at the present time is perhaps as good as it has been at any time heretofore since its construction, especially when taken as a whole. The embankment in many places has been strengthened and riprapped, all the stone dams have been filled in behind with stone; a large number of new lock gates have been constructed and put in during the year, and, but for the sand bars which have been accumulating at the mouth of streams emptying into the different pools ever since the dams were built, I should be able to say that the second division was in much better condition than it ever has been heretofore. No breach having occurred in this division during the year, shows conclusively that the banks are becoming more and more permanent every year."

Page 691, Volume 5. Reports of James River and Kanawha Company. Extract from letter of the President. "If ever there has been a stretch of authority, it has been toward the great end and design of the charter, the vigorous prosecution, early completion, and permanent maintenance and good order of the improvement."

On page 692 of the same Volume the President of the J. R. and K. Co. values the property at $10,000,000.00, which was in the year 1859.

On page 225, Document 17, 1860, the President reports as follows: "While the great measure of converting the debt into stock, granted by the legislature last winter, has relieved the Company from a load of oppressive embarrassment." The above is quoted to show what the records of the Company also show, that at this time all the debt had been returned and only the stock was left to be dealt with and that, therefore, all net returns of the Company were applicable to the stock and no deduction was necessary for interest on funded debt. Nor should it be overlooked the fact which is shown in the record of this case that $7,400,000.00 of the stock held by the State was preferred stock.

In addition to the above investigation I have investigated the amount charged to construction on Mr. Potter's exhibit above referred to of $9,482,484.46 and found the amount to be correct, and also that the entire amount was spent in construction, right of way, land damages, and nothing whatever charged against the cost of the property on account of its franchise. This statement made with reference to questions along this line asked by the Master.

We find from the records of the James River and Kanawha Co. on file in the C. & O. Rwy. Offices as above that there was outstanding capital stock of $11,331,330.71, of which the State of Virginia owned $10,400,000.00 or 91.77%. Applying these figures to the valuation shown on prior exhibits made by me and transmitted herewith, we have the following, for the value of $1,925,903.50 for the whole stock of the J. R. & K. Co., which is shown on the seven years earning basis, capitalized at six per cent., the value of the State's holdings to be $1,767,-401.64. Applying 23.5% to this would entitle West Virginia to $415,339.39. On the basis of the last year, previous to a period January 1, 1861, the capitalization value on the six per cent. basis equals $2,516,669.00. 91.77% of this equals the Virginia proportion is $2,309,547.14, of which West Virginia is entitled to 23.5% or $542,743.58.

I hereby certify that the figures in the above statement were taken by me from the original records as noted.

C. W. HILLMAN,
Accountant for West Virginia.

MR. HOLT: We now offer in evidence a letter dated Richmond, Virginia, November 21st, 1859, addressed to Mr. Ernest de Bellot des Minieres, and signed by Thomas H. Ellis, president, that is found beginning at page 661 and extending to page 694, inclusive, of Volume 5, reports James River and Kanawha Company, 1855-1860.

The letter was admitted in evidence and is considered as Defendant Supplemental Exhibit No. 5.

Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 5 is as follows:

OFFICE JAMES RIVER AND KANAWHA CO.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 21, 1859.

MY DEAR SIR,

At the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the company, which was held at their office in Richmond on the 24th of October last, the board of directors informed the stockholders of the offers which were made by yourself and your associates, some time since, for the completion of the James River and Kanawha canal. The subject was referred to a committee for consideration, and the committee afterwards reported a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, in these words, to wit:

"RESOLVED, That the president be requested to continue his correspondence with Mr. E. de Bellot des Minieres, with a view to the negotiation of an arrangement for the completion of the James River and Kanawha canal, upon terms satisfactory to the board of directors, subject to the approval of the general assembly."

It affords me pleasure to comply with this request of the stockholders.

In doing so, I shall pursue generally the order of topics, suggested by the letter which you did me the honor to address to me in March last, and will furnish you, as far as I can, in a condensed form, the information you then desired.

A history of the James River and Kanawha Company would undoubtedly be both instructive and interesting—and, to some extent, is obviously appropriate to such a negotiation as that you have proposed to us—but within the brief time, at my disposal, previous to the meeting of the legislature, surrounded as I am daily by urgent official duties, it would be impracticable for me to collect, and perhaps tedious to relate, all the facts and events which otherwise I would be gratified to lay before you. I shall therefore, by way of narration, only attempt to show that the projected line of the James River and Kanawha improvement, constituting the central water-line through Virginia, has long been regarded with interest by some of the most eminent men of our state, and that it promises, when completed, as grand and brilliant results as perhaps ever followed the construction of any improvement whatever.

It should be promised that the construction of canals, for transportation, is of comparatively modern date in those countries with which Virginia has been most in communication. The first important canal constructed in France was that of Briare, begun in 1605, during the reign of Henry IV, and completed in 1642. The first considerable work of this kind in England was the Sankey canal, for which an act of parliament was passed in 1755. The Duke of Bridgewater commenced the execution of his project in 1758. In 1765, the general assembly of Virginia passed an act for improving the navigation of James River, from Westham downwards through the great falls, and the north branch of James River (now called the Rivanna), from the mouth thereof upwards, and authorized the trustees to contract for the cutting of such canals, and the building and placing such locks therein, as they might think proper, in the execution of those purposes. This is the act to which Mr. Jefferson (the third president of the United States) refers, when asking himself the question, "Whether his country was the better for his having lived at all?" "The Rivanna," he writes, "had never been used for navifiation; scarcely an empty canoe had ever passed down it. Soon after I came of age, I examined its obstructions, set on foot a subscription for removing them, got an act of assembly passed, and the thing effected, so as to be used completely and fully for carrying down all our produce."

The idea of a communication by a public highway, between the valley of the Ohio River and the valley of the James River, we may suppose to have originated with Governor Spotswood, when, on the 20th of August, 1716, he sat out from Williamsburg on his expedition over the Apalachian mountains, as he called them, but which we call the Blue Ridge. Previously, these mountains had been considered an impenetrable barrier to the progress and enterprise of the whites. It was he who, accompanied by his troop of rangers (men appointed for the defense of the frontiers), a few friendly Indians, and some of the gentlemen of the colony, effected the first passage over them, on horseback; in commemmoration of which event, he received from his king the honor of knighthood.

The first suggestion, however, of a through line, which I have seen, is contained in a letter of the Rev. James Maury (a nephew of John Fontaine, who accompanied Governor Spotswood in his trans-montaine expedition), dated Louisa county, Fredericksville parish, January 10, 1756. He is writing to one of his uncles of a map, and pamphlet explanatory of the same, published by Lewis Evans of Philadelphia, and says:

"Though both it and the pamphlet be liable to several exceptions, and I believe just ones, yet both are very useful in the main, and together, give an attentive peruser a clear idea of the value of the now contested lands and waters to either of the two competitor princes, together with a proof amounting to more than probability, that he of the two who shall remain master of Ohio and the lakes at the end of the dispute, must, in the course of a few years, without an interposal of Providence to prevent it, become sole and absolute lord of North America; to which I will farther add, as my own private opinion, that the same will one day or other render either Hudson's River at New York, or Potomac River in Virginia, the grand emporium of all East Indian commodities! Marvel not at this, however surprising it may seem; perhaps, before I have done with you, you will believe it to be not entirely chimera.

"When it is considered how far the eastern branches of that immense river, Mississippi, extend eastward, and how near they come to the navigable, or rather canoeable parts of the rivers which empty themselves into the sea that washes our shores to the east, it seems highly probable that its western branches reach as far the other way, and make as near approaches to rivers emptying themselves into the ocean to the west of us, the Pacific Ocean, across which a short and easy communication, short in comparison with the present route thither, opens itself to the navigator from that shore of the continent unto the Eastern Indies."

The "dispute" above referred to, was that known in Virginia as the "Seven years' war," or the "French and Indian war," commencing with the seizure of the post occupied by the Ohio company, at the fork of the Ohio River, and the erection there of Fort Duquesne, by Captain Contrecoeur, in the spring of 1754; which brings me to speak of one of the earliest and most illustrious friends, if not the real projector, of the James River improvement.

As early as 1748, George Washington, then just entering his seventeenth year, had been employed by Thomas, the sixth Lord Fairfax, to survey and divide portions of his land on the south branch of the Potomac River; which service brought him first into acquaintance with the region of the Alleghany mountains. The following year he was appointed a public surveyor, the duties of which office he performed for three years, and which again carried him into the same wild region.

In 1753, the governor of Virginia, Robert Dinwiddie, received information of a body of French forces being assembled in a hostile manner on the Ohio River. With the advice of the counsel, he selected and appointed Washington as an express messenger, to bear a letter to the commandant of the French forces, instructing him at the same time as to the nature of the enquiries and observations he was to make on his journey.

This expedition is an exceedingly interesting event in the life of Washington. It was accomplished amid sufferings and perils that required the constant exercise of extraordinary resolution, fortitude and endurance.

Leaving Williamsburg on the last day of October, he returned on the 16th day of the ensuing January, and delivered the letter which he had brought from the French commandant to the governor, and with it a manuscript journal of his travels.

It is said, that Washington on this occasion, in his interview with the governor and council, urged the importance, as well for commercial as for military purposes, of a connection between the east and the west. Be this as it may, it is known that he cherished such a scheme the balance of his life. In 1770, 1772 and 1774, he made tours of examination, with the view to supply himself with facts which would enable him to show the feasibility, expense and advantages of the connection. In a letter to Mr. Jefferson, dated the 29th, March, 1784, he informs him that more than ten years previously he had been struck with the importance of a communication between the waters of the Ohio and Potomac; that he became the principal mover of a bill in the general assembly, of which body he was then a member, to empower a number of subscribers to undertake, at their own expense, the extension of the navigation of the Potomac from tide water to Wills' creek, a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles, with a portage between it and the streams capable of improvement which run into the Ohio; that his plan comprehended a similar improvement and connection for the James River, and that it was in a tolerably good train, when he set out for Cambridge in 1775, to take the command of the army. The war afterwards, he writes, naturally called men's attention to different objects, and all the money they could raise was applied to other purposes.

General Washington resigned his commission as commander-in-chief, in December, 1783. At that time, he supposed that he was taking his "leave of all the employments of public life." Three months afterwards, we find him turning to his cherished project, and writing to Mr. Jefferson, "with you I am satisfied that not a moment ought to be lost in recommencing this business;" and then intimates that he could not determine how far, upon mature consideration, he might depart from the resolution he had formed, of living perfectly at his ease, exempt from every kind of responsibility. "The trouble," he continues, "if my situation at the time would permit me to engage in a work of this sort, would be set at nought, and the immense advantages which this country would derive from the measure, would be no small stimulous to the undertaking, if that undertaking could be made to comport with those ideas, and that line of conduct, with which I meant to glide gently down the current of life."

On the first day of September following, he left Mount Vernon on another tour to the west. The intention which mainly prompted this journey was to make an extensive and critical reconnaissance of the summit range which intervenes between the head waters of the Potomac and the Ohio rivers, and to supply himself with facts and arguments relative to the proposed double line of communication between the east and the west. The entire distance he traveled exceeded six hundred and fifty miles. Generally, it was performed on horseback; but in numerous instances, on account of the rough and rocky character of the country, he was compelled to dismount, lead his horse, and travel on foot. With few intervals, the routes that were examined lay through uncultivated, wild mountainous districts. When he reached the first settlement beyond Fort Cumberland, he was advised of the great dissatisfaction which prevailed among the Indians inhabiting the country, and cautioned, not unnecessarily to expose himself to their wiles and treachery. The information did not in the least deter him from the pursuit of his patriotic object. He kept a journal, in which were minutely recorded his conversations with every intelligent person whom he met, respecting the facilities for internal navigation afforded by the rivers which have their sources among the Alleghany mountains, and flow thence either to the east or the west. He returned to Mount Vernon on the 4th day of October, and on the 10th of the same month communicated the results of his observations to the Governor of Virginia, Benjamin Harrison, a warm personal friend of Washington, and the father of William Henry Harrison, ninth president of the United States. In his letter introducing the subject, Gen. Washington says, "I shall take the liberty now, my dear sir, to suggest a matter, which would (if I am not too short sighted a politician) mark your administration as an important era in the annals of this country, if it should be recommended by you, and adopted by the assembly." And then proceeds, "It has long been my decided opinion, that the shortest, easiest, and least expensive communication with the invaluable and extensive country back of us would be by one or both of the rivers of this state; which have their sources in the Apalachian mountains."

Governor Harrison communicated the subject to the legislature with a message, as follows:

"IN COUNCIL, October 18, 1784.

"To the Honorable Speaker of the House of Delegates:

"The opening of the navigation of our western waters is of such immense consequence to the state, that it has engaged the attention of our late worthy commander-in-chief, and induced him to favor me with his opinion on the subject, which I enclose and request the favor of you to lay it before the assembly. His reasoning is so conclusive, that I have not a doubt of the utility of the measure remaining with me, and shall feel myself extremely happy if the assembly should coincide with me in opinion, and should set on foot the surveys recommended as a necessary prepartory step to the undertaking."

He then presents various considerations in its support.

On the 15th of November, General Washington arrived in Richmond, where the general assembly was then sitting. The house of delegates being informed of his arrival, adopted unanimously a resolution expressive of their reverence for his character and affection for his person, and appointed a committee of five members, of whom Patrick Henry was chairman, to wait upon him with the respectful regards of the house. The object of his visit was, not only to meet the Marquis de La Fayette, who arrived in the city on the 17th, but also to promote in the legislature his view of a plan of internal improvement.

On the 15th of December it was ordered in the house, that leave be given to bring in a bill for opening and extending the navigation of James River; and Mr. Madison, afterwards president of the United States, was made the chairman of the committee who were instructed to prepare and bring in the same. This bill became a law on the 5th of January, 1785, on which day the speaker, John Tyler (the father of John Tyler, the tenth president of the United States), signed the following enrolled bills, viz.: "An act for clearing and improving the navigation of James River;" "an act for opening and extending the navigation of the Potomac River;" "an act for vesting in George Washington, Esq., a certain interest in the companies established for opening and extending the navigation of Potomac and James rivers."

The act for clearing and improving the navigation of James River, authorized books of subscription to be opened in the City of Richmond, the Borough of Norfolk, at Botetourt Courthouse, at the Town of Lewisburg in Greenbrier county, and at Charles Irvings's store in Albermarle. The books were to be opened on the first day of February then next ensuing, and to be continued open until the tenth day of August following; and on the twentieth day of August there was to be a general meeting of the subscribers at the City of Richmond.

The subscriptions were limited to one hundred thousand dollars, provision being made for scaling them, in case more than that sum should be subscribed. The subscribers were incorporated into a company, by the name of The James River Company. They were empowered and required to elect a president and four directors, for conducting the undertaking and managing all the company's business and concerns, for and during such time, not exceeding three years, as the subscribers, or a majority of them, should think fit. There was to be a general meeting of the proprietors on the first Monday of October in every year, at such convenient town as should be from time to time appointed by the general meeting. The stock was declared to be real estate. Tolls were prescribed, but were allowed to be paid on condition only that the company should make the river well capable of being navigated in dry seasons by vessels drawing one foot water at least, from the highest place practicable, to the great falls, beginning at Westham, and should at or near the said falls, make such cut or cuts, canal or canals, with sufficient locks, if necessary, each of eighty feet in length, and sixteen feet in breadth, as would open a navigation to tide water, in all places at least twenty-five feet wide, except at all such locks, and capable of conveying vessels or rafts drawing four feet water at the least, into tide water, or should render such part of the river navigable in the natural course. The work was to be commenced within one year after the company should be formed, and completed within ten years thereafter.

A meeting of the subscribers was held in the City of Richmond on the 20th of August, 1785, when those books only which had been opened in Richmond, were laid before them; by which it appeared that the whole number of shares was nearly completed; but it was thought advisable to postpone the admission of other subscribers until the success of the books opened elsewhere could be known. Soon after the meeting rose, one of the managers above the falls reached the city, and gave an account of subscribers, which rendered it probable that the capital sum was overrun. On the next day the meeting proceeded by ballot to the election of a president and four directors; when George Washington was elected president, and John Harvie, David Ross, William Cabell and Edmund Randolph were elected directors.

Edmund Randolph (afterwards attorney general and secretary of state of the United States under General Washington's administration), in communicating these facts to the general, wrote:

"I endeavored to deliver you from the appointment of the office of president, but the universal suffrage called you to the post, without an expectation, however, that you should undergo more of the business than your own convenience may reconcile to you."

The regular annual meeting took place in October, when the same officers were elected for the term of three years. Subsequently, Jas. Buchanan was elected by the board of dirctors treasurer, James Harris was elected manager, and James Brindley engineer.

This constituted the "Old" James River Company. It continued until the year 1820. The presidents successively were: George Washington, from the 21st, August, 1785, to the 5th, October, 1795; William Foushee, from the 5th, October, 1795, to the 20th, January, 1818; John G. Gamble, from the 21st, January, 1818, to the 22d, March, 1819; Wilson Cary Nicholas, from the 22d, March, 1819, to the 20th, February, 1820.

On the 17th, February, 1820, the legislature passed an act entitled "an act to amend the act entitled an act for clearing and improving the navigation of James River and for uniting the eastern and western waters by the James and Kanawha rivers." The provisions of this act were made subject to the ratification of the James River Company, which having been duly given, the act was thereafter to be considered a compact between the commonwealth and the company. By the terms of the compact, the rights and interests of the company were transferred to the commonwealth, the company acting as an agent and holding in trust for the benefit of the commonwealth, but executing the improvements under the control, direction and superintendence of commissioners appointed by the legislature. By an act passed February 24, 1823, this mode of prosecuting the work was abandoned, and from and after that time all the rights, powers, duties and privileges of the president and directors were conferred upon the governor, lieutenant governor, treasurer, auditor and second auditor of the commonwealth, ex-officio, whose transactions were to be still in the name of the "James River Company." This organization continued until the year 1835. The president under the compact was John Coalter from the 29th, February, 1820, to the 17th, March, 1823. The governors, who were presidents ex-officio, were James Pleasants, John Tyler, William B. Giles, John Floyd, Littleton Waller Tazewell.

The James River and Kanawha Company was incorporated March 16, 1832, and organized May 25, 1835. By the charter the whole interest of the commonwealth in the works and property of the then existing James River Company was transferred to the James River and Kanawha company; the state being interested in the latter to the extent of three-fifths of its capital stock, and individuals and corporations to the extent of the remaining two-fifths. No change of organization has since been made. The presidents have been Joseph C. Cabell, from the 28th, May, 1835, to the 10th, February, 1846; Walter Gwynn, from the 5th, March, 1846, to the 7th, May, 1847; William B. Chittenden, from the 7th, May, 1847 to the 12th, February, 1849; John Y. Mason, from the 11th, May, 1849, to the 26th, October, 1853; Thomas H. Ellis, from the 26th, October, 1853, to the present time.

The old James River Company constructed a canal around the falls of James River, extending from the city of Richmond to Westham, a distance of about seven miles, and improved the bed of the river by sluices as high as Looneys' creek in the county of Botetourt. The capital was $140,000—one-half owned by the state, the other half by individuals. In addition to the capital, which was expended in original work, there was expended out of the profits, in constructing locks at Richmond to communicate with tide water, and other permanent improvements, in improving the navigation of the North River in Rockbridge county, the Rivanna River in Fluvanna county, and Willis' river in Cumberland county, and in repairs, the sum of $234,000. For the rights of the James River Company in the waters of James River, and the improvements and works of the company, the state agreed to pay the stockholders an annual dividend of 12 per cent. for the term of twelve years, and of 15 per cent. forever thereafter, upon their shares. The stock is now owned and held as follows, viz.:

By the commonwealth of Virginia	250	shares
By the Board of public works	34	"
By the Literary fund	225	"
By Washington college	100	"
By William and Mary college	22	"
By Individuals	69	"
Total	700	"

Which are estimated at $500 per share.

The second James River Company, on state account, enlarged and reconstructed the former canal from Richmond to Westham, and extended the same to Maiden's Adventure in Goochland, a distance of 28 miles; constructed a canal through the Blue Ridge, seven and a half miles long; constructed a turnpike road from Covington to the mouth of Big Sandy River, two hundred and eighty miles long; and improved the Kanawha River by wing dams and sluices, from Charleston to its mouth a distance of about sixty miles. According to a report made by the second auditor to the house of delegates, dated 23rd, December, 1843, these several improvements cost the state (exclusive of the expenditure by the old James River Company) as follows:

James River canal	$ 643,808.28
Blue Ridge canal	368,609.28
Kanawha turnpike road	263,837.63
Kanawha River	91,666.72
	$1,367,921.91

These works were sold to the James River and Kanawha Company at the valuation of one million of dollars, the state receiving a credit for that amount in part of her subscription to the capital stock. The new company moreover was charged with the payment of the annuity of $21,000 forever to the stockholders of the old James River Company; and as this sum is equivalent to a principal of $350,000 at six per cent. interest, it will be seen that the present company took the old works at the price of $1,350,000, which makes their proportional cost as follows:

James River canal	$ 635,373.39
Blue Ridge canal	363,779.92
Kanawha turnpike road	260,380.94
Kanawha River	90,465.75
	$1,350,000.00

For an exceedingly able and interesting review of the affairs of this company, and vindication of its general policy, I refer you to the supplement to the eleventh annual report, prepared by the first president, Joseph C. Cabell, Esq. [See Annual Reports, vol. 2, p. 627 to 769.]

For an equally lucid and conclusive exhibit of the very striking advantages afforded by this improvement, I refer you to the report made by Edward Kenna, Esq., chairman of a select committee, to the twenty-first annual meeting [see Annual Reports, vol. 5, p. 104 to 166], and to a report, or rather "notes and memoranda," furnished by Chas. B. Fisk, Esq., chief engineer of the Covington and Ohio railroad, for the use of an internal improvement convention, which assembled at the White Sulphur Springs in the summer of 1854. This document is herewith separately communicated, together with a map and profile.

Experience in this country has not been altogether favorable either to the construction or management of public works exclusively on state account. It is believed that objections are applicable also to corporations over which the state has no control. We, here in Virginia, have adopted what is known as the "joint stock" system—combining public and private subscription, and regulated by a scale of voting, which is intended to make the power of the state a conservative, preventive power, while generally the governing power is left to that vigilance, prudence and economy which private interest is presumed to impart. In the case of the James River and Kanawha Company, each stockholder may, in person or by proxy, give the following vote, on whatever stock he may hold in the same right, to wit: one vote for each share of such stock not exceeding ten, and one vote for every four shares exceeding ten: but the vote of the state shall not exceed two-thirds of the whole number of votes given by others in the same elections, or on the same question.

The capital stock is at present held as follows:

By the commonwealth of Virginia	30,000	shares
By the Bank of Virginia	5,004	"
By the city of Richmond	5,768	"
By the city of Lynchburg	673	"
By Washington college	100	"
By individual stockholders	8,455	"
Total	50,000

To constitute a general meeting, there must be present, either in person or by proxy, a number of stockholders having a right to give a majority of all the votes which could be given at a meeting of all the stockholders.

The stock held by the state is represented in these general meetings by three proxies appointed by the Board of public works.

The affairs of the company are administered by a president and six directors, constituting a board, chosen as follows: the president is elected by a vote of all the stockholders present in general meeting; one director is elected in the same manner; two directors are elected by vote of the private stockholders alone; and three directors are appointed by the Board of public works. These appointments and elections are made annually.

A branch organization, which is meant to be merely temporary, called The Kanawha Board, has been recently introduced, for the purpose of aiding in improving the navigation of the Kanawha river from its mouth to Loup creek shoals. It is composed of the president of the company and five directors, three of whom are appointed by the Board of public works, and two elected by the stockholders other than the state. The directors are required to be residents of the Kanawha valley. The Kanawha board, as special agents, are entrusted with the control, management and supervision of the Kanawha improvement, subject to the instructions of the stockholders, but have no control over any of the other works or affairs of the company. In case the president shall differ with the Kanawha directors in any matter involving in his opinion the general interests of the company, he has authority to call a meeting of the two boards of directors together, and submit such matter to them as one board; and their decision shall be carried into effect.

By the act of incorporation it is provided that the works which the James river and Kanawha company "shall construct, and the property which they shall acquire by purchase or condemnation, under the authority of this law, shall be vested in them and their successors forever, for their own use and benefit, exempt from all public taxes, burdens or charges, other than those which may be imposed or authorized by this act."

I come now to a description of the line.

What is usually known as the Virginia water line, extends from the capes of Virginia to the Ohio river, a distance of 636 miles, and consists of—

I. The James river, from its mouth to the head of navigation at the city of Richmond, a distance of 151 miles; and

II. The James river and Kanawha improvement, extending from the city of Richmond, to Point Pleasant, at the mouth of the Kanawha river, a distance of 485 miles.

James river is navigable for ships of one thousand tons burden, drawing seventeen feet, from its mouth to City Point, 36 miles below Richmond. From City Point, vessels drawing fifteen feet water, can ascend to Warwick, five miles below Richmond. From Warwick to Richmond the river is navigable at this time for vessels drawing eleven and a half feet water. But improvements are in progress, at the expense and under the supervision of the city of Richmond, by which the depth will be increased to sixteen feet, from Richmond to City Point.

The James river and Kanawha company have, however, no authority over James river below Richmond.

For the purpose of description, the James river and Kanawha improvement will be divided into—

1st. The Richmond dock and tide water connection, ...1 mile

2nd. The first division of the canal, extending from Richmond to Lynchburg, ...146½ miles

3d. The second division of the canal, extending from Lynchburg to Buchanan, ... 50 miles

4th. The third division of the canal, extending from Buchanan to Covington, ... 47 miles

5th. The fourth division of the canal, extending from Covington to the Greenbrier river, ...33½ miles

6th. The Greenbrier and New rivers to Loup creek shoals on the Kanawha, ... 119 miles

7th. The Kanawha river from Loup creek shoals to the Ohio river, ... 89⅓ miles

First. The Richmond Dock and tide water connection—By means of this improvement, vessels ascend from the river into the dock, where they are met by canal boats, which ascend from the basin at the terminus of the canal, and lay alongside the vessels, for the purpose of exchanging cargoes; or, the canal boats can descend to the river, and without breaking bulk, be towed to City Point or Norfolk.

Vessels enter the dock by means of a ship lock, which is founded upon solid rock, and built of the most substantial cut granite. It is 180 feet long between the gates, 35 feet wide, has a lift of 15 feet, and has 16 feet water on the mitre sill. It will pass vessels of 500 tons.

The dock is 4,100 feet long from the ship lock to 17th street, and has a continuous wharf, protected by a granite wall, for its whole length on the north side, and for about 1,000 feet on the south side. The depth is from 11 to 15 feet, and the average width 100 feet. Above 17th street is a continuation called "the upper dock," which is also surrounded by a substantial granite wall, and is now only used by canal boats, but whenever the trade shall demand it, it can be made accessible to vessels, by means of a pivot bridge, thrown across in the line of 17th street extended. This upper portion is 800 feet long and 200 feet wide.

The dock is connected with the basin by means of five locks, having an aggregate lift of 69 feet. These locks are built of hewn granite, and, with the ship lock, will in their style and finish compare favorably with any similar works in this country.

The total cost of the dock and tide water connection has been $851,312. It was completed in the year 1854.

Second—the first division of the canal, extending from the basin in Richmond to the city of Lynchburg, comprising 137¾ miles of canal and 8¾ miles of slackwater navigation.

The trunk of the canal is 30 feet wide at the bottom, and 50 feet at the water line, and was originally cut to the depth of five feet. The tow-path is 12 feet wide and the berm bank 8 feet.

The locks are 100 feet long between the gates, and 15 feet wide in the chamber. The total lockage from the basin in Richmond to Lynchburg is 429 feet. The works of art on the first division consist of—

Fifty-two lift locks having a total lift of 429 feet; 6 guard locks; 2 accommodation locks; 3 principal dams across James river, affording slack-water navigation; 9 other dams across James river, or to islands in the river, which serve for the purpose of feeders to the canal, or for connection with the south side of the river; 11 aqueducts, three of which have wooden trunks, and the remainder are of cut stone; 191 culverts; 133 farm and road bridges over the canal; 3 tow-path bridges.

Of the locks 22 are built of cut stone, and the remainder of rubble masonry, faced with timber and plank.

For a minute description of this division of the canal, see the 5th annual report of the president to the stockholders, from page 515 to page 542.

It was completed in the year 1840, and has cost $5,837,628, or $39,982 per mile.

On the first division are works connecting the canal with the south side of the James river, usually called the South Side Connections. These works are a dam and an outlet lock at Cartersville, and three bridges; one at New Canton, one at Hardwicksville, and one at Bent Creek. These bridges are wooden, arched, and covered, and built upon cut stone abutments and piers. The total cost of the South Side Connections has been $162,685

There is also a connection on the north side of the river with the improvement of the Rivanna river, an important tributary to the James, which has cost the James river and Kanawha company the sum of $115,043.

Third—The second division of the canal extends from the city of Lynchburg to the town of Buchanan, a distance of 50 miles, and consists of 22 miles of canal and 28 miles of slackwater navigation.

The principal works of art on this division are—

Thirty-eight locks, having a total lift of 299 feet, built with a few exceptions of cut stone; 4 stone dams, and 7 timber dams, across James river; 1 aqueduct of 50 feet span; 8 culverts; 48 square drains; 17 tow-path bridges, 2 farm bridges and 1 street bridge, of 100 feet span, over the basin at Lynchburg.

For a minute description of this division, see 17th annual report, from page 218 to 225.

It was completed in the year 1850, and has cost $2,422,556, or $48,451 per mile.

Connected with the second division is the North river improvement, extending from the mouth of North river to the town of Lexington, a distance of 19¾ miles. Of this improvement 10 miles are canal, and 9¾ are slack-water navigation. The principal works of art are——

Twenty-two locks, all of rubble stone masonry, and of the same size as those on the main line of the canal, and having a total lift of 188 feet; 9 stone dams, and one timber dam, across North river, and 4 aqueducts.

For a more particular description of this work, see the 23d annual report, from page 373 to 375. This work is not yet completed, but will be by the end of the following year. It has already cost, including the outlay of the North river navigation company, by which company it was commenced, $506,551; and to complete it, it is estimated will cost about $30,000 additional.

Fourth—The third division of the canal, follows the valley of James and Jackson rivers from Buchanan to Covington, a distance of 47 miles.

This division has been definitely located, and the first 15 miles above Buchanan was put under contract in the year 1853, but, for the want of funds, the work was suspended in the year 1856.

Forty-one miles are canal, and six miles slack-water navigation. The total lockage is 436¾ feet.

The principal mechanical structures are 36 lift locks, two guard locks, one guard and lift lock, four aqueducts across James river, each about 320 feet long, three aqueducts of 50 feet span, and three dams across James river. There are also the Marshall tunnel 1,900 feet long, and the Mason tunnel, 198 feet long; by means of which, 5⅝ miles of distance are saved.

Of this work there are now nearly completed ten lift locks, and the abutments and piers of three of the aqueducts over James river. The foundations of two of the dams, up to the surface of low water, have been put in; about 800 feet of the Marshall tunnel has been excavated, and the Mason tunnel is completed. The mechanical work upon this division is executed in the best style, and of the most substantial material, all of the structures being built of hewn limestone, laid with hydraulic cement.

The estimated cost of this division, based upon careful surveys and accurate cross sections of the whole line, and estimated at prices for which a good deal of the work has been let and partly executed, is	2,555,131.00
The amount of work done is	511,094.00
Leaving the amount still to be done,	$2,044,037.00

Fifth—The fourth division of the canal, extending from the town of Covington to the Greenbrier river, 33⅓ miles.

At Covington the canal crosses Jackson's river by an aqueduct, and follows the valley of Dunlap's creek to Crow's tavern, at the base of the Alleghany mountain, a distance 17½ miles; for a description of which see 20th annual report, page 756.

At Crow's the line of canal leaves the valley of Dunlap's creek, and following the bed of Fork run, ascends the eastern side of the Alleghany mountain, by a series of locks and dams, to the summit level.

The distance from Covington to the eastern entrance of the Alleghany tunnel is 20.7 miles, and the total lockage is 675 feet.

The summit level is 4½ miles long, and 1,921 feet above tide water, and pierces the Alleghany mountain by a tunnel 2 6-10 miles long.

Emerging from the western side of the Alleghany mountain, the canal descends by the valleys of Tuckahoe and Howard's creeks, 241 feet in a distance of 10 miles to the Greenbrier river.

The summit level, and the portion of the canal on each side of it between Dunlap's creek and the Greenbrier river, a distance of 15½ miles, will be supplied with water chiefly from Anthony's creek. Upon this creek a reservoir is to be made, covering 2,753 acres of land, and having an average depth of 60 feet, from which the water will be conducted by a feeder canal about 9 miles long, to the summit level. For information and proof of the sufficiency of the supply of water for the summit level, see "reports on the survey of summit level," in 17th and 18th annual reports.

The works of art on this division east of the Alleghany, will be 63 locks, 8 dams across Dunlap's creek, and 1 across Brush creek; one aqueduct over Jackson's river 250 feet long, and one over Dunlap's creek 100 feet long; and west of the Alleghany, there will be 24 locks, one aqueduct of 50 feet span over Tuckahoe creek; one aqueduct of 50 feet span over Howard's creek, and one dam across Howard's creek.

The estimated cost of the fourth division is as follows:

1. From Covington to the eastern entrance of the Alleghany tunnel 20.7 miles, based upon an estimate made by John B. Mills, Civil engineer, in 1851, to which the chief engineer adds 25 per cent., making	1,574,086.00
2. From the eastern entrance of the Alleghany tunnel to Greenbrier river, 12.63 miles, including the reservoirs and feeders for the summit level, based upon surveys made in the year 1851, by Edward Lorraine, now chief engineer, revised and corrected, with 20 per cent. added for contingencies	2,842,821.00
Total estimated cost of fourth division	$4,416,907.00

Sixth—The Greenbrier and New rivers, from the mouth of Howard's creek to Loup creek shoals on the Kanawha, 119 miles.

From the mouth of Howard's creek to the Ohio river, the character of the improvement will be changed. The line that we have been heretofore occupied with from Richmond to the Greenbrier river is to consist of a canal of the dimensions previously described under the head of the "First division." The line down Greenbrier, New and Kanawha rivers, will consist of an improvement of those rivers for steam boat navigation—and the mouth of Howard's creek, or what is known as "Greenbrier bridge," will be either the point of transhipment from steam boats to canal boats, or the point where canal boats having been towed up by steam boats, will change steam power for horse power, and vice versa.

1. Greenbrier river, from Greenbrier bridge to New river, 49.62 miles.

This part of the line was surveyed by Edward H. Gill, civil engineer, in the year 1841, and an estimate of the cost of a mixed improvement for canal and slack-water navigation was furnished.

The present chief engineer has estimated this section of the improvement from Mr. Gill's notes of the width and fall of the river, but has provided for locks and dams adapted to steam boat navigation. The dams and locks to be of stone. The locks to be 200 feet long between the gates, and 40 feet wide in the chamber, which will admit steam boats of 350 tons burden, or four canal boats at once.

Twenty-one dams 300 feet long and 25 feet high, with locks as above, at $116,500 each, $2,446,500.

2. New river, from the mouth of Greenbrier to the foot of Loup creek shoals, 69.28 miles.

This part of the line was estimated by Mr. Gill for a lock and dam improvement, adapted to steam boat navigation, the locks to be 130 feet long and 30 feet wide. [See his report, in the 7th annual report, page 61.]

As his estimate was for stone dams and locks, the present chief engineer has adopted it, and made the requisite addition thereto for the increased length of the locks.

The economy of increasing the length of the locks will be obvious, when you consider that the short locks will only pass steam boats of 175 tons burden, or two canal boats, while the long locks will pass steam boats of 350 tons, and four canal boats, thus doubling their capacity, at a cost of about $765,000, or about 37 per cent. on the original estimate.

After making the addition for the increased size of the locks, Mr. Lorraine adds 20 per cent. to the whole, for contingencies, which brings the estimate for the New river division, to $3,396,480.

It may be proper to state that the surveys of the Greenbrier and New rivers have not been so elaborate nor so exact as those of other parts of the line, but they have been surveyed sufficiently to obtain a correct profile, and the general character of the beds of the streams, and to establish beyond any doubt the practicability of their improvement in the manner proposed. Of the practicability of their improvement, we may feel well assured by the concurrent opinions of Benjamin Wright, Edward H. Gill and Charles B. Fisk, three eminent, practical, hydraulic engineers. Judge Wright, after acquiring practical experience and high reputation on the Erie canal, was selected as the first chief engineer of the James river and Kanawha company. In his letter to the board of directors, published in the 7th annual report, page 73, he says: "From the facts disclosed by the survey on the lines of the Greenbrier and New rivers, I am satisfied that the difficulties of improving those rivers have heretofore been overrated. and that the plans now proposed for that purpose are both practicable and expedient. I have carefully examined the estimates for the rivers above named, and am impressed with the belief, that with good management the work can be successfully executed for the amount of those estimates."

Mr. Fisk, the late eminent chief engineer of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, has also personally examined the Greenbrier and New rivers, and approved of the proposed plan for their improvement. See his "report on the improvement of the Kanawha, New and Greenbrier rivers," in the 21st annual report, page 74.

Seventh—The Kanawha river from Loup creek shoals to its mouth, a distance of 89-3/10 miles.

This river is already navigable for steam boats for 70 miles above its mouth, for about ten months in the year, but the navigation is interrupted by low water for four months in the year, and entirely suspended for about two months.

It is proposed to improve this stream by straightening and deepening the channels, and by concentrating the water in them by means of wing dams.

The estimate of the cost of this section is based upon recent surveys made under the direction of the present chief engineer, and is as follows:

Dam at Lyken's shoal, 650 feet long and 20 feet high, with guard and lift lock of 10 feet lift, all of stone,	139,750
From Lyken's shoal to Point Pleasant, improved for sluice navigation, as above described,	410,565
	550,317
Add for contingencies, 10 per cent.	55,031
Total cost of improving Kanawha river	$605,348

I will remark that the proper plan for the improvement of the Kanawha River has been a subject of contention since the organization of the company. In 1838, Mr. Charles Ellet, Jr., at that time the chief engineer of the company, recommended an improvement by sluices, and canals, and locks in the river. Judge Wright, the consulting engineer of the company, dissented from these views of Mr. Ellet, and recommended an improvement partly by sluices and partly by locks and dams across the river. See 4th annual report, page 462 to 491. In 1854, Mr. Charles B. Fisk was requested to examine the Kanawha, and report a plan for its improvement, which he did, and recommended an improvement by open dams. See his reports, 20th annual report, page 741, and 21st annual report, page 74. Mr. Fisk's plan was formally adopted by the stockholders in January, 1858. In March, 1858, the stockholders resolved to employ Mr. Charles Ellet, jr., to examine the Kanawha river, with a view to its improvement by means of reservoirs. Accordingly, in the ensuing summer, Mr. Ellet made a survey, and at the 24th annual meeting submitted an elaborate "report on the improvement of the Kanawha, and incidentally of the Ohio river, by means of artificial lakes." Thereupon the stockholders rescinded their resolution of January previous, and referred the whole subject to a committee of eleven, with authority and instructions to decide upon what plan the river should be improved. The committee of eleven met on the 24th of February last, and adopted Mr. Ellet's plan of improvement. The stockholders, upon receiving the report of this committee, at the last annual meeting, merely ordered it to be laid upon the table.

The committee, while adopting Mr. Ellet's plan, recommended that it be carried out only in part at present, by an improvement estimated to cost $250,000.

The estimated cost of improving the Kanawha river upon Mr. Fisk's plan, is $605,348.

The cost of improving the river on Mr. Ellet's plan, is estimated by him at $500,000.

It is the opinion of the present chief engineer, that the bed of the river cannot be improved upon any plan adequate to the accommodation of the through trade, for a less sum than the estimate for Mr. Fisk's plan; and that if Mr. Ellet's reservoirs be built, the sum of $529,080 should be added, making the total estimated cost of improving the Kanawha river, $1,134,428.

In the present state of the case, I have taken Mr. Lorraine's estimate of $605,348, as the cost of improving the river from its mouth to Loup creek shoals.

Let us now try to estimate the future trade of this line.

In considering this branch of our subject, it will be of course impossible to use that exactness of expression and accuracy of facts and figures which I have been enabled so far to use when speaking of the past. We enter now somewhat into the region of probabilities; making our comparisons of a future, not however wholly speculative or fanciful—but a future which, based upon certain facts, and governed by certain laws, must produce certain results. The laws of trade are as fixed and sure as those of nature. One of them is, that all other things being equal, freight will seek the shortest and cheapest route to market. If, then, it can be shown that the water line route through Virginia is the shortest and cheapest transit for the products of the great west to the Atlantic seaboard, and thence to a European market; if it can be shown that this route possesses eminent and distinguishing advantages over every other route; the question will be, not what will be the trade of the James and Kanawha canal, but what the capacity of the canal: for its trade will be the trade of the great west, limited only by its capacity to accommodate that trade.

I have already invited your attention to Mr. Cabell's "supplement," and Mr. Kenn's and Mr. Fisk's reports. I now again adduce them, for proof of the position just taken in regard to the superiority of the Virginia water line route. If I mistake not, you will admit their arguments to be absolutely conclusive on this point. In reference to Mr. Fisk particularly, I deem it appropriate to say, that he is one of the most distinguished civil engineers in the United States, and one who is remarkable for the caution with which his statements are made, and their accuracy when made. You will observe in his report, that while his object is to prove the advantages and value of the Covington and Ohio railroad, he has demonstrated that that road is chiefly indebted to its connection with the water line for its superiority over other routes in the transportation of heavy freight.

I can add but little to the facts and arguments presented by these gentlemen, in their respective reports; yet I may show, that Virginia possesses not only the best route from the Ohio to the Atlantic, but that upon her Atlantic seaboard she possesses the most capacious safe and convenient harbor from Florida to New Foundland; and for this purpose I take the testimony of Lieutenant Matthew F. Maury, of the United States navy, whose contributions to nautical science have elicited the applause of the world. In a series of letters to his son, upon the internal improvements of Virginia, published in the year 1854, he thus describes the commercial advantages of Norfolk:

"As to the natural advantages of position, depth of water, and accessibility by land and sea, NORFOLK HAS NO COMPETITOR AMONG THE SEAPORT TOWNS OF THE ATLANTIC.

"Midway the Atlantic coast line of the United States, Norfolk is the most convenient, because the most central point where the produce of the interior may be collected, and whence it may be distributed, north and south, right and left among the markets of the seaboard.

"Its climate is delightful. It is exactly of that happy middle temperature where the frosts of the north bite not, and where the pestilence of the south walketh not. Its harbor is commodious, and as safe as can be. It is never blocked up with ice, and as to the egress and ingress between it and the sea, it possesses all the facilities that the mariner himself could desire. It has the double advantage of an outer and inner harbor. The inner harbor is as smooth as any mill pond; in it vessels lie with the most perfect security, where every natural facility imaginable is offered for lading and unlading. Being ready for sea, the outward bound trader dropping down from this snug mooring, and approaching the sea, finds a storm raging from outside. The outer harbor then affords a shelter until the fury of the gale is spent, when the white-winged messenger trips her anchor, trims to the breeze, and goes forth rejoicing on her way to the haven where she would be.

"Moveover, the prevailing winds in the parallel of Norfolk are westerly winds, which are fair for coasting, and for going seaward in any direction. A little to the south of that parallel you find the northeast trades, which are fair winds for the inward bound Norfolk vessel.

"Then there is the gulf stream—that mighty river in the ocean—upon the verge of which Norfolk stands. It flows up with a current which, without the help of sweeps, sails or steam, will carry the European bound vessel out of Norfolk at the rate of nearly one hundred miles a day, directly on her course.

"Then at the sides of this, and counter to it, are eddies which favor the same vessel on her return to Norfolk. These hawse her along and shorten her voyage by many a mile.

"Next, to complete the survey seaward, cast your eye down to the great Amazonian water shed of South America. That river drains a district of country twice as large as the whole Mississippi valley. The volume of water discharged by the Amazon, into the sea, exceeds by six fold that which the Mississippi empties into the gulf; and it opens a highway for commerce and navigation from the sea to the foot of the snow capped mountains that rise upon the rim of this great basis, and touch the clouds under the equator. This country is to be the CORNUCOPIA of the world. Its climate is that of an eternal spring, its soil the most prolific on the face of the earth, and its minerals the richest and the rarest, and the most abundant that ever adorned the person, or ministered to the convenience of man.

"But you have read your uncle Lewis Herndon's Exploration of the Amazon—you have studied with me the physical geography of the country drained by it, and you understand how and why the winds are constant and fair both ways for vessels trading between that river and Norfolk.

"Such are the natural advantages of Norfolk seaward. Let us look ashore, and consider them landward. You will better appreciate these by studying them in contrast. Therefore, we will compare them with the natural inland advantages of New York.

"A bay or harbor which is conveniently accessible to the sea, is supposed to offer natural advantages for a commercial city in proportion to the fertility and extent of the back country that is tributary to it. The back country that is naturally tributary to the city of New York, is confined to the counties that are drained by the Hudson, or washed by the waters of the sound. And if there were no such things as internal improvements—no way in the interior by which produce and merchandise could be transported from one water shed to another—the people for whom New York would export and import would be those who live in the valley of the Hudson, or who inhabit the shores of Long Island sound.

"Now, contrast the fertility and extent of this country with the back country that is tributary to Norfolk. Both shores of Chesapeake Bay are tributary to it; and this magnificent sheet of water is the natural receptacle also of the drainage and surplus produce of the valleys of the James river, the York, the Rappahannock, the Potomac, and the Susquehanna, and surplus produce of the valleys of the James river, the their shores. The back country therefore which, without portage, is naturally tributary to Norfolk, not only surpasses that which is tributary to New York, in mildness of climate, in fertility of soil, and variety of production, but also in geographical extent by many square leagues, the proportion being as three to one in favor of the Virginia port.

"But there are such things as natural portages, by which commerce even in a rude state may pass from one river valley to another on its way to the sea. Now let us see what portions of country are nearer to New York and what to Norfolk, assuming that if these natural portages be equally improved, all that country which they will bring nearer to Norfolk will be tributary to Norfolk, and all that they may bring nearer to New York will in like manner be tributary to New York.

"Therefore, to divide and lay off this back country, turn to the map; stretch a string upon it from Norfolk to New York, and make a dot half way between them. Now seek a point on the south shore of lake Erie, that is equidistant from New York and Norfolk; draw a line from the dot to this point, and you will have a dividing line of distance between the two places, every point along which will be just as far from the one place as the other. You will find that this line runs through Delaware, and cuts lake Erie near Cleveland, Ohio.

"Thus you will perceive that Chicago, in Illinois, and St. Louis, Missouri, are actually nearer to Norfolk than they are to New York, even by an air line. You see, moreover, that as between New York and Norfolk, the natural advantages here are greatly in favor of the latter. THE MOST DIRECT WAY TO THE SEA THROUGH EITHER OF THESE PORTS, FROM MOST OF THE LAKE COUNTRY, AND FROM ALMOST THE ENTIRE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY, LIES THROUGH VIRGINIA. The natural advantages then, of Norfolk, in relation to the sea, or to the back country, are superior beyond comparison to those of New York."

The present delegate elect from the city of Norfolk to the general assembly (Mr. Bisbie, wrote a pamphlet two or three years ago, entitled "An appeal for the speedy completion of the water line of Virginia," which has been extensively circulated, and has attracted much attention, in which he thus strongly groups his views of what he calls the two grand centres of Atlantic and interior trade.

"We beg the reader to look again at the map; to observe that the junction of the Ohio with the Mississippi is the grand converging point of the Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Mississippi, Illinois, Ohio, Cumberland and Tennessee rivers—the geographical centre of their trade, and the converging and diverging point of full ten thousand miles of inland steam boat navigation—a vastly greater amount than any other gathering point in the world!

"Then look at Norfolk, the great central seaport of the Atlantic; at the very centre of the Atlantic coast; on the finest, most convenient, safe and capacious harbor on this continent: open at all times of the year; accessible from any point and with any wind; and, all in all, better calculated for a mighty trade than any harbor in the world!

"Then consider, this vast centre of interior, and this vast centre of Atlantic trade, are, excepting the little space occupied by the 'unfinished section,' connected by an unbroken water line, which is at once shorter, safer, cheaper, and more reliable than any other, and open to trade for eleven months in the year.

"Does it not look as if these two great centres were made expressly for each other—and that we are almost abusing Providence in letting the little gap remain unfinished?"

The present patriotic, able and eloquent chief magistrate of our state, in his letter to Mr. Lacouture, of the 12th April, 1857, expresses himself to the same effect. He describes Norfolk as "a point where there is a harbor spacious enough and deep enough for all the merchant and naval marine of the world, and affording a site for a city rivaling in the course of time New York or London." He portrays in the most graphic language the resources of Virginia within her own limits—demonstrating that her counted and uncounted wealth alone, is enough to justify all her expenditure and taxation, past and prospective, for the completion of her main lines of improvement—and particularly that line which is to join the waters of the Chesapeake to those of the Ohio—which has ever been a favorite improvement with him. And he adds: But if Virginia were a waste from the seaboard to the Ohio, without a tithe of this perpetual resource, still the back country beyond her is interminable and exhaustless, AND HER ELIGIBILITY OF TRACK FOR ITS PRODUCE IS WORTH TEN FOLD MORE MILLIONS THAN SHE CAN EVER BE CALLED ON TO EXPEND!"

The evidence would thus appear to be conclusive, that when the Virginia canal is completed, it will command the trade of the west, and doing that, must be worked to its utmost capacity; and therefore, in calculating the future trade of this improvement, we have only to decide upon its actual capacity for through freight, in connection with its tributary and way freight.

The capacity of the canal at Richmond will be limited by the number of boats that can be passed through the first lock above the city. To ascertain this, we will suppose a boat to pass through this lock every 7½ minutes; which was the daily average on the Erie canal at lock No. 3, in the year 1853, when that canal did its heaviest business; and we will assume that the canal will be in working order for eleven months in the year, or 330 days, and that the average load of a boat will be 50 tons, or 100,000 pounds. There would then pass this lock in one year, 63,360 boats and 3,168,000 tons. This is less than the actual tonnage on the Erie canal in 1853, which amounted to 1,742,056 tons of up freight, and 2,505,797 tons of down freight, a total of 4,247,853 tons. Assuming then that 3,168,000 tons will enter or leave the basin at Richmond, it is necessary to determine the different points to and from which this freight will be shipped, and how much of it will be throught freight. The present tonnage on the canal is about 200,000 tons, of which about

10,000 tons are carried ..... 196 miles
80,000 tons are carried ..... 146 miles
110,000 tons are carried ..... 50 miles

If the work were fully and fairly in use, I think we might calculate upon the following increase and distribution of freight:

140,000 tons, an average distance of 50 miles, at 1½ cents per ton per mile	105,000.00
130,000 tons, to and from Lynchburg, a distance of 146 miles, at 1 cent per ton per mile	189,800.00
20,000 tons, to and from Buchanan, a distance of 196 miles, at 1 cent per ton per mile	39,200.00
30,000 tons, to and from Covington, a distance of 243 miles, at ¾ cent per ton per mile	54,675.00
100,000 tons cannel coal and oil from the Kanawha valley to Lynchburg, a distance of 250 miles, at ½ cent per ton per mile	125,000.00
200,000 tons cannel coal and oil from Kanawha valley to Richmond, a distance of 400 miles, at ¼ cent per ton per mile	200,000.00
2,548,000 tons through freight, 485 miles, at 2 mills per ton per mile	2,471,560.00
Revenue from tonnage of the Kanawha River westward	100,000.00
Revenue from the Richmond dock	100,000.00
Revenue from water rents	30,000.00
Revenue from passengers	10,000.00
	$3,425,235.00

That the estimate of 2,548,000 tons for the through tonnage is moderate, will, I think, be acknowledged, when it is known that the actual capacity of freight boats, of the largest size now navigating the canal, is from 80 to 90 tons. If the calculation were made upon a basis of 70 tons to the boat, the result would be a capacity for through freight of 3,815,-200 tons. Moreover, in consequence of the deposits of mud, and washings of sand from the hill sides, the canal has not its full depth of 5 feet, but has actually filled up in some places to about 3½ feet, and that is the depth to which the boats are now loaded. A very little additional expense (which in consequence of the embarrassed condition of the company's affairs they cannot now encounter) would maintain a depth of 4½ feet, and then the capacity of boats would be increased to 100 tons. Nor in this estimate do I consider the effect of steam as a motive power, which will most probably, at an early day, be introduced upon the canal.

The estimate of revenue above given is based upon assumed rates and quantities, the value of which you are as competent to determine as I am. For instance, you will be able to say whether thirty thousand tons to and from Covington, independently of all reliance upon the Covington and Ohio railroad, be a sufficient estimate, considering even the lumber trade alone, which I doubt not will be immense, immediately upon the completion of the canal to that point. So, too, as to the quantity of cannel coal and cannel oil, from Kanawha to Richmond. If I be not mistaken in the future demand for these articles at this point, one-fourth of the capacity of the canal would probably be required for that trade alone. Then again, the articles of salted meats, flour, grain and tobacco, seeking exit to Europe. Here the difficulty is rather to keep the estimate within limits which shall appear to be reasonable, than to exaggerate it. Credulity is indeed taxed, when we consider the products of the great central region of the west—that almost illimitable region of the richest land upon earth, which most remarkably has so small a number of outlets by water to connect it with the rest of the globe; these being the Mississippi river in one direction and the St. Lawrence river in another; both of which we know are liable to many obstructions and dangers. And so far as the artificial routes through the states of New York, Pennsylvania and Maryland are competitors, we know equally that our line possesses admitted and decided advantages over them. On this point I beg to quote the language of my honored predecessor, Judge Mason. In his last report to the stockholders, before proceeding upon his mission to France, speaking of the canal and the Covington and Ohio railroad, he thus expresses himself. (See 19th Annual Report, page 561):

"In the great valley to which these improvements are tending, the estimated annual production of articles of commerce for transportation to the Atlantic ports of the United States, is seventeen million tons of freight. Considering the physical objections to the down stream transportation by way of New Orleans, arising from the heat and moisture of the climate, often highly injurious to bread-stuffs, the cereal grains, tobacco and provisions, and the interruption of the northern routes, for many months in the year, by the severity of the climate, I have not doubted that if lines of transportation shall be established through Virginia to the Ohio River, they must and will command a considerable portion of the trade of the valleys of the Mississippi and the Ohio. The capacity of the railroad is not equal to the transportation annually of more than four hundred thousand tons. The capacity of the canal is to carry nearly three millions. Both improvements will find most remunerating employment. The length of your improvement will be 483 miles; and if it can command one million tons of extra-territorial freight, conceding to the railroad all the passengers, and as much freight as it can carry, you may reduce your tolls to one cent per ton per mile, and your revenue will be four millions eight hundred and thirty thousand dollars, exclusive of freight on articles of consumption taken in return, and of the way freight furnished by the people of Virginia, along the whole length of the line.

"Is this an extravagant anticipation? The articles of freight making the enormous aggregate before stated, are the surplus products of the interior, and must find their way to market by some line of navigation or improvement. The competing lines are limited in number. The Virginia lines will have the advantage of distance and of climate over both southern and northern routes; and over those by the lakes, this controlling advantage, that the great productions of provisions and breadstuffs, being ready for market in December and January, cannot use the northern waterlines, while obstructed by ice, but through Virginia they may be sent to market in the winter months, thus avoiding the necessity of keeping them on hand at risk of injury or loss, with the advantage of applying labor to getting them off, at a season when it could not be very advantageously employed in the field; and of the commercial advantage of converting them into money at an earlier day. The interest on the proceeds of sale, by our routes, for the period which must elapse before they can be sent by the New York canal, would make a most important item in our favor."

In estimating the value of this canal, I do not propose to consider the subject in the enlarged aspect of its value to the state—as a means of developing agricultural, mineral and manufacturing resources, of increasing population and wealth, of creating a domestic and foreign trade, of imparting greatness and splendor to the metropolis, of building up Norfolk as a center of commerce, but simply of its value as a moneyed investment.

The actual cost to the James river and Kanawha company of all the works and property belonging to the company has been		10,413,996.00
The estimated cost of completing the waterline is, in round numbers		13,000,000.00
Supposing that it would take five years to complete the work, there would then be an interest account of:
5 years on say, $2,000,000.00, at 6 per cent.	600,000.00
4 years on say $3,000,000.00, at 6 per cent.....	720,000.00
3 years on say $3,000,000.00, at 6 per cent.....	540,000.00
2 years on say $3,000,000.00, at 6 per cent.....	360,000.00
1 year on say $2,000,000.00, at 6 per cent.	120,000.00
		2,340,000.00
Total cost when completed		$25,753,996.00
Estimated revenue	3,425,235.00
Expenses of repairs, salaries of agents &c., at $750 per mile	363,750.00
Net income		$3,061,485.00

Which is very nearly twelve per cent. upon the whole cost of the work.

The financial condition of the company is of course a matter of great concernment in a negotiation like the present.

A few brief paragraphs under this head will suffice to make you understand our present condition and the cause of all our woes.

The original capital was five millions of dollars—of which the state paid one million in old works, and of the private subscription there proved to be insolvent $73,336.46—leaving $3,926,663.54 as the actual available cash capital; and even this, in consequence of the failure of the Bank of the United States, the commercial disasters of the years 1836 and 1837, and other unfavorable circumstances, was collected slowly, irregularly, and at heavy cost. All beyond the capital thus realized, has been borrowed money, on which the company has been required to pay interest from the day it was received, before it was expended, and of course long before it began to yield any return. The amount of interest actually paid is $2,765,397.25, exclusive of the annuity of $399,000 paid to the stockholders of the old James river company.

The charter of the company, section 28 (Annual Reports, vol. 1, p. 755), is as follows:

"If the capital of five millions of dollars shall be found insufficient to complete the works required of the company, they shall be at liberty to enlarge their capital to any amount which may be found necessary to that end. The commonwealth shall be at liberty to take two-fifths of the additional capital, or any portion thereof, and the other stockholders to take the residue."

As the work progressed, the cost considerably exceeding the estimate, it became apparent even before the completion of the line to Lynchburg, that an increase of capital would be required for its continuous prosecution. Application was therefore made to the legislature, at the session of 1838-39, praying that honorable body to subscribe on the part of the state three-fifths of the sum of six millions of dollars, proposed to be added to the company's capital stock, and to give authority to the company to subscribe on its own part the other two-fifths of this additional capital with certain conditions annexed. But the legislature preferred to authorize the company to borrow on the credit of the corporate funds, the sum of one million five hundred thousand dollars, provided the loan could be negotiated at an interest not exceeding six per centum per annum, payable at some place either in the United States or in Europe, the faith of the state being pledged as guarantee for the punctual payment of the interest, and the redemption of the principal, according to the terms of the loan. This was the act, passed March 23, 1839, under which the first guaranteed bonds were issued. The president, in laying it before the stockholders, expressed his sincere regret at the failure of the proposition submitted by the company, because, as he stated, it was introducing the policy of operating exclusively on borrowed funds, at an earlier period than was desirable by the company. Nevertheless, in view as well of the evils which its rejection would produce, as of the benefits which its adoption would confer (among which was, that the judicious and economical expenditure of the amount of the loan would carry the work into the heart of the Valley of Virginia), he recommended to the stockholders to give their sanction to all the provisions of the act—and the act was accordingly accepted and adopted as an amendment of their charter. No mortgage or other specific lien was at that time required of the company.

About a year thereafter, a gentleman of South Carolina, of well known abilities and of high character, being about to proceed to Europe to negotiate a loan for the republic of Texas, the company entrusted to him, under suitable instructions, an amount of five per cent. sterling bonds, equivalent to $550,000. This gentleman visited various cities in Europe, earnestly endeavoring to effect a sale of the bonds; he pledged a part of them with a house in London, for a small advance, which was duly remitted; and finally effected a credit with a house in Amsterdam, on an hypothecation of the remainder of the bonds, but applied the money chiefly to the uses of the Texan government, under the expectation, as he afterwards declared, that the misappropriation would be of very short duration, and that it would be rectified from the proceeds of the Texan negotiations.

Immediately upon the receipt of these embarrassing tidings in Richmond, they were communicated by the president and directors to the general assembly, then in session, accompanied by a memorial and all the documents and correspondence relating to the negotiation; and the committee to which they were referred, after a careful and deliberate investigation, by an almost unanimous vote, reported a bill in conformity to the prayer of the petition.

The two houses of assembly, however, did not concur in the views of the committee. The bill as reported encountered an active and violent opposition; and on the 25th March, 1842, an act was passed authorizing a loan to the company of $250,000, in certificates of state stock, for the purpose chiefly of redeeming the guaranteed bonds which had been pledged in London and hypothecated in Amsterdam. But the act required——

First—That the company should execute to the Board of public works a mortgage or other specific lien on all their property, real and personal, and upon the net income of all their tolls and receipts:

1. To secure the payment of the annuity to the old James river company;

2. To secure the state from loss by reason of her responsibility for the guaranteed loan under the act of March, 1839;

3. To secure the payment semi-annually of the interest, and repayment of the principal of the certificates then authorized to be issued.

Second—That when redeemed, the company should return to the treasurer of the commonwealth one hundred thousand dollars of the guaranteed bonds, to be by him canceled.

Third—That the company, until authorized by the legislature, should enter into no new contract or engagement for work to be done on the line of its improvement.

Fourth—That the certificates of stock authorized to be issued under this act should not be at any time disposed of at less than their par value, without the consent of the Board of public works, that the company should be prohibited from making any new issues or reissues of scrip or post notes; and that instead of one proxy to represent the stock of the commonwealth in the annual or other meetings of the stockholders of the company, there should be three proxies, appointed by the Board of public works, who were instructed to propose and vote for a reduction of at least ten per cent. in the salaries and compensation of all the officers of the company, except those whose salary did not exceed $500.

I need go but one step further to account for a paralyzed credit. This will be found in an act passed March 24th, 1843, entitled an act authorizing the company to increase their tolls, and for other purposes, the sixth section of which is in these words:

"6. Be it further enacted, That if the said company shall make default in the payment of any money now advanced, or hereafter advanced for the payment of the interest on the guaranteed debt of the company by the commonwealth, or any installment of the annuity to the old James river company now in arrear, or which may hereafter become in arrear, when payment thereof shall be required by the general assembly, or the Board of public works, it shall be lawful for the Board of public works to recover the sum or sums so due, with lawful interest thereon, by motion in the name of the commonwealth, on ten days' notice, in any court having jurisdiction of motions in behalf of the commonwealth, against public defaulters. And to enforce the execution of any judgment recovered on such motion, the court in which such judgment shall have been recovered, may, on application of the commonwealth, direct a writ of sequestration to issue against the goods, chattels, lands and revenues of said company, the execution of which writ shall be under the control of the court. On the levy of the said writ, the revenues of the said company thus sequestrated shall be applied, first to support and preserve the works of the company—second, to the payment of the interest on the guaranteed debt of the company, or installments of the annuity to the old James river company, which may be in arrear during the pendency of the writ—and finally to pay the judgment, interest and costs. The sequestration shall continue until these objects are accomplished. Nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or impair the right of the commonwealth to enforce the mortgage executed in pursuance of the provisions of the act of assembly, passed March twenty-fifth, eighteen hundred and forty-two."

This enactment which was required to be adopted, and was adopted, as an amendment of the charter, was substantially repeated in the second section of an act, passed February 21st, 1845, entitled an act for the relief of the company.

I now submit to you the following statement, showing the amount invested in the works and property of the company, from its organization in May, 1835, to the 30th September, 1859:

COST OF CONSTRUCTION:

Balance 1st October, 1859		$ 20,286.98

The indebtedness of the company is as follows:

1. To the state of Virginia, for state stock and money loaned under successive acts of the legislature, to wit:

25th March, 1842	250,000.00
21st February, 1845	268,645.33
18th December, 1846	57,559.36
1st March, 1847	1,236,000.00
25th January, 1850	110,000.00
5th June, 1852	120,000.00
7th January, 1853	67,770.00
2nd March, 1853	640,000.00
29th March, 1853	70,000.00
3rd March, 1854	60,000.00
19th January, 1856	135,070.80
15th March, 1856	67,350.90
22d December, 1857	269,388.60
Aggregate	$3,351,784.99

On nearly the whole of this debt there is an arrearage of several years' interest.

2. To the holders of bonds, issued by the company and guaranteed by the state of Virginia, under successive acts of the legislature, to wit:

23d March, 1839	1,400,000.00
9th March, 1849	350,000.00
12th March, 1849	150,000.00
15th March, 1850	360,000.00
Aggregate	$2,260,000.00

These bonds are irredeemable for a given number of years from their date, and then payable at the pleasure of the company, except those issued under the authority of the act of the 9th March, 1849, which are payable 25 years from their date, or at any time within that period, at the pleasure of the company, on giving six months' notice to the holders thereof. The semi-annual installment of interest which became due on these bonds, on the 1st day of July last, is unpaid.

3. To the stockholders of the old James river company a perpetual annuity of $21,000 guaranteed by the state of Virginia, under the 21st section of the act of the 16th March, 1832. This sum, payable in semi-annual installments, and continuing forever, represents a capital (at 6 per cent. interest) of $350,000.

4. To private and corporate creditors, to whom money is due by obligations of several kinds, to wit:

1. Salaries and wages of officers, agents and employees, for services;

2. Accounts for supplies of clothing, provisions, oil, lumber and other materials, &c.;

3. Bonds for the hire of slaves;

4. Negotiable notes given in settlement of amounts due for services, supplies, hires, &c.;

5. Estimates for work on the New Canton bridge, Bosher's dam, Joshua falls dam, and North river improvement;

6. Bond for money borrowed on account of the Tide water connection;

7. Bonds issued to contractors for work on the third division;

8. Bonds issued to contractors for constructing a canal to supply the city of Lynchburg with water, and for raising the level of the canal at Lynchburg, with a view to an increase of the water power;

9. Bonds issued to contractors for work on the North river improvement;

10. Bond for the purchase of real estate at Lexington, in connection with North river improvement;

11. Eight per cent. bonds, given in exchange for bonds originally issued for work on the third division.

The aggregate of this fourth class of debt, which we will call the "floating debt," was on the first day of October last, $428,932.82.

In addition to the foregoing, certain bonds of the North river navigation company, which were issued prior to the act of 16th March, 1858, authorizing the transfer of the franchises of the North river navigation company to the James river and Kanawha company, have been guaranteed by this company under the authority of an act of the general assembly, passed March 9th, 1853. In pursuance of the last mentioned act, agreements have been entered into between the two companies, whereby the James river and Kanawha company has pledged the tolls to be reecived by it upon the tonnage passing to and from the improvement of the North river navigation company, over and above the sum of $5,000, as security for the payment of the interest and redemption of the principal of the loan. A trustee has been appointed to receive and apply the tolls so pledged. The whole amount of bonds issued is $200,000; on which 6 per cent. interest, and 5 per cent. as a sinking fund (making $22,000), are annually paid in semi-annual installments; but the trustee having invested the sinking fund and the semi-annual interest upon the same in these bonds, there is now outstanding held by others than himself, only the sum of $160,378.

To secure the debts due to the state, and the debts guaranteed by the state, and the annuity to the old James river company, mortgages have been executed by the company to the Board of public works as follows:

One dated 9th May, 1842,
One dated 28th June, 1847,
One dated 27th February, 1851,
One dated 7th April, 1851,
One dated 30th April, 1853,
One dated 30th June, 1853,
One dated 9th March, 1854.

And deeds of trust have been given as follows:

One dated 14th February, 1856,
One dated 1st February 1858.

These indentures convey all the property, real and personal, of the company, with all and singular the rights, privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, and all the rents, issues and profits, and especially the tolls which may be derived therefrom; but the deeds of mortgage contain the proviso, that until the mortgages be foreclosed, the company, their officers, agents and servants may remain in the undisturbed use and possession of the property, may collect and receive the tolls and other income thereof, and may defray therefrom the necessary charges for the repair, support and management of their canal and other works, and for the administration of the company, before applying any part to the payment of the annuity, interest or principal intended to be secured. And the deeds of trust contain the proviso that the trustee shall not have the right to sell, except upon being required so to do by an act of the general assembly, prescribing the manner and terms of sale, and the time of previous notice.

It is proper that I should mention also the existence of several suits against the company for claims, the justice of which is denied, and which are therefore resisted. The most important of these are ——

1. A case from the county of Kanawha, involving a judgment for $5,400; to which a writ of supersedeas has been allowed by the court of appeals.

2. A case from the county of Amherst, involving a judgment for $3,363.20; which has been sent back by the court of appeals for a new trial, upon principles favorable to the company. A second case of the same nature is depending and undetermined in the circuit court of the same county.

3. A case from the county of Fluvanna, involving a judgment for $2,000; from which the company means to appeal.

Supersedeas bonds have been or will be given in these and other cases.

Two suits have been instituted in the circuit court for the district of Columbia, the object of which is to recover, out of the funds to be paid by the government of the United States to the creditors to the late republic of Texas, the sum of $98,-104.68, with interest on $63,820.45, part thereof, from the 12th day of August, 1852. Injunction bonds have been given in these two cases.

When the work upon the third division was suspended for the want of means, in December, 1856, the contracts were closed and liquidated damages paid; but the contractors reserved to themselves the right to resume operations under their original contracts, whenever the company should decide to go on with the work of construction, provided they elect to do so within thirty days after notice to them respectively of such decision. Fifteen miles of this division of the canal, except the light section work, and the farm bridges upon it, were put under contract for construction in August, 1853. The estimated cost of the work thus let to contract was $815,-188; the amount of work that has been done is $374,170—leaving the amount remaining to be done, estimated at $441,018.

On other portions of the line, there are existing contracts as follows:

1. For the completion of the North river improvement.
2. For the reconstruction of Bosher's dam.
3. For the reconstruction of the Joshua falls dam.
4. For completing the raising of the Lynchburg level, including the guard bank on Daniel's Island.

The aggregate estimated cost of these several improvements is (approximately) $123,333.

There are a number of exisiting contracts for the supply of water power to milling and manufacturing establishments upon the line of the canal. The right of the lessee to the use of the water is subservient to the navigation in all cases but two—one at Richmond, the other at Lynchburg. The amount receivable from this source at present is about $10,000 per annum. Some years ago, the chief engineer estimated that the revenue from the sale of water at Richmond alone would in time be equal to the interest on a capital of two millions of dollars. I think it highly probable, that such an extent of water power, in positions so eminently advantageous, as our line affords, is not to be found elsewhere in the United States.

The number of officers and agents at this time in the service of the company, is as follows:

The president,
Six directors,
The secretary,
One book keeper,
One clerk,

The president pro tem. of the Kanawha board,
Four directors of the Kanawha board,
The secretary of the Kanawha board,
The chief engineer,

Two assistant engineers
Two superintendents of repairs,
Three toll gatherers on the canal,
Three toll gatherers' clerks,
Three inspectors of boats,
Ninety-eight lock keepers,
One distributing agent,
Two master masons,
Four master carpenters,
Six overseers,
One ferryman,
One collector on the dock,
Two collectors on the Kanawha river,
Four bridge gate keepers,
Two turnpike agents,
Thirteen turnpike gate keepers,
One patrol.

Whole number of officers and agents, one hundred and sixty-five, who may receive an annual compensation of $55,746.

There are of course, in addition to these, a number of subordinate mechanics and laborers employed in the various operations of the company.

In regard to the charter, about which you enquire particularly, it would be impossible for me, without great labor, to furnish you a copy which would be either useful or intelligible. The James river and Kanawha company are the successors of both the James river company and the Richmond dock company. The act incorporating the James river company was passed at the "October session, 1784"; since which time other acts and parts of acts relating to that company have been passed, to the number of sixty-eight. The act incorporating the Richmond dock company was passed February 19, 1816; since which time acts and parts of acts relating to that company have been passed, to the number of eleven. The act incorporating the James river and Kanawha company was passed March 16, 1832; since which time acts and parts of acts relating to the company have been passed, to the number of eighty-three.

By their acceptance of the conditions prescribed by the general assembly in an act passed March 2d, 1853, the James river and Kanawha company became "subject to the provisions of the Code of Virginia, so far as they relate to internal improvement and joint stock companies." Under the provisions of the Code, the charter may now be altered or modified by any future legislature, as may seem to it proper, except that no law shall be passed for taking from the company its works or property without making to it just compensation, or for changing its tolls without its assent, in any other cases than such as are specially provided for in chapter sixty-one.

The twenty-seventh section of the act incorporating the stockholders of the James river and Kanawha company provided, that if the works required of the company were not finished within twelve years after the first general meeting of the stockholders, then their charter should be forfeited, and all the works of the company, with the land on which they are situated, and all the rights, privileges and immunities of the company should be vested in the James river company (as then existing) for the benefit of the commonwealth; and in that event the James river company was to be regarded as the successor of the James river and Kanawha company, but not to be liable for any debts contracted by them, or entitled to any part of their personal property. By an act passed March 1st, 1847, the time limited for the completion of the works of the company was extended to the 25th May, 1859.

The Code (chapter 61, section 31) contains a general provision applicable to any company which shall fail to commence and complete its works within the time prescribed by its act of incorporation.

It is not for me to determine how far the legislature would be justified in taking advantage of the clause of forfeiture in the charter of the James river and Kanawha company. Mr. Cabell, the first president, in his supplement before referred to, considers the question in an exceedingly interesting and earnest manner, recalling to recollection the position in which the improvement stood, and the light in which it seemed to be regarded by the state, at the period of the adoption of the new charter. Replying to the suggestion, that the improvement was a mere trust confided to the present company, and that the period for the execution of the trust was about to expire, he states (p. 752), "I can only declare it as my solemn conviction, that if such doctrine had been advanced, and had been respectably maintained at the period of the adoption of the charter, it would have been fatal to the subscription, and the company would not have been formed." Again (p. 759), "not only did the legislative and executive departments of the Government thus actively and avowedly encourage the citizens of Virginia to come forward and support the new scheme of improvement, but the whole course of the proceedings, and the whole history of the period bear the most ample testimony to the general expectation then entertained, that the enterprise in which they were invited to embark millions of money, was to be a manly, dignfied and permanent effort, and that the charter about to be consummated would, in the event of no act of malfeasance on the part of the company, be, in point of fact, a perpetual grant." And again (p. 762), "I repeat that I believe that it was the general, if not the universal expectation, at the period of the enactment of the charter, that the system then proposed to be adopted, if carried into execution, was not to be changed or abandoned for slight or transitory causes, and that, in the event of no act of malfeasance being committed on the part of the company, the stockholders might be fully persuaded that the legislature would always be too just and too magnanimous to regard the chartered privileges in any other light than in the nature of a perpetual grant. Believing sincerely that such were truly the intentions of the general assembly, I did not hesitate in the course of numerous public addresses to the people of the counties on the line, delivered in the course of the years 1833 and 1834, to treat with contempt, indignation and scorn, the idea that the legislature ever would wield the power conferred by the forfeiture clause in the charter for any other end than to secure integrity and good faith on the part of the company, with a view to the ultimate consumation of the scheme."

The forfeiture of a charter differs, I believe, from the expiration of a charter. In the latter case, there is an unqualified limitation, depending upon the lapse of time, so that the corporate powers and obligations cease on a given day, unless otherwise specially provided, as of a bank, which may collect debts, &c., after the expiration of its charter; but in the former case, limitation or forfeiture depends upon the performance of a condition, which there may have been good and sufficient reason for not complying with. Hence, I am advised, our courts hold that the franchises of a corporation cannot be forfeited without a judgment, either on scire facias, or quo warranto; nor can real estate conveyed to a corporation be divested by non-user alone, without a judicial sentence. In other words, the forfeiture must be ascertained by the sentence of a competent court in a proper proceeding for the purpose.

Should an action be instituted to enforce a repeal of the charter, or dissolution of the body, in the case of the James river and Kanawha company, it would not be difficult I think to adduce many extenuating circumstances. There is indeed nothing in the history of this company, of which I am aware, to cause just apprehension that proceedings will be instituted to enforce a repeal of the charter. The corporation has been guilty of no willful abuse or improper neglect; there has been no misapplication of the powers entrusted to it—no omission to comply with any condition which it was in its power to perform—nothing producing, or having a tendency to produce mischievous consequences to anyone. So far from willful nonfeasances, scarcely a session has elapsed that the company has not besieged the legislature with applications to enable it to comply with the main condition of the charter. If ever there has been a stretch of authority, it has been toward the great end and design of the charter—the vigorous prosecution, early completion, and permanent maintenance and good order of the improvemet. The whole capital has been expended honestly, if not in all cases judiciously. But the errors or administration commonly alleged, have been long since excused by the legislature itself. So far as I can perceive, no interest of the state would be promoted by the dissolution—no existing danger to the community requires it—it is not pretended that stockholders more zealous or more patriotic could be found than those now associated with the state—in short, nothing can be urged against the company except insolvency—and that, resulting in great degree, as has been partially shown, from legislative action, against which the company protested at the time. Admitting, however, the forfeiture incurred, the legislature may easily by grant revive or renovate the old corporation with the old corporators.

There is an act of assembly, of which I feel it my duty likewise to apprise you, entitled "an act to make investments of the commonwealth more productive, by enforcing the payment of interest and sinking fund on loans to internal improvement companies; of dividends on preferred stock, and the interest on the bonds of such companies guaranteed by the state," passed March 27, 1858. [See Acts of Assembly 1857-58, chapter 7, page 6].

In the case of the James river and Kanawha company, the president and directors have done nothing but what they were authorized and required by the legislature and their mortgages to do—that is to say, they have applied the revenue first to the payment of the current expenses of the administration of the company, and the repairs of the improvement. They consider themselves therefore fully within the exceptional clause of the second section of the act, which is in these words: "But so much of the revenue of any company as may have been pledged, with the express assent of the general assembly, to the payment of any other debt, in preference to the debt to the state, shall not be included in the gross revenue hereinbefore mentioned." Moreover, the board consider, there was a condonation by the legislature up to the last mortgage or deed of trust given; the legislature having then recognized the existing state of things, and made provision for it. Nevertheless, I am informed that the auditor of public accounts has notified the attorney general of the failure of the company to make payments into the treasury in the cases and manner named in the second section of the act, but so far as I am apprised, the attorney general has not yet moved for judgment against the company.

I have thus, as minutely and particularly as you seemed to desire, given you such a narration of the history and affairs of the company, as I suppose sufficient to enable you to comprehend the present condition and future prospects of this great improvement. You have seen the early beginning of the scheme under the immediate auspices of the illustrious father of his country. You have seen how much was accomplished in its prosecution under the auspices of the state. You have seen how much, I should rather say, how little has been accomplished under the auspices of the state's successor, the present company. Should this view have brought you to the same conclusions with myself, you will find it difficult to understand how Virginia could have so long permitted such an improvement to remain incomplete. To me, I confess it is amazing, that the people of the state have not years ago sent up their delegates to the general assembly, with instructions to employ all the means, and concentrate all the energies at their command for the accomplishment, in the shortest possible time, of an enterprise, which when completed, will pour a tide of trade and commerce into the towns and cities and seaports of the state, the richness of which, I verily believe, no man can estimate. While I may be permitted, as a son of Virginia, to bewail this great remissness, as I conceive it to be, on her part, my present purpose is, however, to deal with things existing rather than with things past.

Having in my letter to you of the 8th of September last, submitted several inquiries, with the view to elicit proposals from which I might select, I beg leave now particularly to call your attention to the last of those enquiries, and to suggest that I think an arrangement might be made upon the basis therein indicated, with mutual advantage to yourselves and the company.

The scheme is briefly this:

I value the works and property of the company at....		$10,000,000
And propose that the present stockholders shall contribute them at that valuation.
The engineer estimates the cost of completing the improvement at	13,000,000
And estimating five years as the time necessary for completion, there should be allowed an interest account of, say....	2,000,000
		$25,000,000

On which, if so much, dividends will be declared and paid in proportion to the amount of stock held by the parties respectively.

What are the inducements for you to make such an arrangement?

First—As I understand, you are the owners and possessors of three hundred thousand acres of lands up the waters of the Guyandotte, the Tug fork of Big Sandy and branches of the Great Kanawha rivers—being a part of the lands formerly belonging to Col. James Swan, which by an act of the general assembly, passed in the year 1833, were vested in J. P. Dumas, curator, for the benefit of Colonel Swan's creditors, and have now been confirmed to you and your associates by the decree of a competent court, from which no appeal has been taken.

These lands abound in minerals, unequaled, it is believed, by any in the world, in variety, extent and value, and particularly in bituminous, splint and cannel coals, which as yet remain almost literally undisturbed. Who can estimate the value of such a domain, this improvement being completed? In my deliberate judgment, you and your associates would, in that case, be no contemptible rivals of the Bourse or the Credit Mobilier of your own country.

Secondly—As contractors, having the control of large means, and therefore able to command labor, supplies, and all the appliances requisite to conducting an enterprise with vigor, skill and judgment, you might expect to realize, under what we are accustomed to regard ordinary cash prices in this country, a profit in itself fully remunerative.

Thirdly—No well informed person can doubt what would be the dividends upon a judicious outlay of the capital necessary to complete this improvement in a durable manner. Hence, your profits in this particular would probably exceed those of any investment you could expect to make in Europe; and therefore, the acquisition of stock, even in this aspect, ought to be acceptable and satisfactory.

I will not conceal my earnest desire to complete an arrangement with you on terms which shall be satisfactory to my company and the legislature. Of course I could expect you to do nothing, in the present embarrassed condition of the company, without the full concurrence of the legislature—and therefore I must ask you to assume, as the basis of a final arrangement, that the legislature, in order to obtain for the state the advantages which it is admitted would result from the completion of the improvement, will relieve the company of every existing lien and liability, so far, at least, as you and your interests may be affected thereby.

On the other hand, it is assumed that you will satisfy the legislature of your ability to comply with any contract you may make with the company.

Why should the ability be wanting? If the financial notabilities of your country, men whose personnel and means alike command the public confidence, and who are known in every money market, and are accustomed to look abroad through the world for opportunities of investment, can be made to understand the facts of the case, I see no reason why, with our stock in hand, you should not be able to obtain advances to any extent which might be called for by possible deficiency on your part and the exigency of the work. Why, indeed, should not the emperor of your great nation see in such a contract, coupled with the relations which unhappily exist between the northern and southern states of this Union, an opportunity of which he might avail himself, as by a coup d'etat, to establish direct trade between the southern states and France? France! once our ally, having no sympathy now with Exeter hall, or its mischievous doings, and ready, as she is able, to quadruple the current exchange of values between herself and the south, the southwest and the west of this wonderfully productive country. France! in whose magnificent capital you find today, a decisive mark of our regard, in the bust of the noble marquis, which was voted by the commonwealth of Virginia to the city of Paris at the very moment that Washington was inaugurating the great work which we are called upon to complete.

I submit with deference these views and suggestions, and soliciting your favorable consideration of them.

Remain, dear sir,

With great respect,

Your very obedient servant,

THOMAS H. ELLIS,
President.

To Mr. Ernest de Bellot des Minieres, &c. &c. &c.

THE MASTER: You had better follow that right up with the next letter that follows it, which relates to the same subject matter.

MR. HOLT: And also a letter signed by Thomas H. Ellis, president, addressed to the same party, dated Richmond, December 3, 1859, and found at pages 694 to 696, inclusive, of this same Volume 5.

THE MASTER: That relates to the same subject matter, sort of a recapitulation.

MR. HOLT: Yes, sir.

The letter was admitted in evidence and is considered as Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 6.

Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 6 is as follows:

Office James River and Kanawha Co.
Richmond, Dec. 3, 1859.

Gentlemen,

Under the reservations contained in the 4th resolution which was adopted by the stockholders, at their meeting on the 27th of October last, I respectfully submit to yourselves and your associates the following scheme for the completion of the James river and Kanawha canal:

The present stockholders to contribute their works at the price of		10,000,000
You to complete the improvement, the estimated cost of which is	13,000,000
Interest to be allowed on the sums advanced by you from time to time for that purpose, which may amount to, say	2,000,000
		15,000,000
Total cost when completed (estimated).....		$25,000,000
Of which the public share or share of the state of Virginia will be, in shares of stock, at $100 per share	8,000,000
The private share, exclusive of yours, will be.	2,000,000
Your share —— the whole amount of your advances not exceeding	15,000,000
Total		$25,000,000

You to pay $500,000 (part of the said $15,000,000) for the purpose of relieving the company of its floating debt; of which sum, $250,000 to be paid as soon as a definite agreement shall be signed, and the balance paid in sufficient time to meet the residue of the debt as it becomes due; or, the said balance may be paid at the same time with the first $250,000, if you so prefer. Certificates of stock to be issued for the amount paid at the time of payment.

The company to contract with you for you to execute the work at prices and on terms to be agreed upon, the work to be completed by or before the 4th day of July, 1865—the plan and the mode of executing the work to be exclusively under the control, judgment and discretion of the company—but the prices to be fixed by agreement between the company and yourselves—and in case the company and yourselves should differ, or be unable to fix such prices by agreement, the difference to be decided by arbitrators— one to be selected by the company and one by yourselves, with power in the arbitrators, in case of their disagreement, to call in an umpire, whose award shall be final.

Estimates of the work performed, and materials furnished, to be taken quarterly by the engineers of the company, in the mode provided for in the contract, and interest to be allowed on the quarterly estimates; but twenty per cent. of the said estimates respectively shall be left in the hands of the company until the completion of the work, when the same, with interest, shall be settled for in stock at par upon a final settlement between yourselves and the company.

It is to be understood, nevertheless, that the company reserve to themselves, and are to have the right, in case the commencement of your operations be unreasonably delayed, or after they are commenced shall be neglected, or prosecuted without reasonable diligence, to give notice and rescind the contract between the parties, and treat the same as abandoned on your part; in which case the whole reserved percentage in the hands of the company shall be forfeited.

The balance of the estimates (after deducting the reserved twenty per cent. before mentioned) and the interest upon said balances respectively to be paid from time to time in stock at par, until the aggregate sum, composed of the said balances, with interest, and the reserved sum, with interest, shall reach $15,000,000—if so much be necessary for the completion of the work. But the amount of stock to be held by you, and in regard to which your interests as stockholders shall be regulated, shall be governed by the amount of your payments, advances and estimates, with the accrued interest, for which stock at par shall be issued, as afore mentioned. All amounts beyond the said sum of $15,000,000, if any, to constitute debt from the company to you, on which interest shall be paid before dividends. If preferred by you the aggregate of stock may be limited to $8,000,000; all beyond that sum being debt from the company to you, on which interest shall be similarly paid. But your rights and interests as stockholders, in case of such limitation, to be dismissed in conformity therewith.

Dividends out of the net profits of the work to be payable semi-annually, in proportion to the amount of stock held, but not to exceed the per centum allowed by the charter.

When $500,000 shall have been paid in cash, your vote in a meeting of the stockholders shall be one-fourth of the vote given in any election, or on any question, by others than the state and yourselves; when the improvement has been completed to Covington, your vote shall be one-half of the vote given by such others; and when the entire improvement has been completed, your vote shall be two-thirds of the vote given by such others. The vote of the state in respect of her present stock, which amounts to $3,000,000, to remain as at present, to wit: not to exceed two-thirds of the whole number of votes given in the same election, or on the same question, by others than yourselves. In respect of her additional $5,000,000, the vote of the state to be one-third of the vote given by yourselves. This provision is based upon the expectation that you will be stockholders to the extent of $15,000,000. In case of your being stockholders for a less amount, your vote will be proportionately diminished, observing the same ratio in regard to other votes as results from the proportion above indicated on the supposition that your stock would be equal to $15,000,000.

In the event of your assigning any shares of your stock, the votes of your assignees shall be ratable in proportion to their respective amounts of stock—the whole of your and their votes together not to exceed the vote which you could give if there were no assignment.

Such books shall be kept as may be necessary to distinguish this particular stock.

This scheme presupposes that the state will convert into stock the whole debt of the company, other than the floating debt, and will surrender the existing liens.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen,

With much consideration,

Your obedient servant,

THOMAS H. ELLIS,
President.

Messrs. Ernest de Bellot des Minieres and Theodore Olivari, &c. &c.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Hillman, whether or not this letter first introduced is a part of the report of the president to the stockholders of the James River and Kanawha Company.

A. Yes, sir, it is.

THE MASTER: What does he say it is, a part of the report of the president?

MR. HOLT: It is a part of the report of the president to the stockholders, as I understand it.

Q. Where did you get the evidence of that, Mr. Hillman?

A. He starts out with his report in the beginning, and goes right through, making a long statement to his stockholders, and shows how far the negotiations with the French Syndicate have gone.

Q. Does he exhibit this letter as a part of his report, does he make it a part of his report?

A. I will look at the document.

Q. Does he, in his report, call attention to that letter in any way, manner, shape or form?

A. Yes, sir, he does.

Q. Let me see where it is, please.

A. Page 652 of this record.

Q. What does he say at that point?

THE MASTER: Read it right into the record.

Q. Read it right into the record.

A. (Reading):

"Third—Under your request that I would continue my correspondence with Mr. Bellot des Minieres, for the purpose of negotiating an arrangement for the completion of the Canal, on terms to be approved by the Board of Directors, and subject to the sanction of the Legislature, I addressed a letter to him, dated the 21st of November, giving such information in regard to the affairs of the Company as he had previously desired of me for the use of his associates in France. Mr. Bellot des Minieres, who for more than a year past has resided in Charleston, Kanawha, attending to a large landed interest, and studying the mineral, industrial and agricultural resources of that portion of our State, having seen in the published reports of your last annual meeting the resolution relating to himself, came to Richmond with Mr. Olivari, one of his co-partners. then recently arrived from Europe, and the two together indicated their earnest desire to receive without delay an expression of my preference and views on the propositions originally submitted by Mr. Bellot des Minieres. * * * * A copy of the two letters referred to, and of the bill to amend the charter of the Company, are herewith submitted (Nos. 3, 4 and 5)."

The numbers 3, 4 and 5 refer to the index on page 659 of this Volume 5 of the James River and Kanawha reports, wherein the documents accompanying the proceedings of the stockholders at their adjourned meeting in January are listed and numbered.

Q. Well, is the letter as offered by me one of the letters referred to in that report?

A. Yes, sir, it is No. 3.

MR. HOLT: You gentlemen may inquire of him.

MR. HARRISON: We have no questions to ask.

By the Master:

Q. Is it your understanding of this estimate of $10,000,000, that that is an estimate that I would be justified in taking as the basis of valuing the stock?

A. No, sir.

Q. The report shows the contrary, does it not, that is the letter of Mr. des Minieres? That is simply a basis on which they were proposing to put the improvement in on the basis of a new capitalization, is not that what it is?

A. Yes, sir, it is the value of the stock for the purposes of the completion of the canal.

Q. Well, they were proposing to put the property in on a proposed stock organization basis at that valuation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It does not undertake to be a statement of the net value of the property to the stockholders even?

A. I do not so understand it.

Q. They were to contribute the property on the basis of $10,000,000, and the des Minieres Company were to put in some additional construction on a basis of $15,000,000, and stock to be issued on that basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have not read this through carefully enough to see—does the report show what the indebtedness of the Company was at that time? I have not gone through it enough to be able to tell that.

A. I am not familiar enough to say.

MR. HOLT: What was the date of that report?

THE MASTER: 1859, November 21, 1859. That is the date of the letter.

Q. When did you first see this James River and Kanawha report that we have in here, that is printed?

A. After Mr. Potter's exhibits had been submitted to me for revision—not revision, for review.

Q. Since the last hearing you mean?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And prior to that you had not seen it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, were you present when Mr. Anderson made his statement purporting to be extracts from this report?

A. No, sir.

Q. Giving some computations which were predicated upon this report?

A. No, sir, I was not present. I was in Richmond——

Q. Were you not at the hearing?

A. No, sir, I was not at the hearing.

Q. Don't you remember my asking him the question as to what the fixed charges were, and his stating that he had not any information, and my stating that we would look to you for that? I will turn to the record and see what did occur there.

MR. LILLY: Did not Mr. Anderson say that he did not know——

THE MASTER: I will read just what Mr. Anderson said. I have a little curiosity to see just what he did say about this. I know I tried to find out what the fixed charges were from somebody, and did not succeed in getting it.

MR. HOLT: And with sort of a promise that we would furnish them through Mr. Hillman, and my recollection is that Mr. Hillman was in Chicago at the time. I may be wrong about it.

THE MASTER: I do not think so, I think he was present and heard the statement.

MR. LILLY: You will find his direct examination on page 721.

THE MASTER: No, it is in the cross-examination.

MR. LILLY: That begins at page 749.

Q. Have you ever looked up Mr. Anderson's testimony with reference to this James River and Kanawha report that is now printed in the record?

A. I do not think that I have read Mr. Anderson's testimony.

Q. Here is the question—that is on page 745:

"THE MASTER: Do you know what the interest charges were upon the indebtedness of the Canal Company for that year?

"A. I am not informed."

Now it turns out that the table from which he got his figures contained all that information, and right close by the figures from which he must have made his extract. Then I say:

"THE MASTER: We will get that from Mr. Hillman."

Now was your attention ever called to the fact that I wanted that information?

MR. HOLT: Is there anything to indicate that Mr. Hillman was present at that hearing?

THE MASTER: It does not make any difference whether he was or not; I want to know whether his attention was ever called to the fact that I wanted that information that Mr. Anderson did not seem to be able to give.

Q. I want to know if your attention was ever called to the fact that I wanted the information that Mr. Anderson did not seem to be able to give, which he claimed—and he had taken some figures from a tabulation—was your attention ever called to the fact that I wanted that from you?

A. No, sir, not as far as I can recall.

Q. Now, did I call your attention at the last hearing—I would like to see what you understood by this—this is at page 2803 of the transcript:

"THE MASTER: I do not know what Mr. Hillman did, but it is quite evident that I expected Mr. Hillman to get the information and enlighten me."

Now, I had in mind exactly this part of the examination. You were present then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading):

"MR. LILLY: I understood he could not get the information.

"THE MASTER: What about that, Mr. Hillman?

"MR. HILLMAN: I found nothing on file that I could determine the points that were asked about, and I notified the counsel and abandoned it."

What did you mean by that answer?

A. I meant that at the time we were looking up the James River and Kanawha Company for the purpose of finding the costs of the Company and its property, the canals and general information concerning it, that I looked over the records and found nothing on the subject, and I so informed the counsel.

Q. Well, did you understand what I was inquiring about when I asked for this information? I was after the fixed charges in this exhibit, or in this original record from which Mr. Anderson had made some extracts, and I had called attention to it in the original record and suggested that you get it. And here at the argument I asked you this:

"I do not know what Mr. Hillman did, but it is quite evident that I expected Mr. Hillman to get the information and enlighten me."

Now, I meant that information, did you understand me to mean it, or what did you understand me to mean?

A. I understood you——

Q. What information did you think I was after?

A. I understood that you wanted that information.

Q. In relation to these fixed charges?

A. In relation to these fixed charges.

Q. Now what do you say to that?

A. I said that I had looked and not found any records. Not having found any records of any character at that time, I, of course, answered the general proposition.

Q. Now, am I to understand that when you started to look for records to which Mr. Anderson referred, that you did not make any inquiry from him as to the source from which he got his information, is that the character of an investigation you made? Answer that.

A. Yes.

Q. When you came to investigate what Mr. Anderson had done, in answer to an inquiry I put to you, you did not take pains to inquire from Mr. Anderson the source from which he got his information?

A. Yes, sir, because I did not know that Mr. Anderson had——

Q. And you gave me to understand that there was not any information obtainable, that without having inquired from Mr. Anderson the source of his information, you assumed that there was not any obtainable, is that what you did?

A. No, sir, not exactly.

Q. Let me read what you did. Wait a minute. I do not like to be bothered in digging this stuff up in this sort of way. You said:

> "I found nothing on file that I could determine the points that were asked about, and I notified the counsel and abandoned it."

Now you tell me that you did not even ask Mr. Anderson the source from which he got his information. You knew that I wanted information in relation to that particular point, and you did not ask Mr. Anderson where he got his information; and yet you tell me that you could not find the information, and you notified the counsel and abandoned it. Is that what you mean? Is that the way you made the investigation?

A. That is the way I made the investigation. Will you allow me to explain it?

Q. I will read the rest, and then you can explain it.

"THE MASTER: Were there any books of the Company?

"MR. HILLMAN: I did not find any anywhere. I do not mean that I wilfully abandoned the search, your Honor, but I had to let it go."

And you did not even ask Mr. Anderson what books he relied on, is that what you mean?

A. Yes, sir, except——

MR. HOLT: Well, if you will pardon me——

Q. (Reading):

"THE MASTER: Of course the canal may have been worth a decent sum of money in 1860, and it may not have been worth anything in 1880. I presume, when you come right down to it, that modern methods of transportation gradually eliminated this canal. I presume likely that might have been the fact. So that you might have a condition in 1880 that would not obtain at all in 1860.

"MR. HOLT: Exactly, I believe you will find now that the bond issue——

"THE MASTER: Let me ask this question. Are the books of the James River and Kanawha in existence anywhere?

"MR. HILLMAN: I do not think there are any such books in existence. As I said, I tried to find them and was unable to find any trace of them."

Now the effort you say you made was, you did not even ask Mr. Anderson what he relied on as a basis of his statement in making that investigation, and led me to understand—what do you mean by that?

A. I mean that I did not know that Anderson had testified on the point.

Q. You tell me right now that you knew what I was looking for. You must have known from somebody what Mr. Anderson testified to, and then you tell me practically that there is nothing in existence that discloses any of these facts.

MR. HOLT: No, your Honor, I think that that is an unfair statement. He does not say that there is nothing in existence; he says he did not find anything. And you ask him if he asked Mr. Anderson. If he knew anything about Anderson at all he knew that Anderson knew nothing about it, as least he so said, and we don't go to people for information who don't know.

THE WITNESS: That was a hearing in this room, your Honor?

THE MASTER: It was at the conclusion of the argument, and it was at the end of that that I insisted that this information that we have here now should be produced if it could be procured. Nobody knew whether it could be procured or not. Counsel on neither side had any information about it at all.

THE WITNESS: That was in the argument in this City?

THE MASTER: Yes.

THE WITNESS: That is what I understood.

THE MASTER: The answer I got from you was that you had looked it over and could not find anything, and then I insisted on these reports being produced.

THE WITNESS: I had looked in Richmond for the reports of the James River and Kanawha Company, and was not able to find any, and based my answer to you on that, that I was not able to find any; and I did not know, nor was my attention called to Mr. Anderson's testimony, that he had such a record and had seen it, and I knew nothing about it.

Q. And you did not know that I was trying to find out what those fixed charges were, is that what you say now?

A. I knew that you were trying to find out the fixed charges; I certainly did.

Q. The fixed charges that Mr. Anderson had no information about, you knew what fixed charges I meant, did you not?

A. I knew that you meant the fixed charges of the James River and Kanawha Company. I did not know that Mr. Anderson was brought into it.

Q. Do you mean to say that you did not know what I was inquiring about when I put this question:

"THE MASTER: I do not know what Mr. Hillman did, but it is quite evident that I expected Mr. Hillman to get the information and enlighten me."

Now, did you know what information I wanted when I put that question to you?

A. Yes, sir, you were after the fixed charges, as well as other information, concerning the James River and Kanawha Company.

Q. The fixed charges stated by Mr. Anderson?

A. I did not know——

Q. Did you know what he had stated up to that time?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Had your attention been called to the fact that I desired that information, by anybody? And if it had not, how did you know what I was inquiring about? If your attention had been called to it by anybody, who called your attention to it, that I wanted that information, the fixed charges that Mr. Anderson claimed he had no information about—who called your attention to that?

A. I knew that you were getting after the fixed charges——

Q. Answer this question, please. Who called your attention to the fact that I wanted information as to the fixed charges, as to which Mr. Anderson said he had no information? Had your attention been called to it?

A. Not as far as I can recall, no.

Q. Well, did you know that I wanted that information, and if you did not know, how could you answer that question intelligently?

A. I do not recall that I knew that you wanted it. I should say no.

Q. That is all.

A. If the matter is as you state there, you have asked for certain information. Having looked for the records, and not being, up to that time, able to find any records, I was perfectly justified in stating that I could not answer that question.

THE MASTER: That is all.

MR. HOLT: Let me give my recollection of this, if there is any point in it.

MR. LILLY: I do not see that it is important enough to create all this discussion anyway.

THE MASTER: I have examined him all I want to.

MR. HOLT: I was not seeking to ask him any questions, Mr. Littlefield.

THE MASTER: I have no objection to your examining him.

MR. HOLT: I say I do not want to ask him, but I want to make a statement about this.

THE MASTER: Yes, certainly.

MR. HOLT: My recollection is that when Anderson was upon the witness stand you asked him the question—he was talking about income, and you asked him the very pertinent question, whether he had any knowledge upon the subject of the fixed charges that had to be met by this Company, and he said he did not, he did not know. Then either Attorney General Lilly or myself volunteered that we would have Mr. Hillman look that up. I think that occurred at Richmond. Now, whether Hillman was present at the time or not, I do not recall, or whether he had gone to Chicago. You know there was an interim there, Mr. Littlefield, when he was away.

THE MASTER: Yes, that is right.

MR. HOLT: Then the matter seems to have dropped out of our minds, out of mine at least, I do not know what was done after that; the investigation was abandoned for some reason, I do not know what. But when we came here to the argument, at the conclusion your Honor brought it up again, and said you would like to know what those fixed charges were, and asked if it were possible to get any information upon the subject about whether or not these books might be in existence somewhere. And we were all of the opinion at that time—I think Mr. Harrison will bear me out in that—that both sides were of the opinion that no records were on hand or were accessible. You will find that you asked Mr. Harrison something about it there, and he was standing in just about the same dilemma that I was. Hillman was here, but he was going to Chicago after that, he was not going back to Richmond at all; and he did not undertake to make any investigation after that time. And the first knowledge he ever had of this matter that is in here now was when the recent exhibit of Mr. Potter was handed to him. We thought, so far as we were concerned, that we had all the information that there was on that subject. It turns out now that we did not have.

THE MASTER: Suppose I had relied on Mr. Hillman's statement that he made to me at that time, would that have given all this information that we have here now?

MR. HOLT: You did rely upon it as far as it goes. Hillman did not say there was no such material in existence; he simply said that he did not find it, just like Mr. Harrison would have made the same statement, or I would have made it. There was no such information on hand, so far as his knowledge went. Well, that does not say that there is no such information. And, of course, if you wanted to investigate to satisfy your own mind whether there was or not, you would do it independently of a statement of that kind. I could have truthfully said, and perhaps did, that there was no information I had on the subject that I knew of, but that is quite different from saying there is none.

THE MASTER: It is quite different from saying that you had looked the records up and could not find any.

MR. HOLT: He said he had looked for records.

MR. LILLY: And I suppose he did look in all the offices there, the Public Works and auditor's.

MR. HOLT: Had Mr. Potter looked for it?

THE MASTER: Mr. Potter had not been charged with the responsibility of looking for it.

MR. LILLY: Mr. Hillman had to go to Chicago and his people were sick, and he was not down in Richmond, and it was up to Mr. Potter.

THE MASTER: That would have been a very good way to answer the whole thing when I inquired of him; but instead of that he certainly made the impression on my mind that he had been requested to investigate that. My recollection of Mr. Hillman's absence in Chicago is that, as a rule, he was present at practically all of the hearings.

MR. HOLT: No, all of the exhibits practically for the year 1863, I think, were put in in his absence.

MR. LILLY: And the last of 1861.

THE MASTER: However, the impression that he left on my mind was that he had been requested to ascertain this information that Mr. Anderson did not seem to have, and that he had made an investigation, and there was not anything that gave any light on it. If he had not made any such investigation—however, we won't stop to discuss it. I simply wanted to find out what the situation was. The record, as it stood, left the impression on my mind, beyond all question.

MR. HOLT: The point is this, Mr. Littlefield, that we think it is unfair to us and unfair to the witness—you may not mean it, but it puts us in the attitude of deliberately having attempted to deceive the Master here. I am sure I have withheld nothing from the Master that I know about this case.

THE MASTER: You have not received any intimation from me that you have.

MR. HOLT: I do not mean myself exclusively. It looks as though the intimation on the part of the Master was that we had either, through our witness or personally ourselves, kept from him something. We knew nothing about it.

MR. LILLY: If we had known that, we would have brought it all in at first, because we think it helps our case. And why would he not have brought it in?

THE MASTER: I cannot tell you about that.

MR. LILLY: It impugns a motive without a reason, as far as we can see.

THE MASTER: I am not impugning any motive—I want to say this, that I was very much surprised, after the statement that Mr. Hillman made to me after the close of the last hearing, with what this long exhibit developed.

MR. HOLT: You were not any more surprised than he was.

THE MASTER: If I had taken Mr. Hillman's statement, it never would have been here. But I declined to accept his statement as final, and insisted on this document being found if it could be found. Neither side, as far as the counsel are concerned, had made any effort to examine, themselves. Mr. Anderson produced some extracts from it, and I wanted to see the whole exhibit to ascertain what the facts were in relation to it. If I had rested on Mr. Hillman's statement, it never would have been here at all. There cannot be any question about that on this record. What Mr. Hillman intended about it, or meant about it, I do not know. But I simply wanted to develop for my own personal satisfaction just exactly what this situation is. I do not think that counsel on either side are subject to any criticism on the matter one way or the other. But I do not quite like the matter being put up to me in that way by Mr. Hillman.

MR. HOLT: In speaking of Mr. Hillman's knowledge of Mr. Anderson's testimony, the Master must bear in mind that we had Mr. Hillman at work in the various offices all the time that anybody else was on the witness stand. I do not think he heard Mr. Anderson's testimony at all. We had to send for him every time we wanted to use him, because he was pressed for time, and out of the room when other people were testifying in the room. Well, we desire to ask no further questions.

THE MASTER: That is on this schedule, you mean?

MR. HOLT: Yes.

MR. HARRISON: We have no questions to ask.

THE MASTER: I thought you had another schedule, the Northwestern Bank. What is the understanding now about this admission that Judge Holt suggested as to the payment in full by the capital stock? This is what you said, at page 2967 of the transcript:

"MR. HOLT: My suggestion to this, it is stipulated by and between the parties to this record that all of the securities mentioned in the Schedules A, B, C, D, E, F, G and H were paid for by Virginia at par in cash prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, except as may affirmatively otherwise appear in this record. That will cover the whole thing."

Is that agreeable?

MR. HARRISON? Yes.

THE MASTER: You do not want that extract put in then?

MR. LILLY: No.

MR. HOLT: We now offer, your Honor, a letter dated at Jeffersonville, October 17th, 1861, by John A. Kelly, cashier, to His Excellency, John Letcher, Governor of Virginia, together with the statement enclosed.

THE MASTER: Is that a report made on oath?

MR. LILLY: Yes.

MR. HOLT: It is a letter, and I am going to follow it with the report. This is a letter dated Jeffersonville, October 17th, 1861, by John A. Kelly, cashier, addressed to His Excellency, John Letcher, Governor of Virginia, found on page 555 of a volume marked Documents, 1861-1862, Part 2, and likewise the accompanying report transmitted with that letter of the condition of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia, found at pages 556 and 557 of the same volume. Also the affidavit attached to said report, and found upon page 558 of said volume.

MR. HOLT: We likewise offer and ask to have incorporated in the record the report of Chester D. Hubbard, dated at Wheeling, West Virginia, February 23, 1871, certified by J. S. Darst, auditor, under his hand and official seal, on the 26th day of February, 1910, and found at pages 355 to 358 inclusive of the Lilly compilation.

The report was admitted in evidence and is considered as Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 8.

Defendant's Supplemental Exhibit No. 8 is as follows:

REPORT OF HONORABLE CHESTER D. HUBBARD

Wheeling, West Virginia, Feb. 23, 1871.

Hon. W. E. Stevenson, President.

Dear Sir: In accordance with the instructions of the Board of the School Fund in their action of the 15th, I have ascertained and herewith transmit a statement of the stock held by the state in the National Bank of West Virginia at Wheeling, the First National Bank of Wellsburg, and the Parkersburg National Bank, and the different funds to which said stock is credited.

I also proceeded to Wellsburg and exchanged as directed the stock of the Internal Improvement Fund in the First National Bank of Wellsburg, 163 shares, for United States 5-20 coupon bonds (the Bank had no registered bonds) receiving therefor sixteen bonds of $1,000 each and three bonds of $100 each lettered and numbered as follows: $1000 K 134,401, 134,403, 134,404, 134,405, 134,406, 134,407, 134,413, 134,414, 163, 792, G. 142,990, 142,991, 142,981, 142,982, 142,983, 142,-984, 142,985. $100 each I. 177,876, C. 102,938, D. 236,517. These bonds carry the coupons of July 1, 1871, and were issued July 1, 1867, under the act of 1865.

I have sealed the bonds in an envelope writing my name across the seal and labelling them as belonging to the School Fund of West Virginia, and have deposited them as a special deposit in the First National Bank of Wheeling. The bonds can be exchanged for registered bonds by sending them to Washington. I will attend to it if you desire it to make any other disposition of the bonds you may direct.

The Bank declined to exchange for the stock held in the name of the state, believing that they could not safely do so under section 7, article 8, of the Constitution, besides I was not certain that my authority extended to such an exchange. If I am to make any other disposition of the bonds, please advise me at your earliest convenience.

The stock exchanged at Wellsburg will modify the bond statement to that extent. Very respectfully,

C. D. HUBBARD.

I, J. S. Darst, Auditor of the State of West Virginia, and ex officio Secretary of the Board of the School Fund of said State, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy from the record of the minutes of the proceedings of said Board, pages 37 to 41 of Record Book No. 1 of said Board.

Given under my hand and official seal, this 26th day of February, 1910.

J. S. DARST,
Auditor.

THE MASTER: Have you any examination in relation to that, Mr. Harrison?

MR. HARRISON: No, sir.

THE MASTER: I want to ask Mr. Hillman a question about an item here on page 113. Attention ought to be called to the significance of this exhibit, because this purports to be an official, sworn report, stating the amount of the stock in this Jeffersonville Branch. If there is anything that should go into the record that counsel for Virginia think impeaches that, of course this is the time to do it. But this seems to be of the same general official character as the other ofcial reports are, as I understand it. Am I right about that?

MR. LILLY: Yes, and we never knew that was alive until about a week ago.

THE MASTER: Well, that undoubtedly comes from an official publication of the State of Virginia.

MR. LILLY: Yes, sir.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN, recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

By The Master:

Q. Mr. Hillman, won't you take the new print, please, on page 1193, and look at the item, interest on bonds and notes, under the column of 1860, $39,067.43, and followed out under 1861, $14,356.45, under 1862, $11,449.25, under 1863, $13,-981.30. What I wanted to inquire is whether you are familiar enough with the statement to be able to state whether those are bonds and notes other than bonds and notes held by the State; and if not, can you ascertain that?

A. I am not familiar enough to do it offhand, but I think I can find out.

ARTHUR G. POTTER, recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

By The Master:

Q. Do you know about that, Mr. Potter, interest on bonds and notes, $39,067.42, in the column of 1860? Does that represent bonds and notes, other than bonds and notes held by the State, or is it to be included with the aggregate of the bonds and notes held by the State?

A. I cannot tell you offhand.

Q. Won't you and Mr. Hillman look that over between yourselves and see if you can find anything to show that, for each of those years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would like to have you and Mr. Hillman look that over and report to me what the fact is, if you can find out.

A. All right, sir.

THE MASTER: You have no further examination in relation to this last exhibit, Mr. Holt?

MR. HOLT: No, sir.

MR. HARRISON: Mr. Littlefield, we have no cross-examination in regard to the exhibit put in in relation to the Jeffersonville Branch.

THE MASTER: Are you through with Mr. Hillman on the direct-examination?

MR. LILLY: There may be one other schedule that we may want to offer.

THE MASTER: What is the other schedule, Mr. Lilly?

MR. LILLY: It is about the banks, about the bad and doubtful debts. I do not know whether they have that worked up or not; but I think so.

THE MASTER: That is an additional schedule tending to answer the suggestion that there were bad and doubtful debts that ought to be deducted from the assets, on the ground that they appeared afterwards to be bad in whole or in part, is that it?

MR. LILLY: Yes, sir, paid or charged off.

THE MASTER: Have we got anything else? Let us see how far along we are. Is there anything else that either side wants to put in? Do you want to put in anything in relation to this Jeffersonville Branch?

MR. HARRISON: No, sir. I think the exhibit speaks for itself.

MR. ANDERSON: The exhibit does not show how much the State owned.

THE MASTER: It shows $164,000, capital of the Jeffersonville Branch.

MR. ANDERSON: Virginia did not own it.

THE MASTER: This schedule shows—in the first place we start out with the Northwestern Bank all owned by Virginia. Now the question is—just have this right in mind, so we won't have any misunderstanding about it—now the question is how much of that Northwestern Bank should be charged to the State of West Virginia. In the original record the counsel for West Virginia conceded that the whole of it should be charged. Now, then, since that time it has been discovered that there was a branch at Jeffersonville, which is in the territory of Virginia, and West Virginia contends that whatever was properly attributable to that Branch in Virginia, of course, was not taken by West Virginia, and that they ought not to be charged with it. Now they put in an official report which shows that the amount of the stock that was represented by the Jeffersonville Bank was $164,000. And if that stands unimpeached, that comes pretty near showing that that is the amount of the capital stock that should be deducted from the total stock of the Northwestern Bank. Now that is the way the record stands as a matter of proof.

MR. HARRISON: From the total stock?

THE MASTER: In other words, instead of charging the total capitalization of the Northwestern Bank to West Virginia, the amount, less the stock that appears by this exhibit to have been in the Bank in Virginia, should be deducted. Do I make that clear?

MR. LILLY: Yes.

MR. ANDERSON: I would like to call your attention to the Defendant's Exhibit at pages 160 and 161, showing the number of shares.

THE MASTER: But since then they have produced this original record.

MR. ANDERSON: Your Honor is mistaken in supposing that the State owned all the stock in that bank.

THE MASTER: You misunderstood me; I did not mean at all that the State of Virginia held the whole capital; but the State of Virginia held a certain number of shares, which I valued before at $427,000; and that was its interest.

MR. ANDERSON: I misunderstood you. There is nothing to show that they owned all the stock in this bank.

THE MASTER: Your point was that here was a total capital, and the State owned of that capital a certain sum. The question is how much of that $164,000 was owned by the State.

MR. HOLT: That is ascertainable from another exhibit. It shows the number of shares upon which Virginia was at that time receiving dividends.

MR. ANDERSON: That is the Grazier's Bank, is it not?

MR. HOLT: It is the same thing. That shows the difference between $164,000 and $146,000 was privately owned.

THE MASTER: Up to today we have not had any definite information as to what the capital stock of that Grazier's Bank was. It is $164,000. Now the question is how much of that $164,000 did the State of Virginia own?

MR. HARRISON: It is on that single point that I would like to have an opportunity to confer with Mr. Potter before we close.

THE MASTER: Yes. Now West Virginia claims that these entries that they have put in in part, that is put the substance of in, show that Virginia, in 1860 and 1861 or 1862, or somewhere along there, was receiving dividends from the Grazier's Bank on $146,000. The general exhibit is in, but the exact transcript of the books is to be put in. Mr. Hillman's idea is that that transcript will show practically in terms that they were receiving dividends on that amount of stock. So that the way this case stands now is, $164,000 par, total stock of the Branch, and evidenced by the receipt of dividends, $146,000 owned by the State of Virginia.

MR. ANDERSON: That would assume that the Grazier Bank took over the stock and had no more stock. I think your Honor will find that the stock was largely increased.

MR. HOLT: Turn to page 174 and you will see they are paying dividends on a certain number of shares in the Jeffersonville Branch and on a certain number of shares in the Grazier's Bank.

MR. HARRISON: If you will get your exhibits in I will ask Mr. Potter a question about it.

THE MASTER: Here would be the situation. Here is $164,000 of capital, apparently established by this last exhibit. Now if the original entries, when they come in here, show that Virginia was receiving from this Grazier's Bank, which under these acts was the successor of the branch of the Northwestern, dividends on $146,000 capital, why, it raises a very strong inference that she was the owner at that time of $146,000 of the capital stock. Their exhibit here shows that, but Mr. Hillman thinks that the entries themselves go farther and more specifically state that fact. Well, if the books of Virginia show a receipt of dividends on a certain amount of capitalization, and there is not anything else in this case, I should have to come pretty near holding that that was their holding in the bank.

MR. ANDERSON: It would certainly be very persuasive evidence of that fact.

THE MASTER: It is open to both of you to put in all the facts you can get. I have been trying to get the facts in relation to this particular branch ever since the last hearing, and West Virginia has succeeded in producing this of course important piece of evidence.

MR. HOLT: Who has been charged now with the duty of showing what that record shows?

THE MASTER: I will put it this way. I shall hold on this exhibit that the capital stock of the Grazier's Bank was $164,000. And if, when these entries come here, they show that the State of Virginia, by its own books, was receiving dividends on $146,000 of that capital and there is not anything else in this case, I shall hold on that showing that the State of Virginia was the owner of $146,000 of the capital stock of that bank, and that West Virginia is to have that deducted from the total capitalization of the Northwestern Bank. If the case stops there, that is what I shall hold.

MR. LILLY: That would be all right so far, but it makes West Virginia pay for $18,000 that she never got. In other words, Virginia by her act of legislation took $164,000 of the capital stock, whether she owned it or not, and that $164,000 was deducted from the $374,000, and the stockholders in West Virginia did not lose any. But West Virginia got the rest that Virginia had. And that whole $164,000 was charged off from West Virginia's stock, leaving her $210,000. Virginia not only got her $146,000, but by her act of legislation cut all of that stock off.

THE MASTER: Does that necessarily follow? I want to get your idea about it. If Virginia held the whole of the stock of the Northwestern Bank, that all might be true; but she did not.

MR. ANDERSON: A lot of people in Tazewell held it.

THE MASTER: Virginia did not hold the whole stock. Now what was done in the other case, West Virginia was charged with all the stock that Virginia held in the Northwestern Bank, but we did not charge her with the whole capital stock of the Northwestern Bank, because there were other stockholders.

MR. LILLY: Over 8,000 shares.

THE MASTER: Now, the Tazewell Branch, when that came to be organized, it had $164,000 of capital, but it does not follow from that that Virginia had the whole of that, because there were other stockholders.

MR. LILLY: Suppose she destroyed it. The stockholders in the Northwestern Bank of West Virginia did not lose any, but Virginia lost the $164,000—that is, West Virginia did. Out of the $374,000 there was $164,000 cut off.

THE MASTER: Where does that appear?

MR. LILLY: Well, that will appear from the record right here, I think.

THE MASTER: Let us look that up so I can get it in my mind right now.

MR. LILLY: Suppose West Virginia only owned $10,000 in the Jeffersonville Branch, if she had cut off $164,000 and West Virginia lost that——

THE MASTER: Suppose the total capital was $100,000, and Virginia held $75,000, and when they come to go off West Virginia took $70,000 with her and left $5,000, or took $60,000 and left $15,000, and then the Tazewell Branch represented—no matter how much—but if Virginia's part was represented in the Tazewell Branch, how was West Virginia harmed, assuming that she got the proportion of the stock that Virginia held in the Northwestern Bank?

MR. LILLY: Suppose we use the figures in the record. $374,000 was Virginia's stock in the Northwestern Bank. There was $164,000, by Act of 1862, cut off into the Grazier's Bank from the Jeffersonville Branch.

THE MASTER: That does not come out of the $374,000.

MR. LILLY: Follow me just a minute.

THE MASTER: I want to get your point.

MR. LILLY: Well, when West Virginia came to get her part from Virginia, the residue, there was deducted out of Virginia's part the whole $164,000, leaving West Virginia the $210,000.

MR. ANDERSON: Who did that? Virginia was powerless out there.

MR. LILLY: But she was not powerless when she cut off.

THE MASTER: Look up the record and see what it says.

MR. LILLY: West Virginia not only lost the stock that Virginia had, but the stock that the private people had in the Grazier's Bank. It was deducted out of the $374,000. Of course it is only a small item, about $18,000.

THE MASTER: Let us look at the record and see what it says.

MR. LILLY: You see Virginia cut off $164,000, and she had $374,000, and West Virginia got the residue. And she did not get but $210,000, because Virginia had cut the $164,000 off. The private stockholders did not happen to be in West Virginia, but West Virginia lost it.

MR. ANDERSON: What became of the private stockholders in West Virginia?

MR. LILLY: That is not material.

THE MASTER: Let us have Mr. Lilly point out in the record just exactly what he thinks shows this.

MR. LILLY: The bank charged the Commonwealth of Virginia with all the stock of the Jeffersonville, on the plea that the State had taken possession of that bank, $164,200; and this $164,200 came out of the $374,000, notwithstanding the fact that part of that may have been private stock.

THE MASTER: What is there in Hubbard's letter that shows that?

MR. LILLY: You add here what we get, and here what we get.

THE MASTER: Here is your total here.

MR. LILLY: West Virginia was charged not only with what Virginia had in the Grazier's Bank, but with what the private people had, because the Northwestern Bank had been depleted $164,000; and when they settled with the stockholders, Virginia having done it, her stock suffered and not the stock of the private owners.

THE MASTER: You mean West Virgina suffered that.

MR. LILLY: Yes, West Virginia suffered that.

MR. ANDERSON: It was not done by Virginia.

MR. LILLY: Virginia cut off the $164,000.

MR. ANDERSON: She had that much stock.

MR. LILLY: No, she had $146,000.

THE MASTER: Have we got anything here that shows just exactly how much capital West Virginia received?

MR. LILLY: This report shows it there. There is $32,000 in one fund, and $50,000 in another; that makes $82,600, and that makes $374,400; then you deduct $164,200, and that leaves $210,200, that our pleadings claim.

THE MASTER: Why can't Mr. Potter and Mr. Hillman sit down and cipher this out, with the suggestions of Mr. Lilly, and see what this shows the way they figure it out as to the number of shares of stock that West Virginia had. It is a matter of very little consequence of course what was left in Virginia's hands, if we ascertain in the first instance what West Virginia received. One way of ascertaining of course what West Virginia received is to find out what the total capital held by Virginia was, and then deduct from that the amount retained by Virginia. But that might not be the only way. They might be able to ascertain independently of that computation. I would like to have Mr. Potter and Mr. Hillman look that over and see if they can cipher that out. You get my point, don't you?

MR. LILLY: Yes, sir.

MR. HARRISON: Mr. Lilly's point is that the whole capital stock, irrespective of whether the State of Virginia owned all of it or not, of the Jeffersonville Branch, should be deducted from the portion of the stock which the State of West Virginia owned in the Northwestern Bank. You cannot deduct somebody else's stock from what somebody else owned, and that is not sound.

MR. LILLY: The $164,000 of the Northwestern Bank stock had been reduced that much. When the loss had to be sustained, it was not the private stockholders in West Virginia that sustained it, but West Virginia had to sustain it.

THE MASTER: Can we get at this in another way? Are there exhibits enough in this case that show the assets of the Northwestern Bank in 1861 or 1862 or 1863, or whatever it may be, and then can we take this exhibit and deduct these assets from those assets? Of course, the real value of the stock is predicated upon the assets, and if we can ascertain how many assets West Virginia had——

MR. LILLY: We cannot do that, we could not get it after the other bank was formed. The Grazier's Bank is worth about 20 cents and the Northwestern Bank was worth $1.11. There is $33 surplus and profits in the Grazier's Bank, that is from this report that we filed this morning.

THE MASTER: What is the latest schedule on the Northwestern Bank?

MR. LILLY: That is 1861.

MR. ANDERSON: That was before the Grazier's Bank was formed. That was chartered during the War and was a Confederate institution.

MR. HARRISON: I would like to have Mr. Potter make a statement.

THE MASTER: We will suspend on this, and if they have any further statement from Mr. Hillman, they may put it in, in answer to this statement of Mr. Potter.

MR. LILLY: At page 984 of the record you will find the Statute incorporating the Grazier's Bank.

THE MASTER: Have we not got a schedule in here showing the condition of the Northwestern Bank?

MR. LILLY: Yes, in 1861.

THE MASTER: Let me look at that, please. Why cannot we do this—here are the assets as of January 1, 1861, and here is the first of October, 1861, in the exhibit put in this morning—why can't they take these assets and get the proportion of the assets that the Jeffersonville Branch held, and then apportion the stock on that basis?

MR. LILLY: Well, you might do that. Here are the two features I thought, the profit and loss——

THE MASTER: Let us see if this is not a fair proposition. Here, on January 1st, 1861, are the assets of the Northwestern Bank, and on October 1st, 1861, are the assets of that Branch. Now Virginia held a certain percentage of the capital stock of the whole Bank. Deduct the amount of the assets of the Jeffersonville Branch from the total assets, and then take the percentage that Virginia held, why would not that reach reasonably an approximation of the value of the amount taken by West Virginia? Do you get my point?

MR. LILLY: Yes.

THE MASTER: Why not let the two accountants work it out on that basis?

MR. LILLY: That might do it; only it seems the amount of the stock and the book value——

THE MASTER: Of course Virginia only held about half of this stock, a little less than half; if you sliced the branches off, she would have half of the Jeffersonville Branch, and West Virginia would have the other half.

MR. LILLY: But each branch had capital stock.

THE MASTER: But suppose they did. Here is the whole bank, that includes all the branches; there is one branch in Virginia; now take the assets of the Virginia branch and deduct them from the total assets, and then the percentage that Virginia held in the total assets would be the percentage that West Virginia took of the remaining assets. Why is not that as near as we can reach it?

MR. LILLY: That possibly would be all right.

THE MASTER: Well, let us see if the two accountants cannot work it out on that basis. Now, Judge, the sugestion is this; we have some factors that are evidently fixed, for instance the total capital in the Grazier's Bank, and then we have got the percentage that Virginia held in the Northwestern Bank; now deduct the assets of the Jeffersonville Branch from the total assets of the Northwestern Bank, and then take the percentage that Virginia held in the total bank, and take that out of that balance, for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the assets that West Virginia held in the Northwestern Bank. I do not know how that would work out.

MR. ANDERSON: After we saw it stated we could understand it.

THE MASTER: Suppose we have the accountants work that out and see what the result is.

MR. HOLT: I had worked that all out to my satisfaction the other night, but I cannot seem to get anybody to agree with me.

THE MASTER: I have not made up my mind about it at all.

MR. LILLY: I agree with the Judge about it, only as to $18,000. We agree that Virginia got $146,000, because she owned that much and got dividends on it.

THE MASTER: It seems to me that this would be a fact in connection with the case. Let us assume, for the purpose of illustration, that Virginia held one-half of the stock—it was not quite one-half, but very nearly; well, if she held one-half of that stock, she held one-half of the stock wherever it was located. If the Jeffersonville Branch had $164,000 capital, why she would hold one-half there and she would hold one-half everywhere. She would be entitled to one-half of the assets, wherever they were located. Now deduct the assets of the Jeffersonville Branch from the total assets. That leaves the branches in West Virginia; and Virginia's interest in those branches would be one-half. And that would be, on that basis, the sum with which West Virginia would be charged.

MR. LILLY: That would do all right in theory, except for the fact that we show here conclusively that Virginia was getting dividends on $146,000 in the Jeffersonville Branch.

MR. ANDERSON: No, in the Grazier Bank, not the Jeffersonville Branch.

MR. LILLY: I am speaking about the record.

MR. ANDERSON: The record does not show.

THE MASTER: About all the record shows is that here was an Act of the Legislature practically changing the name of the Jeffersonville Branch to the Grazier Bank. The presumption is that they took it just as they found it.

MR. ANDERSON: That Act simply severed the connection between the branch bank at Jeffersonville and the parent bank, and transferred to the ownership of the Jeffersonville Branch all the stock it held.

THE MASTER: It if held the assets it held corresponding capital stock. You cannot get any more than the value of the assets of course. West Virginia ought to be charged with her share of the value of these assets in the Northwestern Bank, no matter what the capital stock was; whatever that value fairly was, of course West Virginia ought to be charged with it. Is there any better way of getting at it than by deducting the assets of one from the other?

MR. LILLY: Yes.

MR. ANDERSON: There is evidence here that Virginia had $50,000 of stock in the Jeffersonville Branch. In addition to that she had her holding in the Northwestern Bank, in the parent company, probably. I do not know, but Mr. Potter informs me that there is a certificate down there, which he has seen, for $50,000 of stock held in the Literary Fund.

THE MASTER: Of course their answer to that is that Virginia was receiving dividends on so much stock in that Grazier's Bank.

MR. ANDERSON: She would be entitled, in addition, to dividends on $50,000, and she would be entitled to her share of the dividends in the parent bank.

THE MASTER: That leaves her responsibility just the same.

MR. ANDERSON: I know, but I just want to get at the truth about it.

THE MASTER: Suppose we let the accountants figure up the assets and see what it comes to, and then take that up in the argument. Is Mr. Hillman ready with the additional material in relation to the doubtful and bad debts of the banks, tending to show—what I suggested the other day was that the doubtful and bad debts I should deduct from the assets, and the suggestion was that they could show by the records what the facts were.

MR. HOLT: In other words, there have been some discoveries made since they were at Richmond. I did not know whether it was that, or what you asked Mr. Potter and Mr. Hillman to look up, those interest items on bonds and notes. As I understand they do not want to cross-examine Mr. Hillman on anything that has occurred heretofore, but if we put him on now with respect to these bad and doubtful debts they may want to cross-examine him.

THE MASTER: If you can, I think you had better finish up with that. Does Mr. Leeds have to go?

MR. HOLT: No, sir.

THE MASTER: Because Mr. Leeds might perhaps work out some of these computations with Mr. Potter. I would like to have them figure out this matter between these two banks and see how it works out. Now let us make progress with Mr. Hillman.

CONWAY W. HILLMAN, recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

Direct examination By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, since you made your original bank schedules that are now in the printed record, Volume 2, the exhibits, have you made a further examination of the condition of the banks therein described, upon the subject of bad and doubtful debts?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where do you find any additional record evidence that you did not have before?

A. Document No. 14, published by the State of Virginia in January, 1860, on page 22, whereon it is shown that the sum total——

Q. I will ask you about the details of it in a moment. What is the first bank mentioned there that involves the subject of bad or doubtful debts?

A. The Farmer's Bank of Virginia.

Q. What year did that relate to ?

A. This relates to the year ending January 1st, 1860.

Q. What amount of bad or doubtful debts, if any at all, was embraced in the report of the bank's assets of that year?

A. $70,619.66.

Q. Were they doubtful or were they bad?

A. They were marked as bad debts.

By the Master:

Q. What is the amount you get?

A. $70,619.66, one year prior to the date we have.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Do you find any note taken in the assets of the bank for the year 1861?

A. No, sir, the record is silent on those debts in 1861. But in 1860 they are included in the total assets of the bank.

By the Master:

Q. What do you mean by that, in the trial balance?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under what heading?

A. Under debt outstanding.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Can you tell from the record whether or not they were included in its assets for the year 1861?

A. I should say they were included in its assets for the year 1861.

MR. HARRISON: You were asked if you could tell from the record. He states that he concludes that they were. Is he stating that as a matter of inference?

MR. HOLT: He is stating it as a matter of inference, as I understand it.

Q. Why would you say, Mr. Hillman, that they are embraced in the bank's assets for the year 1861?

A. For the reason that they were embraced in the bank's assets in 1860, and that the total of 1860, which is compared with the same total in 1861, fits in with the general trial balance of the bank, and that therefore, since the debts are mentioned as being bad in both cases, that if they were treated in one way in 1860 they would be treated in the same way in 1861; it is inferential.

Q. That is a mere inference then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The record does not show that to be the fact, beyond what you have said?

A. No, sir.

Q. Not what effect, if any, will the fact that that $70,000 was embraced in the bank's assets have upon your schedule of book values of that bank's stock?

THE MASTER: Do you have a schedule for 1860?

THE WITNESS: No, sir.

MR. HOLT: He is treating it now as being in for 1861, inferentially he says, because he found that they were there in 1860.

THE WITNESS: It would reduce the assets of the Farmer's Bank of Virginia in 1861, and which we have in our Exhibit No. 5, on page 48——

Q. You have stated generally that it would reduce the assets of the bank. That is a sufficient answer to that question. Now the next one I will ask you is this; how will it affect, to what extent will it affect the book value of that bank's stock? Have you made that calculation?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you please make it right away?

A. I will do so.

THE MASTER: Why don't you let him put nis details in, and then have his computations go in afterwards, instead of taking time for him to do it now?

MR. HOLT: The reason he examined the assets and liabilities before was for the purpose of ascertaining the book value of the stock. Now he finds a difference in his assets, and I want to know to what extent it will affect the book value.

THE MASTER: How much it will reduce the percentage?

MR. HOLT: Yes, how much it will reduce the percentage. And if he can give me that in brief, it will change his schedule according to the newly discovered facts. In other words I thought I could complete each bank as I went along, right away.

THE WITNESS: It will reduce the book value of the stock of the Farmers' Bank of Virginia to 112.83.

By the Master:

Q. As against what?

A. As against 115.07. After reducing it further by the dividend paid on January 1st, of 3½ per cent., it will leave the net value 109.33, instead of 111.57.

MR. HOLT: What do you find about bad or doubtful debts in the assets of the Bank of Virginia for the year 1861?

THE MASTER: He did not give the doubtful debts.

MR. HOLT: Doubtful debts are all in the assets; we would not throw them away.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Do you find, in other words, any bad debts included in the assets of the Bank of Virginia for the year 1861?

A. Yes, sir, $6,412.

Q. To what extent, if any, would that affect the book value of that Bank's stock? I do not want you to stop now to make the calculation.

A. It would affect it by——

Q. The Master's idea is that you will calculate the new book value and insert it in your answer, on that basis.

A. All right, sir.

Q. Now we will come to the next bank. What is it?

A. There are no further banks which have bad debts listed on January 1st, 1861.

Q. What about the Exchange Bank?

A. The Exchange Bank of Virginia had no bad debts listed on January 1st, 1861. On April 1st, 1861, they had listed $8,224 bad debts; July 1st, 1861, they had no bad debts, and on October 1st, 1861, they had no bad debts. On January 1st, 1861, as I have said, there were no bad debts listed.

Q. I want you to give each bank, though, if I can get the names of them.

A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. I have asked you now about the Farmer's Bank of Virginia, the Bank of Virginia and the Exchange Bank, have I not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What about the Fairmount Bank?

A. The Fairmount Bank had no bad debts listed.

Q. For the year 1861?

A. For the year January 1st, 1861.

Q. What about the Northwestern Bank?

A. It had no bad debts listed.

Q. Is that all of them?

A. There is the Bank of the Valley.

Q. What about the Bank of the Valley?

A. It had no bad debts listed.

Q. Then, as I understand you, Mr. Hillman, your further examination shows that the Farmers' Bank of Virginia and the Bank of Virginia, both had the bad debts you have mentioned embraced in their assets during the year 1861, but that none of the other four banks named had any bad debts listed for that year in their assets?

A. That is correct, yes, sir.

Q. And you will calculate the new book value of the stock of the Farmers' Bank of Virginia and of the Bank of Virginia, resulting from these bad debts being embraced in the assets, and insert it in your answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you to say about bad debts in the assets of those banks, if you know, for the year 1863?

A. There is no record in that year of the banks, that I have been able to find, so that I could say nothing upon it.

MR. HOLT: You gentlemen may cross-examine him.

THE MASTER: I will ask him to put in this list he has of the bad and doubtful debts of these three banks, that he has right here.

By the Master:

Q. Mr. Hillman, will you please put into the record the list of bad and doubtful debts that you have, during 1860 and 1861, of the Farmers' Bank of Virginia, the Bank of Virginia and the Exchange Bank?

A. Yes, sir the statement is as follows:

BANK OF VIRGINIA.

		Bad Debts	Doubtful Debts
Page 10, Document 14,	Jan. 1, 1860	12,400	49,802.58
" 400, " "	July 1, 1860	None shown	37,535.82
" 562, " "	Oct. 1, 1860	6,412.00	36,485.82

" 524, " "	Oct. 1, 1861	None	22,512.69

The above bad debts will reduce the book value of the Bank of Virginia from $78.75 to $78.61, and after deducting the dividend of 3½% on the $70 per share, will reduce the net book value to $76.16 per share.

The above bad debts will reduce the book value of the Farmers' Bank of Virginia from 115.07 to 112.83, and after deducting 3½% dividend from the above values we have net value 109.33.

Cross examination By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Does not the tabular statement, following the balance sheet of the Farmers' Bank of Virginia, page 400 of the exhibits, for the year 1861, show bad debts?

A. Yes, sir, it does.

Q. To what amount?

A. $70,773.96.

Q. Well then, it is not a matter of conjecture or inference at all as to the bad debts for the year 1861, as your answer on your examination in chief would indicate?

A. You misunderstand my answer, Mr. Harrison. I do not say there were no bad debts. The answer was that the inference was if the bad debts had been included in the assets in 1860, that they were included in the assets in 1861; not that they did not exist.

Q. Then it is a positive fact, as shown by the record, that the bad debts did exist for the year 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the amount just stated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That amount is a little larger than the statement you gave for 1860, bad debts, is it not?

A. Yes, sir, but not than the amount which I used in my calculation which was asked for.

Q. Now does not the same tabular statement of the Farmers' Bank that you are now referring to show doubtful debts, and if so in what amount?

A. $45,437.34.

Q. Now turn to page 404 of the exhibits, where you will find the tabular statement of the Bank of Virginia for the year 1861, which follows the balance sheet of that Bank. You have testified that the bad debts for 1861 were $6,412, which is the amount shown on the tabular statement. Were you referring to that statement when you testified, or did you get that amount from somewhere else?

A. I got that amount from somewhere else, probably the same source from which this exhibit was derived.

By the Master:

Q. Well, you got it from Document No. 17?

A. No, sir, Document No. 14.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. What doubtful debts of the Bank of Virginia are shown on the same statement?

A. $43,973.57.

Q. Now turn to page 410 of the exhibits, the tabular statement of the Exchange Bank of Virginia for the year 1861. Does not that show doubtful debts, and if so in what amount?

A. $4,800, doubtful debts.

By the Master:

Q. Your detail statement agrees with that, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Hillman, do the papers or sheets just handed to the stenographer show these details?

A. Yes, sir, they do; they tally with that.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now turn to pages 406 and 407 of the exhibits, which contain the condition of the Bank of the Valley, including its franchise, for January, 1861. Does not that statement show, in the foot note, that there was a probable loss of $30,000, that the Bank was liable to sustain by reason of the transactions of its cashier, and also $13,522.12?

A. It shows that the cashier—excuse me, no, sir, I think not. It shows that the cashier—that there was a shortage, due to the cashier, or the teller rather, which had been reduced to $13,000, and which balance it was hoped would be finally settled the same way; and on the other side it says, "In addition to the amount of ascertained liabilities as stated above, it is proper to add, that there may probably be due to the mother bank, to banks and depositors, about $30,000."

Q. For what?

A. "Due to omissions on the part of the late teller to enter credits for remittances and deposits—the precise amount not yet accurately ascertained. No ultimate loss, however, to the Bank or his securities is apprehended."

Q. So then that statement does show, as I stated in my question, a possibilitiy of the loss of those two amounts?

A. Yes, sir, a possibility of loss.

MR. HARRISON: That is all I think I want to ask Mr. Hillman.

THE MASTER: Does that include everything from Mr. Hillman?

MR. HOLT: I think that includes all the bad debts.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Is there anything in these records anywhere, Mr. Hillman, that you have been able to discover, that shows the reduction of the amount of these bad debts that you have described, by collection or otherwise?

A. Yes, sir, they show that bad debts were from time to time charged off or paid, ceased to be bad, by the fact of variations in the amount being less at subsequent dates than they were at prior dates. With reference to the doubtful debts, these details that I have given will show that that account also varies, being sometimes more and sometimes less in the doubtful debts, showing that some of these debts were paid from time to time, and were not a total loss.

By the Master:

Q. These details are all reflected accurately in the details that you have given?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. The reduction that you speak of in the bad or doubtful debts would indicate that they might have been charged off as well as collected, would it not, Mr. Hillman?

A. Yes, sir, that is a possibility.

MR. ANDERSON: Is there any evidence that they were collected?

MR. HARRISON: None at all except the fact that they varied in amount sometimes. That is all I care to ask.

THE MASTER: Is there anything further now from Mr. Hillman, except some computations he may make? And if he cannot stop to make them, Mr. Leeds can make them afterwards.

MR. HOLT: Is is expected that someone will get a transcript of the record on the item of dividends paid upon stock owned in the Grazier's Bank by Virginia.

THE MASTER: Mr. Page has agreed to have that sent to me. It has not arrived yet.

MR. LILLY: We would like to have this matter closed sometime, without any futher evidence.

THE MASTER: I think I have been reasonably liberal about keeping the matter open, and I do not think that we ought to shut down here now, and if I think I want anything more I will indicate what it is, but I think we ought to have a definite understanding now as to whether the matter is not closed; and if it is not closed, as to what items it is now held open for. That is what you want, is it not, Mr. Lilly?

MR. LILLY: Yes, we either want it closed, or else that we are going ahead, and if we are going ahead we want to get to work and go over it again.

THE MASTER: If we are through with Mr. Hillman, that leaves him where he is free to go if he wants to.

MR. HARRISON: That is satisfactory, as far as I am concerned.

THE MASTER: I was just getting back to this Northwestern Bank scheme. Here is $168,000, par value, and here is $164,000, par value, in the Grazier Bank. That is just about one-fifth. I find the aggregate assets of the Northwestern Bank in 1861, according to these schedules here, were $2,110,243.41, and the aggregate assets of the Bank here, according to this table you put in this morning, $414,000; that is just about one-fifth. So apparently they sliced off one-fifth of the stock and one-fifth of the assets, relatively speaking. The question is whether, under those circumstances, we do not get an equitable result if we take one-half of the four-fifths as chargeable to West Virginia.

MR. LILLY: It would be absolutely inequitable in my opinion. When the record shows that Virginia had $146,000 in the Grazier's Bank, why would you imagine or presume or infer that she only had one-half or one-fifth or any other amount? If you ignore the evidence on that feature, then of course you can take any percentage as a basis.

THE MASTER: Well, we have to assume of course that there was no change in the proportion that the State of Virginia held during the process of transferring the Jeffersonville Branch to the Grazier's——

MR. LILLY: That would be justified.

THE MASTER: And that this scheme of the loyal gentlemen did not interfere with the proportion. I do not see yet what that legislation was based on.

MR. LILLY: You will bear in mind that Virginia did not own so much in the Northwestern Bank. It is true that the aggregate was so much, but each branch bank had so much stock. And she might have so much stock in a branch bank in these different funds.

THE MASTER: There is nothing in the record to show that, except in your exhibits here.

MR. LILLY: Is not that sufficient? I think we have reasonably conclusive evidence to the contrary. You cannot imagine that Virginia only owned one-half in the Grazier's Bank, when she was getting dividends on $146,000 out of $164,000. Now, if she did not own it how did she get the dividends? If she did own it West Virginia ought not to be charged with it. West Virginia only got $210,000, by the report made there in 1871.

THE MASTER: Up to date I have not looked at it carefully enough to understand it fully. I do not see how that shows it.

MR. LILLY: I will refer to that if I argue the matter before your Honor.

THE MASTER: Of course your letter was pretty general, and this Hubbard report was not in the record at the time. I wish you would make a careful analysis of this so I will be able to pick it out.

"6. As soon as may be after the expiration of the said three months from the passage of this act, the governor of the state shall cause certificates of the stock held by the state in the said Northwestern Bank of Virginia, for an amount equal to the balance of the capital stock of said branch, not exchanged under the previous section, to be in like manner returned and assigned to said Grazier's Bank of Virginia, for a like number of shares of the stock thereof."

That indicates what Virginia was to receive. She was to have all the stock—Virginia was to have all the stock that was not taken up by private stockholders. The previous section provides:

"5. At any time within three months from the passage of this act, any loyal holder of stock in the Northwestern Bank of Virginia, whose stock in said bank was purchased through the said branch, or whose dividends have usually heretofore been credited to him at said branch, may return and assign to said Grazier's Bank of Virginia such stock, and demand and receive in lieu thereof a certificate for a like number of shares of stock in the said Grazier's Bank of Virginia."

Then the next section provides that the State shall have all of the stock not sold or transferred. So she may have had more stock in the Grazier's Bank than she had in the other bank.

THE MASTER: That is, the other stockholders may have been excluded by that limitation of three months. That is sort of a legislative transfer of the stock that should not be taken up in that way by the State of Virginia.

MR. HOGG: What is the date of that Act?

MR. ANDERSON: That is dated in March, 1862. The records down there ought to show something about it.

THE MASTER: But we are discussing it on the basis of the record as it is now.

MR. ANDERSON: Mr. Page may be able to find it.

MR. HOLT: What we would like would be for the testimony to come to an end, of course after both sides get what they want, and the Master feels that he has enough to act upon. Mr. Anderson suggests Mr. Page may have something more. As long as we keep this thing open at both ends, we will never get through with it.

THE MASTER: You will never get any report while it is open that way.

MR. HOLT: I think this time when we quit we ought to quit, whether we have got in everything or not.

THE MASTER: As far as I am concerned I think we can make that arrangement.

MR. HOLT: Otherwise we will never get done with it. Though there is something that I understand your Honor would like to have in connection with those tolls.

THE MASTER: I would like to have that contract.

MR. HOLT: That ought to be the business of someone, so that the Master may rely on someone to get it. If we go away without any arrangement, it being everybody's business, it will not be done.

THE MASTER: I suppose Mr. Hillman and Mr. Potter would take that up. I think the understanding was that Mr. Leeds was to get that.

MR. HOLT: Mr. Hillman, what is it you understand Mr. Leeds is to do in Virginia?

MR. HILLMAN: Mr. Leeds is to get the amount of tolls derived by the State from the Blue Ridge Road, as far as he can tell, whether they were collected on direct tolls or under payments by the Virginia Central after the lease was made. And then to find out the actual terms, if it is possible, of the lease which was made by the Blue Ridge Road to the Virginia Central.

MR. ANDERSON: I would say leases, because there may be more than one.

THE MASTER: Mr. Hillman suggested that they might find some entry on some book down there undertaking to summarize it. If we cannot find anything better than a summary, we will take the summary. Now what else was there?

MR. ANDERSON: I do not know of anything, unless we can find some information about this Northwestern Bank and the Jeffersonville Branch.

THE MASTER: What do you say about that?

MR. ANDERSON: I would suggest that you ask Mr. Page to have a diligent search made for any evidence in regard to the transactions of Virginia with the Jeffersonville Branch and the Grazier's Bank in 1861, 1862 and 1863.

THE MASTER: Everything is cleaned up, as I understand it, except this question of the Blue Ridge Road and the Jeffersonville Branch. And the Blue Ridge Road will be taken care of by the fact that Mr. Leeds is going to get the amount paid in tolls during the whole existence of the road, and the contract, if he can find it, and if he cannot find the contract if there is any summarization of it, if it is not on the record anywhere, we will have that.

MR. HARRISON: Then he will have to go to Richmond. Of course Mr. Potter had better go along with him or follow him, so that we will have the thing ended once for all.

THE MASTER: Then let Mr. Potter and Mr. Leeds make a thorough investigation down there and dig out whatever there may be that tends to solve this Jeffersonville Branch matter; and whatever Mr. Leeds and Mr. Potter report to me I will take as the record.

MR. HOLT: That is all right.

MR. HARRISON: Or, if they do not agree, let them report their respective findings or ideas.

THE MASTER: If they do not agree I do not want to call the counsel together again on that. I think it had better be submitted, and let them submit their suggestions in writing on each side.

MR. ANDERSON: I do not see how there can be any disagreement; it will be extracts from the record.

THE MASTER: I do not suppose there will be; but suppose they do, would that be agreeable, Judge?

MR. HOLT: Yes, sir.

MR. HARRISON: As far as we are concerned, if there is any disagreement reported by Mr. Potter and Mr. Leeds, we will just leave that to the Master to settle. You have got all the light on the thing that can be gotten, and I do not see how the counsel can illuminate you or assist you.

MR. HOLT: Still you never can tell what is going to happen.

THE MASTER: I think if there is any fact in dispute here it is proper for me to submit that issue to the counsel on each side and give them an opportunity to be heard on it if they want to be. How do you feel about that, Judge?

MR. HOLT: I would be perfectly willing to leave it to the Master; but still, if I were in the Master's place, that is what I would do.

THE MASTER: I think that is what I did do and what I will do.

ARTHUR G. POTTER, recalled for further examination, testified as follows:

By the Master:

Q. With reference to the item of $39,067.42, found on page 1193 of the last print, interest on bonds and notes, for 1860—

A. That amount appears at page 238, Document No. 17, record of the Board of Public Works for 1860, under the heading of interest on bonds and notes. On page 828 of the reports of the James River and Kanawha Company, Volume 5, 1855 to 1860, the same item appears under the heading fourth division, interest. It therefore appears to be interest on some obligations in connection with the fourth divison of the construction of the canal. On pages 238 and 239 of the first volume just mentioned, Document No. 17, is a list of the notes due on account of the North River Navigation Company and of the guaranteed bonds of the Company. We can identify the interest appearing on page 238 with these two groups, leaving two items of interest not identified. But at the bottom of page 238 appears the heading, the amount of bills payable outstanding on the 30th of September was as follows, giving five items aggregating $153,561.85. It appears therefore that the item of $39,067.42, interest on bonds and notes, applies to the obligations.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, did you and Mr. Hillman agree on that statement that you have just made?

THE MASTER: The long and short of it is that it is impossible to tell from any records that we have whether this item of $39,067.42 is an item of interest on indebtedness other than indebtedness to the State. The significance of that of course is this; the schedules that we have, and the statements, are predicated upon the assumption that when the indebtedness to the State was transferred into stock, that it practically extinguished the indebtedness and eliminated the element of interest. Now if there were other indebtedness, that might not follow as to the other indebtedness. What the fact about that is we do not seem to be able to ascertain. That is it.

MR. HOLT: I understand that. But I want to know whether Mr. Potter and Mr. Hillman agree.

THE WITNESS: I understand we agree on that.

MR. HILLMAN: Your honor, I do not quite agree with Mr. Potter on that $153,000, since the interest on that for a year would only be $9,000, and could not possibly make up the $39,000.

THE MASTER: That is the $39,000 could not be predicated upon that principal sum?

MR. HILLMAN: No.

MR. POTTER: I said that absolutely.

MR. HILLMAN: And for that reason I assumed that it must be an item that was finally absorbed by the State.

MR. HOLT: What year, Mr. Littlefield does this transaction relate to?

THE MASTER: 1860. I wanted to try and make this point certain if I could.

MR. HOLT: Is any month given there?

THE MASTER: No.

MR. HARRISON: The statement shows that the interest was paid up to September 30th, 1860, 1861 and 1862.

THE MASTER: Some interest was paid.

MR. LILLY: But it dropped to $14,000 in 1861.

MR. HOLT: To some extent interest was paid.

MR. LILLY: That may be interest that had accrued before the Act of March 23rd, 1860, and yet would be reflected in this report of 1860.

MR. HOLT: I have no doubt that that $200,000 of new stock that Virginia subscribed for at that time, and paid cash for, was intended to take care of some of these things. That of course is mere supposition on my part.

By Mr. Holt:

Q. Mr. Potter, will you put into the record that Confederate calculation I asked for yesterday?

A. Yes, sir. The indicated deficit of the James River and Kanawha Company, based on the cash account for the year ended September 30th, 1861, was $69,809.54. Reducing this at the Confederate scale of $1.10, for the month of September, 1861, the reduction to gold would be $63,463.21. For 1862, the deficit of $46,609.86, reduced at $2.50 would give $18,643.94 of gold. The deficit for 1863 of $129,036.25, reduced at $12.50, gives $10,322.90 gold.

MR. HARRISON: Nothing remains now to go into the record except whatever Mr. Potter and Mr. Leeds may report to you with reference to the Jeffersonville and Grazier's Banks, and the matter of tolls' collection from the Blue Ridge Railroad, and the contract, if they can find it.

MR. HOLT: As I understand it, that closes the testimony upon both sides.

MR. HARRISON: Yes, that is my understanding.

THE MASTER: What time would you like to go on this afternoon? I suppose you are both prepared to go on and argue.

MR. HARRISON: Oh, yes, sir, we want to make progress right along. I suppose you are ready to go on after lunch, Judge, are you not?

MR. HOLT: I suppose any discussion that is indulged in now will be confined to the James River and Kanawha Company, the Blue Ridge Railroad and market quotations, is that the idea?

MR. LILLY: And the Grazier's Bank.

THE MASTER: I won't limit any of you, if there is any phase of the case that you want to discuss.

MR. HOLT: How do you feel about those?

MR. HARRISON: Those I think will be the main subjects discussed.

MR. ANDERSON: And the question as to the book values and the par values.

MR. HARRISON: The incidental subjects.

THE MASTER: That has been pretty thoroughly gone over, but still, if either party wants to say anything about it, I will hear them.

MR. HOLT: I did not suppose that we would go into a general rehash of what we had been through before.

MR. HARRISON: We cited a Virginia case in our brief of the Virginia Court of Appeals, the old Court, seventy-five or eighty years ago, and no extracts were given from that decision, nor did I take it up and point out just what the facts were before the Court, and what the decision was, in the final argument of the case. Now we think that case has an important bearing on the very point you have just discussed.

THE MASTER: Let us have that case right here this afternoon.

MR. ANDERSON: That is Bull. vs. Douglas, 4 Montfort, 303.

MR. HARRISON: I am not going to stop now to say what it is, but we will point out to you just the bearing it has upon the question.

THE MASTER: When would it be agreeable to you to come in, two or half past?

MR. HOLT: Any time would suit me. Say half past two.

THE MASTER: At my request Mr. Rosewell Page, Second Auditor of Virginia, has sent me the following extracts from the day book, 1861 to 1865, of the Auditor's office of Virginia:

ROSEWELL PAGE,
Second Auditor of Virginia.

At this point a recess was taken until 2:30 P. M.

OFFICE OF THE GRAZIER'S BANK OF VIRGINIA.

Jeffersonville, July 23rd, 1863.

H. W. Thomas ,Esq., Cas. 2nd Auditor.

Dear Sir:

Yr. fvr. of the 6" is received & an answer would sooner have been given, but for the presence of the public enemy.

The number of shares not exchanged by private stockholders in this Bank is 1364 of $100 each, making the sum of $136,400.00.

Col. F. M. Mullen has an application before the Governor for the transfer of 5 shares. If the Governor directs the transfer, then the number of shares to be transfered by the state will be 1359; or $135,900 of Capital Stock.

You say the state holds 826 shares. This is not sufficient to absorb all the capital of the late Branch Bank and will render the act of incorporation impracticable. I was under the impression that the state owned or held nearly $200,000 in the N. W. Bk. In 1857 the N. W. Bk. bought 1-3 of the State's Stock and the proportion of that purchase which fell to this Branch was 250 shares, or $25,-000.00. On this basis the state's interest is nearer $200,000.00.

Very truly yours,

Jno. A. Kelly, Cas.

Hon. Chas. E. Littlefield,

Dear Mr. Littlefield:

I am enclosing herewith a statement covering the information you asked for in connection with the Blue Ridge Railroad. The data is very meager, but it is all that I was able to ascertain. I have noted the acts under which the road was authorized, and if you care to consult them I suppose you can find them in the library in New York.

With reference to the Northwestern Bank, I was unable to find anything except what is already incorporated in the Record. I am mailing these to you for the reason that I think you require them as soon as possible.

Mr. Potter has not arrived here as yet, and I suppose he will send you a separate statement. I wired Mr. Potter's office today, asking if he was coming up, but up to this time I have not received a reply.

Very truly yours,

EDWARD P. LEEDS.

Dear Mr. Littlefield:—

Since writing you yesterday, I desire to add that there will be forwarded to you (or probably brought by Mr. Potter), a copy of the Acts mentioned in my letter, a copy of the agreement between the Board of Public Works and the Va. Central Railroad, and acceptance of same by the latter company, and a copy of some correspondence touching upon the North Western Bank.

I have sent a copy of this and my preceding letter and all reports to Attorney General Lilly at Charleston.

New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—

I reached Richmond on Tuesday and checked up a statement consisting of two pages of matter pertaining to the Blue Ridge Railroad prepared by Mr. Leeds of which he sent you a copy. The two acts referred to at the top of the page are very important and I had copies made of them which I send you herewith.

I also enclose the following with reference to stock in the Grazier's Bank held by the state of Virginia, all of which have been certified by Mr. Page:

Letter—July 23rd, 1863, John A. Kelly, Cashier Grazier's Bank, to H. W. Thomas, Second Auditor.

Letter—Aug. 26th, 1863, John Kelly, Cashier Grazier's Bank, to H. M. Thomas, Second Auditor.

Copy of Executive Department Paper, July 2nd, 1863, relating to the issue of stock of Grazier's Bank to the state.

Copy of a statement evidently prepared by some clerk in the Second Auditor's Office at July 30th, 1863.

Two documents will follow, viz. a copy of the Board of Public Works, Minutes of April 28th, 1853, stating the conditions on which the Blue Ridge Railroad will be transferred to the Virginia, Cent. and a copy of an original document, being a certified copy of the minutes of the Virginia Central Railroad, accepting the Blue Ridge on the conditions laid down in the minutes above mentioned.

Owing to the press of other duties in the Corporation Commissions Office I could not get copies of these yesterday, but they promised to mail them to me today and you will no doubt have them tomorrow.

I would like to call your attention to the letter of July 23rd in which the cashier of the Grazier Bank states as follows:

"In 1857 the North Western Bank bought ⅓ of the State's Stock and the proportion of that purchase which fell to this Branch was 250 shares."

The statement shows that the number of shares actually sold by the state was 1082 shares and if 250 of this 1082 was the number of shares apportionable to the Jeffersonville Branch, then 832 shares was apportionable to the Wheeling Bank with the two branches in the new state. The percentage therefore is as follows:

250 Shares = 23.105%
832 " = 76.895%

Yours very truly,

A. G. POTTER.

Chap. 147.—AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE BLUE RIDGE RAILROAD COMPANY, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

(Passed March 5, 1849.)

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly, That for the purpose of constructing a railroad from some point at or near Blair Park in the county of Albemarle, (being the eastern base of the Blue Ridge), to some point at or near Waynesborough in the county of Augusta, being the western base of the Blue Ridge, including the necessary tunnel for a railroad through the Blue Ridge, the Board of Public works be, and they are hereby incorporated and made a body politic and corporate, under the name and style of "The Blue Ridge Railroad Company," and shall be subject to all the provisions of the act "prescribing certain general regulations for the incorporation of railroad companies," passed March eleventh, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven.

2. Be it further enacted, That the president and directors of said company shall employ a competent engineer to locate said railroad, so as to connect with the Louisa railroad at or near Blair Park, and to extend thence, including the tunnel aforesaid, to some point at or near Waynesborough; and upon the location of said route and the record of the plats and maps thereof in the clerks' offices of the respective counties through which said road and tunnel shall pass, the title thereto shall become ipso facto vested in the commonwealth for the use of said road, according to the provisions of the act last aforesaid.

3. Be it further enacted, That so soon as said location shall have been completed, the said company shall, after due advertisement in the public prints, proceed to let the contracts for the construction of said tunnel and of said railroad, with a heavy rail, requiring bonds with approved security, for the faithful execution of said contracts: Provided, That said company shall not contract to pay in any one year more than one hundred thousand dollars.

4. Be it further enacted, That for the purposes aforesaid, the president and directors of said company shall have power to borrow, on the credit of the commonwealth, a sum or sums of money not exceeding in any one year, one hundred thousand dollars, agreeably to the provisions of the act passed April eighth, eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, "authorizing loans for the payment of certain subscriptions and appropriations."

5. Be it further enacted, That in case the Louisa railroad company shall, within twelve months from the passage of this act, accept the provisions thereof, the said Louisa railroad company shall have the exclusive use of said road from Blair Park to Waynesborough, when completed; and in consideration thereof, shall, at their own expense, ever thereafter keep in good repair said railroad and tunnel, and shall annually pay into the treasury of the commonwealth, fifty cents for each passenger, and ten cents for each barrel of flour carried through said tunnel, and ten per cent. on the said Louisa railroad company's charge for transportation of each ton of produce and merchandise, (except gypsum, on which no toll shall be paid,) from any point east of said tunnel to Waynesborough, or from Waynesborough to any point east of said tunnel; a true statement from its books of the number of passengers, barrels of flour and tons of produce and merchandise carried through said tunnel, and of its charges on the produce and merchandise so carried, the said Louisa railroad company shall annually report to the Board of public works: Provided, That it shall not be lawful for the Louisa railroad company to charge for the transportation of passengers, flour, produce or merchandise, over said road and through said tunnel, at a greater rate than for the same distance on other portions of its road.

6. Be it further enacted, That whenever the cost of the construction of said railroad and tunnel shall have been refunded to the commonwealth by the tolls aforesaid; or whenever the Louisa railroad company shall secure the repayment of such cost in such instalments as may be agreed upon by the said company and said Blue Ridge company, the title to said railroad and tunnel, quit and discharged from the payment of any toll to the commonwealth, shall be absolutely in said Louisa company.

7. Be it further enacted, That for the purpose of extending its road from the western terminus of the railroad and tunnel, hereinbefore authorized to be constructed, to the town of Staunton, and with a view to its extension in the direction of the town of Covington, the capital stock of the Louisa railroad company be increased one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

8. Be it further enacted, That the Board of public works shall subscribe, on the part of the commonwealth, to the additional stock of said Louisa railroad company, in the same proportion and upon the terms set forth in the act passed March eighth, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, providing for the extension of the Louisa railroad to the eastern base of the Blue Ridge.

9. Be it further enacted, That in case the Louisa railroad company shall decline to accept the provisions of this act as aforesaid, the said Blue Ridge railroad company shall cause books to be opened at such places, and under the direction of such commissioners as may be deemed proper, to receive subscriptions of stock, in shares of fifty dollars each, to an amount not exceeding sixty thousand dollars, for the purpose of constructing a railroad to the town of Staunton, and with a view to its extension in the direction of the town of Covington, and for providing everything necessary for trasportation between Blair Park and Staunton.

10. Be it further enacted, That when six hundred shares shall have been subscribed by individuals and corporations, other than the commonwealth, solvent and able to pay the same, the Board of public works shall subscribe for nine hundred shares; and thereupon the said Blue Ridge railroad company shall commence the construction of said railroad; and afterwards, whenever one hundred shares are subscribed by individuals and corporations as aforesaid, the Board of public works shall in like manner subscribe one hundred and fifty shares, until the aggregate sum thus subscribed shall amount to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, which shall be regarded as the capital stock of said Blue Ridge company.

11. Be it further enacted, That in order to pay the subscriptions authorized in the preceding section, the Board of public works shall have power to borrow, on the credit of the commonwealth, the money necessary, agreeably to the provisions of the act aforesaid, passed April ninth, eighteen hundred and thirty-nine.

12. Be it further enacted, That in case of the construction of said railroad to the town of Staunton, by the Blue Ridge company, the said company shall, in all respects be entitled to the privileges, and subject to the obligations and restrictions hereinbefore set forth, as imposed upon and granted to said Louisa company, in the event of its acceptance of the provisions of this act.

13. And be it further enacted, That if the Louisa railroad company shall accept the provisions of this act, the said company shall, in case of such acceptance, be bound to transport passengers and commodities from any point on its line of road, to its point of intersection with any other railroad, or from such point of intersection, to any other point on its said line, at no higher charge per mile for the said passengers and commodities than would be charged by the said company upon the same passengers or commodities transported for the like distances on any other part of its road.

14. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Chap. 156.—An ACT to amend the act, entitled "an act to incorporate the Blue Ridge railroad company, and for other purposes," passed March 5, 1849, and repealing so much of said act as restricts said company from borrowing and contracting to pay in any one year more than one hundred thousand dollars.

(Passed March 3, 1852.)

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly, That the third section of the act passed March fifth, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, entitled "an act to incorporate the Blue Ridge railroad company, and for other purposes," be re-enacted and so amended, as to read as follows, to wit: That so soon as said location shall have been completed, the said company shall, after due advertisements in the public prints, proceed to let the contracts for the construction of said tunnel and of said railroad with a heavy rail, requiring bonds with approved security for the faithful execution of said contracts.

2. That the fourth section of said act be re-enacted and so amended, as to read as follows, to wit: That for the purposes aforesaid, the president and directors of said company shall have power to borrow on the credit of the commonwealth the money necessary to meet the payments for work already done or hereafter to be done in constructing said tunnel and railroad, as they may be called for by the estimates and drafts of the engineer of said company. But such money shall be borrowed so that there shall be added to the public debt on this account not more than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars on the first day July, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, one hundred thousand dollars on the first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and one hundred thousand dollars on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.

3. Provided, That the Board of public works shall require of the Virginia Central railroad company to pay an adequate compensation, to be agreed upon by said board and said company, for using such portions of the Blue Ridge railroad as may be finished prior to the completion of the tunnel. But this provision shall not affect the rate of toll required to be paid by said Virginia Central railroad company for using the Blue Ridge railroad and the tunnel after the completion thereof, under the provisions of the aforesaid act, entitled "an act to incorporate the Blue Ridge railroad company, and for other purposes."

4. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Dear Sir:—

I enclose herewith a certified copy of the minutes of the Board of Public Works under date Thursday, the 27th April, 1858, relating to the Blue Ridge Railroad. Attached to the last sheet of this is a copy of an original document which I found in the Blue Ridge Railroad box in the office of the Corporation Commission and you will notice that it is signed by myself and Mr. Leeds. These documents appear to give all of the information you require at the recent period.

Yours very truly,

DEPARTMENT OF THE STATE CORPORATION COMMISSION.

Received Dec. 21, 1914 (C. E. L.)

Tuesday 27 April, 1858.

Present all the members.

The following communication was submitted to the Board from Mr. Fisk, Chief Engineer.

Richmond, Va., 31 March, 1858. To the Board of Public Works, Gent.

At your request I examined the line of the Blue Ridge railroad some weeks ago so far as I thought it necessary to enable me to express an opinion upon certain matters of difference between the Blue Ridge and Virginia Central railroad companies. My report upon that examination dated the 20th ult. was made the basis of a proposition by you to the Virginia Central Railroad Co. for the settlement of the differences between the two companies—and that company having declared to accept it, for the reason in part, that I had not in their view, taken into consideration all the matters of difference. I was requested by you to make such further examination into the condition of the road as would be necessary to enable me to give an opinion that would cover the whole case.

I desire to say in regard to the examination made some weeks ago that I undertook it not as an umpire between the parties, but as an Engineer called upon by one of the parties to report upon certain matters of difference, and which I understood were those to which by attention had been and would be directed by the other party.

The last annual report of the Va. Central railroad Co.—which I have only recently examined, would seem to show that with the exception of the subject of arching in the Blue ridge tunnel, which I did not take into consideration for the reason stated in the note to my report of the 20th ult.—and certain small cross ties, which I was informed had been taken out and replaced by larger ones I did in fact report upon all the matters to which attention is therein particularly directed. I will quote sufficient to show this:

The Chief Engineer under date 21st September 1857 (see pages 19-20-21) says:

"I have made an examination of that part of the Blue Ridge railroad between Kelly's cut and the western end of mountain track and respectfully submit a brief report of the state of that work before it is finally received by you.

"The laborers are still engaged in completing the ballasting and ditching and will probably finish during the present week; the track will be finished at the same time—It gives me pleasure to state so far as skill can render it so, the road is in excellent order, reflecting credit upon those entrusted with its construction. There are some points however to which I would call your attention—where in spite of the care shown in the construction of the work, very considerable expense must be incurred in the future on account of slides. This should be taken notice of in the settlement between you & the Board of Public Works, one of these points is at Kelly's cut. The next point is at the embankment over Robinson's hollow &c—another point to which I would call your attention is the embankment immediately east of the main tunnel &. "It would be manifestly unfair to charge the expense to be incurred at these points to repairs of road. It is construction, and as such belongs properly to the cost of the Blue Ridge railroad. This I presume will be paid for by the Board of Public Works, at all events some provision should be made for this work before it is received by you. I have not thoroughly examined the main tunnel. I am however satisfied from such observation of the work as I have able to make that it is perfectly safe for the present. It may be necessary to arch a portion of the tunnel now unprotected, to provide against disintegration, and if so it should be done at once. I presume that the distinguished gentleman now in charge, and who is perfectly familiar with the roof will indicate any portions of which there is any doubt, I think we may run through the tunnel in about two weeks."

After this report was made by the Chief Engineer some little additional arching was done in the tunnel. Upon undertaking the further and recent examination of the road I requested of Messrs. Ellet & Whitcomb representing the Virginia Central R. R. Co. that I should be furnished with a detailed statement of what that company thought necessary to the completion of the road, and an estimate of the amount of work done that in their opinion should be done in thus completing it, and of its probable cost. Mr. Ellet handed me when on the line of the road a statement (see copy of it appended) of the points at which he thought more work should be done (but not the desired estimate in detail of quantities and probable cost) and he, the Chief. Engr. of the Virginia Central R.R.Co. and myself passed over the line together and examined these points. A considerable amount of the work that is claimed should be done, outside of the Blue ridge tunnel, would I find, be excluded from consideration by me if I am to be governed by your resolution of the 9th February 1854.

I find also that much other work claimed as above would be excluded from consideration by me if I am to be governed by what has been heretofore been claimed on the part of the Blue Ridge railroad company, to be all that can be required of them in regard to the width to be given and arching to be done at the Blue ridge tunnel—and which was, as I understand that that tunnel is to be considered as in fact completed in these respects as between the two companies so soon as the cars of the Va. Cen. R.R.Co. could be safely run through it—with proper care on the part of the Company notwithstanding ultimately and perhaps at an early day it would be very desirable, if not necessary to widen out and enlarge the unarched portions of it to the width and area of its arched portions—and to arch such further portions of it, as time may shew to be necessary. There is a part of the work, however that it is claimed should be done by the Blue Ridge railroad Co. that that company is bound to do, even if the resolution of the 9th Feb. 1854 and the above views as to what is to be considered as a completion of certain parts of the road should be rigidly adhered to and govern the settlement between the two companies.

Having thus far prepared this report I thought it proper to call the attention of the Board informally to the resolution of the 9th February 1854—and the above views as to the completion of certain parts of the road—for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is their desire that said resolution shall be rigidly applied by me in all cases—and that would seem to have been the action of the Blue ridge railroad company in regard to the completion of these parts of the road, shall be regarded by me as a final action on that subject by that company. I thought it my duty to call the attention of the Board as above—for I am still acting not as an umpire between the parties;—but as an Engineer called upon by and acting for but one of the parties. And having obtained from the Board informally their views in regard to the above matters I have embodied, as understood by me in the form of a preamble and expressed my opinion—under those views upon the matters submitted to me, in the form of a resolution, in the hope that if the preamble correctly states your views, and the resolution meets with your approval that you will place both and particularly the former, or what would be equivalent to it on your journal, to show upon what grounds and for what reasons the present report differs so materially from my report of the 20th ult. and which is mainly that the Board do not adhere rigidly to their resolution of the 9th February 1854, and are willing to provide for giving to the Blue ridge tunnel the area of cross section originally intended to be given to it.

Form of preamble and resolution referred to above.

Charles B. Fisk, Civil Engineer having been requested by this Bd. since his examination of and report upon the Blue ridge railroad last month—to make a further examination of and report upon said road—and said Fisk having been informed by this Board.

1st. That the examination and report desired should only extend over and apply to that portion of the road which lies west of Greenwood depot as the portion which lies east of that depot was long since delivered to and received by the Virginia Central railroad Co.

2nd. That it was the desire of the Board that he should in his report give an estimate of what would probably be the cost of such work, as in his opinion is necessary to complete the above portion of the road west of Greenwood depot, upon a fair and just interpretation of the law authorizing and directing the Board of Public works to construct the Blue Ridge railroad.

3rd. That in forming his opinion as to whether the above portion of the road has in all respects been completed in the manner contemplated by the law, this Board is willing that the specifications as to the dimensions and plans of the various works and structures upon the road originally adopted by the B. P. Works—except so far as a deviation therefrom may have been made by the order of said board or rendered necessary or advisable for good and sufficient reasons—in an engineering point of view—shall be his guide.

4th. That he should take into consideration in forming his opinion as to the amount of work to be done by this Board in completing the road, the resolution adopted by them on the 9th February 1854 by which it was declared "That after the track has been laid upon any part of the location of the Blue ridge railroad, and the cars of the Virginia Central railroad are running upon the same the B. P. Works will consider that the work has been received by said company, and will not hold themselves bound to do any further work upon it except the ballasting as per resolution of 10 December 1853." but with the understanding that this Board is willing that said resolution shall not be rigidly adhered to in the case of any considerable expenditures that ought now or very soon to be made at points for work properly chargeable to construction—such as securing the embankment at Robinson's Hollow, against sliding, the lengthening if necessary of the culverts at Goodloes hollow, Robinsons hollow and Dove Spring hollow. And said Fisk having presented to the Board his report and estimate, and the same having been considered—the following resolution was moved and adopted.

Resolved that this Board in its character as the Blue Ridge railroad company, will deliver the entire line of the Blue ridge railroad to the Virginia Central railroad Co. upon the following terms and conditions—so soon as the same shall have been assented to by the Company.

1. That the Virginia Central railroad Co. shall from the time that they commence running their cars through the Blue ridge railroad tunnel pay the tolls for the use of the Blue ridge railroad specified in Section No. 5 of Chapter 147 which passed 5 Mar. 1849 said time to be not later than the 1st May 1858.

2. That the Virginia Central railroad Co. shall undertake to do all the work required to complete the construction of the Blue ridge railroad, and in consideration thereof shall be paid by the Blue ridge railroad Company as follows, viz:

For widening and enlarging the cross section of the long unarched portion of the Blue ridge tunnel, at the eastern end thereof to an area that shall not exceed further than is necessary in blasting the area of the arched portions of said tunnel, the actual cost of such widening and enlargement, but with the understanding that no expenditures for those purposes after the 1st day of May 1860, shall be paid for by the Blue ridge railroad co. & that the total amount thus expended by the Virginia Central railroad Co. before that day to be paid for by the Blue ridge railroad Co. shall not exceed $19,358.

For arching and lining those portions of the Blue Ridge tunnel now unarched between the eastern and western arched portions thereof (say 692 feet in length) to such extent and for such length as may be found necessary—and the excavation and all other work necessary for and consequent upon the said arching, the actual cost of such arching and work, but with the understanding that no expenditures for these purposes after the first day of May 1863 shall be paid for by the Blue Ridge railroad Co. and that the total amount thus expended by the Virginia Central railroad Co. to be paid for by the Blue Ridge railroad Co. to the extent and for such length as above provided—shall not exceed $38½ per foot linear lengthwise of the tunnel of the arching actually done.

For completing the ballasting, completing the track through Kelly's cut, cleaning outside ditches, lengthening the culverts at Goodloe's hollow, Robinson's hollow and Dove Spring hollow and three square drains between Goodloe's hollow and Blue Ridge tunnel, putting in where needed cattle stops, securing the high embankments near and east of the Blue Ridge tunnel and at Robinson's hollow against sliding, clearing out cuts and removing material in danger of sliding into them, widening the little tunnel near Robinson's hollow and obtaining the grade through said tunnel, and all other work necessary to the completion of the road West of Greenwood depot so far as the same is properly chargeable to construction and to the Blue Ridge railroad Co., the actual cost of such work, but with the understanding that no expenditures for the above puropses after the 1st day of May, 1860—shall be paid for by the Blue Ridge Railroad Co.—and that the total amount thus expended by the Virginia Central road Co. shall not exceed $24,465.

3. That the Virginia Central railroad Co. shall not arch any more of the portions of the Blue Ridge tunnel referred to as provided above, than is absolutely necessary with a view to the safe use of said tunnel,—and that if either in whole or in part any part of the said portions—can be rendered safe by adopting iron in place of brick and stone and at less cost, that they shall do so.

4. That the Virginia Central railroad Co. shall while doing the work contemplated in this resolution make a report to this Board at its regular monthly meetings—of the actual cost of the work done by them thereunder during the months respectively immediately preceding and ending on the last days of said months and in making such reports said Co. shall sustain the same by such vouchers as in the opinion of this Board are proper & reliable.

5. That all accounts heretofore presented for work done on the line of the road and which were rejected by its engineer for the reason that they could not be allowed under the resolution of the

Board of 9 February 1854 and which have not been allowed by this Board shall be considered as rejected by this Board and that the arrangements now proposed under this resolution shall be considered as covering all matters of account of the Virginia Central railroad co. against the Blue Ridge railroad except those for transportation and freight and iron not heretofore allowed—and

6. That the payments for work done under this resolution to the Virginia Central railroad Co. shall be made from time to time when presented to and approved by the Board or as soon thereafter as there are funds in hand applicable thereto.

Respectfully submitted, C. B. Fisk, Engineer. & Copy of the memorandum by Mr. Ellet referred to above.

Mountain Top, March 25, 1858.

Memorandum of work to be done to complete the Blue Ridge road west of Greenwood.

1. The road bed to be neatly graded and finished on top everywhere.

2. The ballast to be brought level with the top of the ties, of good stone and properly broken and to be made as wide as the lengths of the ties (8 feet) at top with slopes of 1 to 1.

3. The long embankment at Waynesboro to be raised & widened.

4. The first rock cut east of Waynesboro to be sloped on the north side chiefly, but also to some extent on the south side.

5. The next cut east of ——— ditto.

6. The third cut do.

7. The cut at turntable. do.

8. The small bridge west of tunnel should be protected by tin.

9. Tunnel—west end—remove threatening rock.

10. East end, remove threatening rock, & turn off the water which falls on the track.

11. Tunnel to be arched between the present arches 672+20= 692 feet—Excavation to be widened so as to admit the arch.

12. Unarched tunnel to be widened say 1200 cubic yards to be removed to give the specified dimensions.

13. Leakage of tunnel.

14. Embankment east of tunnel now sliding to be completed by the State's force.

15. First cut east of tunnel, by turnout to be sloped, ditches to be opened.

16. Wommeldorf's cut say 700 feet long to be sloped—Cattle guards to be made here.

17. Culvert (first bank east of Wommeldorf's) now filled up and buried to be opened & lengthened on the north side.

18. Fourth cut from Wommeldorf's to be sloped &c.

19. The parapet and wings of the culvert under the first bank west of Goodloe's to be raised.

20. The lower end of culvert under the 3d bank west of Goodloe's to be uncovered and lengthened.

21. Two road crossings wanted—one for Hansboro, & one for Hansboro & Goodloe.

22. Second cut west of Goodloe's hollow to be ?

23. First cut west of Goodloe's to be widened & sloped on both sides.

24. Goodloe's hollow—Culvert too short, needs to be lengthened or to have good and high parapets (say 9 feet high) & supported by buttresses culvert to be cleaned out.

25. Little tunnel to be sunk deeper at bottom through the tunnel & approaches. The tunnel to be widened.

26. Threatening rock at both approaches of the little tunnel of which there is a great deal on both sides of the east approach to be removed.

27. Robinson's hollow bank to be sustained.

28. Culvert under Robinson's hollow to be lengthened at both ends say 20 feet.

29. Road crossing wanted east of Robinson's hollow.

30. McElroys cut some portions of the slopes need to be removed, on both sides.

31. Brookville tunnel—west end 500 yards earth and rock to be removed from slide and spread over top of arch.

32. Brookville tunnel west end to be sloped off.

33. Dove Spring hollow—culvert to be lengthened—say 20 feet at each end.

34. Kelly's cut, rock now dangerous, or threatening soon to become so to be removed.

After consideration the following preamble & resolution were adopted, viz:

Charles B. Fisk, Civil Engineer, having at the request of this Board submitted a report dated the 31st ult. upon the cost of completing the Blue Ridge railroad in accordance with the views of this Board, in respect to the manner in which the said railroad should be completed, which views are correctly stated in said report, viz: that the whole Blue Ridge railroad including the tunnel should be completed in a substantial manner before the Virginia Central railroad company could by law be required to receive and use it and pay the prescribed tolls—and said report having been communicated to a committee of the Board of Directors of the Virginia Central Railroad Co. & they having expressed a desire that the amounts to be expended in completing the said road and tunnel by the Virginia Central Railroad Co. in case they should undertake to complete the said Blue Ridge railroad and tunnel should be fixed and definite in so far as regards the estimated amount of tolls designed to cover that expenditure, and also that the mode of payment proposed in said report should be somewhat changed, thus releasing the Board of Public Works from all responsibility for the completion of said road and tunnel which responsibility is fully assumed by said Virginia Central railroad company—

Be it therefore

Resolved, that this Board in its character as the Blue Ridge railroad company will allow the Virginia Central Railroad Company to use with their trains the entire line of the Blue Ridge railroad including the main tunnel upon the following terms and conditions.

1. The Vrginia Central Railroad Co. shall from the date when their use of the said railroad begins keep a correct account of the full tolls for the use of the said road and tunnel upon travel & tonnage as specified in the Act passed March 5, 1849, ch. 147, Sec. 5, commencing from the time of their cars beginning to run through the Blue Ridge tunnel less such portion thereof as the said company are under obligation to pay into the Treasury of the Commonwealth for running over certain parts of said railroad as per award of Charles B. Fisk made on the 21 August, 1856, and the said Virginia Central Railroad Co. shall thus keep the account of full tolls until they amount with the deduction aforesaid in the aggregate to the sum of Seventy thousand dollars, which sum is regarded and considered as sufficient for the completion of said road and tunnel, and when the said tolls with such deduction shall amount to that sum then and thereafter the full tolls shall be paid by the said company into the Treasury of the Commonwealth — and the Virginia Central Railroad Co. undertakes to complete the Blue Ridge railroad and tunnel in consideration of having the use of the same in its present unfinished condition the value of that use being fixed at the above sum of 70,000 dollars.

2. From the time the full tolls become payable into the Treasury as aforesaid the Blue Ridge railroad and tunnel shall be considered as completed as required by the Act of 1849 as aforesaid and the Blue Ridge Railroad Co. shall be forever exonerated from any other expense on said work.

3. That the above terms and conditions are made with the understanding that the Virginia Central Railroad Co. will prosecute with proper diligence the completion of the Blue Ridge railroad and tunnel, they having by this arrangement assumed the responsibility to the public for making the work secure and substantial and such as the law requires.

4. The Virginia Central railroad Co. are to furnish quarterly statements on the first days of October, January, April & July respectively of each year of the amounts of tonnage and passengers, and tolls as above thereon, until the time when full tolls shall be paid into the Treasury as aforesaid when the statements are to be made annually thereafter as contemplated in the Act of 1849 aforesaid.

5. That a copy of these proceedings be furnished the Virginia Central railroad Co. and that they be requested to inform this Board of their agreement to the same.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Virginia Central Railroad Company held in Staunton, May 5th, 1858.

The following communication from the Board of Public Works in regard to transferring the Blue Ridge Railroad & Tunnel to the Virginia Central Railroad Company, was submitted by the President as follows, viz:

See communication of the Board of Public Works dated Apr. 27, 1858.

On consideration whereof

Resolved, that the Blue Ridge Railroad is accepted by this Company on the terms & conditions contained in the foregoing paper.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

ORIGINAL, No. ——.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

1 To the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

The Commonwealth of Virginia, by William A. Anderson, her attorney-general, brings this, her bill, against the State of West Virginia, and shows to the Court that:

I.

On the first day of January, 1861, your Oratrix was indebted in about the sum of $33,000,000.00 upon obligations and contracts made in connection with the construction of works of internal improvement throughout her then territory. By far the greater part of this indebtedness was shown by her bonds and other evidences of debt, given for the large sums of money which she from time to time had borrowed and used for the above purpose; but a portion of her liabilities though arising under contracts made before that date, had not then been covered by bonds issued for their payment.

In addition to the above liability to the general public, there was a large indebtedness evidenced by her bonds and other liabilities held by and due to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund and the Literary Fund of the State, as created under her laws amounting, the former to $1,462,993.00, and the latter to $1,543,669.05 as of the same date.

The official reports and records showing the exact character and amounts of the public debt thus contracted and how the same was created, are referred to, and will be produced upon a hearing of the case.

2 ## II.

That portion of the territory embraced in what constitutes the present territorial limits of Virginia was prior to that date devoted mainly to agriculture, and to some extent to grazing and manufacturing, which afforded its chief sources of revenue, while that portion included in what now constitutes the State of West Virginia had vast potentialities of wealth and revenue in the undeveloped stores of minerals and timber, which had been known for many years prior to the date named, and their prospective values, if made accessible to the markets of the country, were understood to be well nigh beyond computation. It was to hasten and facilitate the development of these sources of wealth and revenue by the construction of graded roads, bridges, canals and railways, extending through the State from tidewater towards the Ohio river, that the Commonwealth of Virginia, in the first quarter of the Nineteenth century, entered upon a system of public internal improvements, which it was contemplated should include the entire territory of the State, and embraced in its design the construction of public works adapted, not to the needs of any one portion of the State alone, but of the entire State, as a unit of interest. The larger part of these works were constructed East of the Appalachian range, as leading up to the undeveloped territory West thereof, but a very considerable portion of them were, at an expense of several millions of dollars, constructed West of said range within the territory now included in the State of West Virginia; and the completion of some of the main lines of improvement beyond the said range and through to the Ohio river, since the first day of January, 1861, has increased to a very 3 great and material extent the values of real estate, including coal and timber, in the said territory now included in West Virginia, thus carrying into effect the original scheme of improvement, which could not have been done had not the lines East of said range been first constructed; and your Oratrix believes and avers that the property values within the limits of West Virginia have been enormously enhanced in a large measure by reason of these improvements. The money appropriated to the payment of the annually accruing interest on the said debt, prior to January 1st, 1861, and to the formation of the Sinking Fund for the ultimate redemption thereof, was derived from taxes imposed upon the property subject to taxation throughout the entire State. The first of this indebtedness to be contracted was a small amount borrowed by the State in the year 1820 and the debt was thereafter from time to time continued and increased by renewals and new loans until it reached the amount above stated in 1861.

III.

The Commonwealth of Virginia was induced to enter upon the construction of this general system of internal improvement, in a very large measure for the purpose of developing the aforesaid resources of the Western portion of the State, now constituting the State of West Virginia, thereby ameliorating the condition of her citizens residing therein; and it was with this view that she took upon herself the burden of the public debt for which her bonds were issued, without which debt such improvements could not have been undertaken. In corroboration of this view it will appear from 4 an inspection of the legislative records of the State, where the vote carrying the appropriations for such public improvements was recorded, that in nearly every instance a majority of those members of the House and Senate of the original State, who then represented the counties now composing West Virginia, voted for such appropriations. Indeed it appears from those records that a great majority of the Acts of the legislature of Virginia under which said indebtedness was created, would have failed of their passage, had the representatives from the counties embraced in what is now West Virginia opposed their enactment, and that a very large proportion of said indebtedness was actually contracted over the votes of a majority of the representatives from the counties and cities embraced in the limits of the present State of Virginia. This will be found to be true, not only in the legislature for one single session, but in the legislatures for many successive years, thus showing it to have been the fixed policy of the people in that portion of the State now constituting West Virginia to participate in, support and carry out this general plan of internal improvements in the State.

IV.

The development of this system of public improvements thus entered upon was, from its character and extent, necessarily progressive, and the same extended with the general growth and increasing needs of the State, and was incomplete, as above stated, in 1861, though a very considerable portion of such improvements had, prior to that time, been constructed as above stated, in the territory now constituting West Virginia, in order to meet the needs of the people of that portion of the State for their local purposes. As early 5 as the year 1816 a Board of Public Works was created by law for the State, the members of which were elected by the voters of the State at large, and this Board had in charge the construction and supervision of all the works of public improvement in this State. The annual reports of this Board will be referred to for information as to the character, extent, cost and location of the public works and internal improvements constructed in the State prior to January 1st, 1861. The amounts expended upon the construction of these works in what is now West Virginia can only be accurately ascertained by an examination of the numerous entries in the records of this Board extending through a number of years and showing such expenditures as made from time to time.

V.

On the 17th of April, 1861, the people of Virginia, in general convention assembled, adopted an ordinance by which it was intended to withdraw Virginia from the Union of the States. From this action a considerable portion of the people of Virginia dissented, and organized a separate government which was known and recognized by the government of the United States as the "Restored State of Virginia," and will be hereafter referred to in this bill as the "Restored State."

VI.

On the 20th day of August, 1861, the Restored State of Virginia, in convention assembled, in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, adopted an ordinance to "provide for the formation of a new State out of the portion of the territory of this State;" Section 9 of which ordinance was as follows, to-wit:

6 "9. The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all the state expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during said period. All private rights and interests in lands within the proposed State, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of Virginia."

VII.

On the 31st day of December, 1862, an Act was passed by the 37th Congress of the United States providing that the new State thus formed in pursuance of the ordinances of the Wheeling convention above referred to, should, upon certain conditions, be admitted into the Union by the name of West Virginia, with a constitution which had theretofore been adopted for the new State by the people thereof, such conditions being that a change should be made in such proposed constitution in regard to the liberation of slaves therein; and it was provided by this Act of Congress that whenever the President of the United States should issue his proclamation stating the 7 fact that such change had been made and ratified, thereupon the Act admitting the new State into the Union should take effect sixty days after the date of such proclamation. Such proclamation declaring these conditions to have been complied with was duly made by President Lincoln on April 20th, 1863, and West Virginia, in conformity therewith and by the operation of said Act of Congress, was admitted into the Union as a State on the 20th day of June, 1863; and thereupon the State of West Virginia became fully organized, and each of its departments of government commenced operation on the date last named.

VIII.

Pending the admission of the State of West Virginia to the Union the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia passed February 3, 1863, the following Act:

"That all property, real, personal and mixed, owned by, or appertaining to this state, and being within the boundaries of the proposed State of West Virginia, when the same becomes one of the United States, shall thereupon pass to, and become the property of the State of West Virginia, and without any other assignment, conveyance or transfer or delivery than is herein contained, and shall include among other things not herein specified all lands, buildings, roads, and other internal improvements or parts thereof, situated within said boundaries, and vested in this state, or in the president and directors of the literary fund, or the board of public works thereof, or in any person or persons for the use of this state, to the extent of the interest and estate of this state therein; and shall also include the interest 8 of this state, or of the said president and directors, or of the said board of public works, in any parent bank or branch doing business within said boundaries and all stocks of any other company or corporation, the principal office or place of business whereof is located within said boundaries, standing in the name of this state, or of the said president or directors, or of the said board of public works, or of any person or persons, for the use of this state.

5. That if the appropriations and transfers of property, stocks, and credits provided for by this act, take effect, the State of West Virginia shall duly account for the same in the settlement hereafter to be made with this state, provided that no such property, stocks and credits shall have been obtained since the reorganization of the state government."

Your oratrix is informed, believes, and so charges, that the property which was by the operation of this Act appropriated and transferred from the State of Virginia to the State of West Virginia, and which was subsequently received and enjoyed by the State of West Virginia, consisted of a number of items, and the value of it amounted, in the aggregate, to several millions of dollars, the exact amount your Oratrix is unable at this time more definitely to ascertain and state. That of the bank stocks alone, which were transferred under the operation of this Act, the State of West Virginia realized and received into her Treasury from the sale thereof about Six Hundred Thousand Dollars; and that no part of the property 9 so received by West Virginia had been obtained by Virginia since April, 1861.

IX.

And by a further Act of the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia passed on the next day, February 4th, 1863, it was enacted:

"1. That the sum of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars be, and is hereby appropriated to the State of West Virginia out of moneys not otherwise appropriated, when the same shall have been formed, organized and admitted as one of the States of the United States.

2. That there shall be, and hereby is appropriated to the said State of West Virginia when the same shall become one of the United States, all balances, not otherwise appropriated, that may remain in the treasury, and all moneys not otherwise appropriated, that may come into the treasury up to the time when the said State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States; provided, however, that when the said State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States, it shall be the duty of the auditor of this State, to make a statement of all the moneys that up to that time, have been paid into the treasury from counties located outside of the boundaries of the said State of West Virginia, and also of all moneys that up to the same time, have been expended in such counties, and the unexpended surplus of all such moneys shall remain in the treasury and continue to be the property of this State."

And this last named sum of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars, together with other sums belonging to the State of Virginia, were turned over to and received or collected by the new State of West Virginia after its formation as aforesaid.

X.

The Constitution of the State of West Virginia, which became operative and was in force when she was admitted into the Union, contained the following provisions:

By Section 5 of Article VIII. of said Constitution it was provided:

"5. No debt shall be contracted by this State except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State, to suppress insurrection, repel invasion, or defend the State in time of War."

And by section 7 of Article VIII. it was provided:

"7. The legislature may, at any time, direct a sale of the stocks owned by the State, in banks and other corporations, but the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the liquidation of the public debt, and hereafter the State shall not become a stockholder in any bank."

And by section 8 of Article VIII. it was provided:

"8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

At the time the Constitution containing these provisions was adopted, West Virginia did not owe, and could not have owed, any "public debt" or "previous liability," except for her just, contributive proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia, and for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to and received by her under the Acts of the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia above set forth. By the provisions of Section 8 of Article VIII., above cited, she expressly assumed her equitable proportion of the debt of the original State as it existed prior to the first day of January, 1861. By Section 5 of the same Article VIII., above set forth, her Constitution forbade the creation of any debt "except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State," &c., and there was not and could not have been any such "previous liability," except her portion of the debt of the original State, and her liability for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to and received by her under the Acts of the General Assembly of the Restored State. And Section 7 of the same Article of her Constitution, above cited, authorized a sale of the stocks owned by the State, in banks and other corporations, the proceeds to be applied to the liquidation of the public debt; and she had no such stocks, except those acquired, as above stated, from the original State. This section of her constitution also expressly required the proceeds of such sale to be applied to her public debt, which public debt could only have been her pro-12 portion of that of the original State of Virginia, and her liability for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to her.

XI.

After the year 1865 and prior to the year 1872 attempts were made at different times by the public authorities of both the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia, respectively, to ascertain their contributive proportions of the common liability resting upon them for the public debt of Virginia, contracted prior to January 1st, 1861; but all such attempts proved ineffectual and vain, and no accounting or settlement of any kind was ever had between the two States in regard to this debt.

XII.

The efforts looking to a settlement by the concurrent action of the two States having proved abortive, and your Oratrix being anxious to adjust the portion of the common debt which it was right that she should assume and pay, upon terms just and equitable alike to the public creditors and to West Virginia, made several efforts to effect such a settlement.

The first of these was made by the General Assembly which was chosen at the close of the period of "destruction and reconstruction," which, following closely upon the period of disastrous war, had inflicted upon her people injuries and losses, the harmful effects of which were then by no means realized.

The purpose of the representatives of the Commonwealth, then just emerging from conditions which had impoverished her people and paralyzed their productive energies, to assume and pay 13 to the utmost every dollar which her most exacting creditor could demand of her, was expressed in the Act of her General Assembly, approved March 30, 1871.

By the terms of settlement embodied in this Act, your Oratrix undertook to give her obligations bearing 6% interest for two-thirds of the principal, and for two-thirds of the past due interest, and also for two-thirds of the interest on that accrued interest, which accrued interest to the extent of nearly $8,000,000, had been funded after the War in new bonds of Virginia, thus capitalizing at 6% not only the interest, but interest upon that interest.

It was soon apparent that Virginia had by this measure assumed a heavier burden than she was able to bear, and so other plans for the settlement of the State debt were attempted by the Acts of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth approved March 28, 1879, and February 14, 1882, until at length a final and satisfactory settlement of the portion of the debt of the original State which Virginia should assume and pay was definitely concluded by the Act of February 20, 1892. Your Oratrix will file copies of each of the Acts of her

General Assembly herein mentioned as exhibits to this bill, and to be read as part hereof.

XIII.

As farther indicating the great burden which your Oratrix, notwithstanding the disaster and loss above referred to, has assumed and met on account of the common debt of the undivided State, she shows your Honors that, since January 1st, 1861, she has actually paid off, retired and discharged, or assumed and given her new outstanding obligations for the aggregate sum of over Seventy 14 One Million Dollars, as will more particularly appear from a statement thereof filed as an exhibit herewith and herein after referred to as Exhibit Number 7.

It is proper in this connection to call attention to the fact that, while your Oratrix has made this large contribution towards the settlement of the common debt, West Virginia has not paid one dollar thereof; and although in the early years of her history she repeatedly conceded that there was some portion of that debt which should equitably be borne by her, her properly constituted authorities have for a number of years refused to recognize that any liability whatever rested upon her, on that account, and have declined even to enter into an accounting or to treat with your Oratrix in reference thereto.

It would seem from the above statement that Virginia has already done as much under all the circumstances as she could be fairly expected to do towards paying off the common public debt of the old State. Such was the view and purpose of the General Assembly in the several Acts above recited.

A question may be raised as to whether such was the effect of the language used in the Act of March 30, 1871, with respect to the certificates issued thereunder; but the great mass of the creditors entitled to whatever may be due upon the unfunded obligations of the undivided State, have in effect agreed, as will be hereinafter shown, to waive any such question, and to accept the adjudication of this Court in this cause against West Virginia in full discharge of all their claims, thus giving that effect to the Act of March 30, 1871, which it was the purpose of your Oratrix that it should have.

15 XIV.

By each of the Acts for the settlement of her debt above recited, it was provided that the bonds of undivided Virginia so far as not funded in the new obligations given by your Oratrix, should be surrendered to and held by your Oratrix, who either by the express terms of the settlement provided for by said Acts, or as a just and equitable consequence therefrom, received and holds said original bonds so far as unfunded, in trust for the creditor who deposited the same with her, or his assigns; and certificates to this effect were given by your Oratrix to each creditor whose old Virginia bond was so surrendered to her.

Having as an essential part of the contract for the adjustment of the common debt of the original State entered into this fiduciary relation in reference to these bonds, it became her obligation of duty to the creditors who had confided their securities to her keeping, as well as to her own people, whose credit and fair name required that these obligations of the old State should be fairly and honorably adjusted, to do all in her power to bring about a determination of West Virginia's just liability in respect thereto, and if possible the recognition and settlement of the same by that State.

Only after exhausting every means of amicable negotiation, and having her overtures to that end repeatedly refused, and as a last resort, has your Oratrix been constrained at length reluctantly to apply to this, the only tribunal which can afford relief, for an adjudication and determination of this question, of such vast importance to your Oratrix and to all of her people.

XV.

All of the bonds and obligations and other evidences of the indebtedness of the original State of Virginia outstanding and contracted on January 1, 1861, as stated in paragraph I of this bill, except a comparatively insignificant sum, not amounting to one per cent of the aggregate of those liabilities, have been taken up and are now actually held by your Oratrix, and she has the right to call upon West Virginia for a settlement with respect thereto. They are too numerous and involve too great a number of transactions running through many years, for it to be practicable to exhibit them here in detail, but the original bonds and other evidences of indebtedness so paid off or retired and now held by your Oratrix, will, when it shall be proper to do so, be exhibited to the Master, who shall take the accounts hereinafter prayed for.

XVI.

Of the evidences of indebtedness representing principal and interest of the liabilities of Virginia contracted before her dismemberment, those so paid off or retired by your Oratrix and now held by her in her own right, exclusive of the amounts represented by the certificates issued under the funding Acts aforesaid, amount in the aggregate, including the interest to be fairly computed thereon to this date, to a very large sum, considerably in excess of $25,000,000, by far the greater part of it being now, of course, on account of the interest computed thereon, at the rate of 6% per annum, the then legal rate in both States.

For all of these obligations taken up and payments made on account of the common debt, your Oratrix has in her own right, 17 a just claim against West Virginia for contribution to the extent of West Virginia's equitable liability therefor.

XVII.

In addition to the above bonds there were outstanding on the 1st day of January, 1861, certain obligations of the State of Virginia as guarantor upon some of the securities issued by internal improvement companies, which your Oratrix was called upon to provide for and settle. They were not comparatively of very large amount, however, and the questions involved in connection therewith can be stated and settled in the account hereinafter prayed for to be taken between the two states; and in such accounts your Oratrix will also ask to have included all such items of debit against the State of West Virginia on account of the property and moneys of the original State which were received or appropriated by West Virginia which may not have been specifically or accurately stated herein. These items of accounting between the two States are so numerous and varied and extend throughout a period of so many years' duration that it is impossible from the nature of the case to state all of them in this bill; and the account between the two States can only be taken and settled, and the balance due your Oratrix thereon ascertained, under the supervision of a Court of Equity.

XVIII.

Your Oratrix charges that the liability of the State of West Virginia, for a just and equitable proportion of the public debt of 18 Virginia, as of the time when the State of West Virginia was created, rests upon the following among many grounds which might be indicated here:

First. The area of the territory now known as the State of West Virginia formed about one-third of the territory of the Commonwealth of Virginia when this public debt was created, and its population included about one-third of that of the original State at the time of its dismemberment. And the State of West Virginia did, by the acquisition and appropriation of such territory, with the population thereof, assume therewith liability for a just and equitable proportion of the public debt created prior to the partition of such territory.

Second. The liability of West Virginia for a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, as it existed prior to the creation and erection of the State of West Virginia, forms part of her very political existence, and is an essential constituent of her fundamental law as shown in the said ordinance adopted at Wheeling on the 20th day of August, 1861, in which the method of ascertaining her liability on account of said debt is prescribed. And this liability is imbedded in the Constitution under which she was admitted as a State into the Federal Union, and was one of the conditions under which she was created a State and admitted into the Union.

Third. The State of West Virginia has further, by the repeated enactments and joint resolution of her legislature, recognized her liability for a just proportion of this debt.

Fourth. The State of West Virginia has, since her creation as a State, received from the State of Virginia real and personal property, amounting in value to many millions of dollars, and held and enjoyed the same, but upon expressed condition that she should 19 duly account for the same in a settlement thereafter to be had between her and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Fifth. While the transfer of this property, real and personal, and also of certain moneys of the Commonwealth of Virginia, purport to have been made to the State of West Virginia by the Act of "The Restored Government of Virginia," there were in fact represented in said "Restored Government" and in the legislature thereof no other people and no other territory than that which then, as now, constitute the State of West Virginia.

XIX.

The General Assembly of Virginia being anxious to effect a settlement of the portion of the common debt of the undivided State which remained unadjusted, and if possible to bring this about with the friendly co-operation and concurrence of West Virginia, adopted: "A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia, and for the application of whatever may be received from the State of West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same," approved March 6, 1894. A copy of this resolution will be hereinafter shown as an exhibit to this bill, to be read as a part thereof.

Under this resolution a commission of seven members was appointed for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects expressed therein.

The efforts made by this Commission, acting under the above resolution to bring about a settlement with West Virginia having proved ineffectual, and the overture which the Commission, with the active co-operation of the Honorable Charles T. O'Ferral, the then governor of the Commonwealth made to the authorities of West Virginia for the purpose of bringing about a friendly adjustment having been declined, the General Assembly of Virginia passed the Act approved March 6, 1900, entitled "An Act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises," the purpose of which Act is sufficiently set forth in its title, and a copy of the Act will also be hereinafter shown as one of the exhibits herewith filed.

XX.

The Commission acting under said last mentioned Act made most earnest efforts to bring about an amicable adjustment of the matters hereinbefore set forth with West Virginia, but all of their efforts in that behalf proved ineffectual and unavailing. An application to this Honorable Court being thus left as the only alternative for Virginia, this suit has been instituted at the request and direction of the said Commission, and in strict conformity with the provisions of the said Act of March 6, 1900, all of which will be more fully and completely shown by the Report of the said Commission dated January 6, 1906, made to the General Assembly of Virginia now in session, a copy of which Report and the documents accompanying the same, are referred to therein, will be exhibited as a part of this Bill.

XXI.

In order that the matters hereinbefore referred to may be more fully shown to the Court, your Oratrix files herewith certain exhibits (seven in number) which she pray may be read a- part of this bill, to-wit:

21 Exhibit Number 1. A copy of the said Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, of March 30, 1871, entitled an Act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt.

Exhibit Number 2. A copy of the Act of the same General Assembly of March 28, 1879, entitled an Act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt.

Exhibit Number 3. A copy of the Act of February 14, 1882, of the same General Assembly, entitled an Act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular payment of the interest thereon.

Exhibit Number 4. A copy of the said Act of the same General Assembly, approved February 20, 1892, entitled an Act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an Act entitled, etc.

Exhibit Number 5. A copy of the said Joint Resolution of the said General Assembly of March 6, 1894, providing for the appointment of a Commission.

Exhibit Number 6. A copy of the said Act of March 6, 1900, under which the powers of the said Commission were enlarged and the institution of this suit authorized.

Exhibit Number 7. Showing amounts paid off since January 1, 1861, or assumed and now carried by Virginia on account of the old debt of the undivided State.

Exhibit Number 8. A copy of the report of the said Virginia Commission made to the General Assembly of that State, dated January 6, 1906, together with the accompanying papers.

22 XXII.

Forasmuch, therefore, as your Oratrix is remediless save in this form and forum, and to the end that the State of West Virginia may be duly served, through her Governor and Attorney-General, with a copy of this bill, your Oratrix prays that the said State of West Virginia may be made a party defendant to this bill, and required to answer the same, that all proper accounts may be taken to determine and ascertain the balance due from the State of West Virginia to your Oratrix, in her own right and as trustee as aforesaid; that the principles upon which such accounting shall be had may be ascertained and declared, and a true and proper settlement made of the matters and things above recited and set forth; that such accounting be had and settlement made under the supervision and direction of this Court by such Auditor or Master as may by the Court be selected and empowered to that end, and that proper and full reports of such accounting and settlement may be made to this Court; that the State of West Virginia may be required to produce before such Auditor or Master, so to be appointed, all such official entries, documents, reports and proceedings as may be among her public records or official files and may tend to show the facts and the true and actual state of accounts growing out of the matters and things above recited and set forth, in order to a full and correct settlement and adjustment of the accounts between the two States; that this Court will adjudicate and determine the amount due to your Oratrix by the State of West Virginia in the premises; and that all such other and further and general relief be granted unto your Oratrix in the premises as the nature of her case may require or to equity may seem meet.

And your Oratrix will ever pray, &c.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Attorney General of Virginia.
HOLMES CONRAD.

vs.
STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

24 EXHIBIT NUMBER 1.

CHAP. 282—An Act to Provide for the Funding and Payment of the Public Debt.

Approved March 30, 1871.

(Acts G. A. of Va. 1870-1, p. 378.)

Whereas in the formation of the state of West Virginia, there were included within its boundaries about one-third of the territory and population of the state of Virginia; and whereas, in the ordinance authorizing the organization of said state, it was provided that the said state shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, which provision has not yet been fulfilled, although repeated and earnest efforts in that behalf have been made by this state, and will continue to be made as long as may be necessary; and whereas the people of this commonwealth are anxious for the prompt liquidation of her portion of said debt, which is estimated to be two-thirds of the same; and whereas it has been suggested that the authorities of West Virginia may prefer to pay that state's portion of said debt to the holders thereof and not to this state, as the constitution of this state provides; now, therefore, to enable the state of West Virginia to settle her proportion of said debt with the holders thereof, and to prevent any complications or difficulties which might be interposed to any other manner of settlement, and for the purpose of promptly restoring the credit of Virginia by providing for the prompt and certain payment of the interest upon her proportion of said debt as the same shall become due; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That from and after the passage of this act, no bond, certificate, or other evidence of indebtedness, shall be issued for any portion of the debt of this state; nor shall any interest be paid upon any part or portion of said debt, except as hereinafter provided.

25 2. The owners of any of the bonds, stocks or interest certificates heretofore issued by this state, which are recognized by its constitution and laws as legal, except the five per centum dollar bonds, and what are known as sterling bonds, but including the stock of the old James river company, and the bonds of the James river and Kanawha company guaranteed by this state, may fund two-thirds of the amount of the same, together with two-thirds of the interest due or to become due thereon, to the first day of July, eighteen hundred seventy-one, in six per centum coupon or registered bonds of this state of the denominations of one hundred, and multiples thereof, dated that day, and to become due and payable in thirty-four years after date, but redeemable at the pleasure of the state, after ten years, the interest to be payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year. The bonds shall be made payable to order or bearer, and the coupons to bearer, at the treasury of the state and bonds payable to order may be exchanged for bonds payable to bearer, and registered bonds may be exchanged for coupon bonds, or vice versa, at the option of the holder. The coupons shall be payable semi-annually, and be receivable at and after maturity for all taxes, debts, dues, and demands due the state, which shall be so expressed on their face; and the bonds shall bear on their face a declaration to the effect that the redemption thereof is secured by a sinking fund provided for by the law under which they are issued. The holders of the five per centum dollar bonds may in like manner fund the same in like bonds, bearing, however, five instead of six per centum interest. In the funding herein authorized, for any fractional sums less than one hundred dollars, certificates shall be issued bearing the same date and rate of interest, and payable at the same time as the bonds issued under this section; which certificates, in sums of one hundred dollars or any multiple thereof, shall be exchangeable for bonds of the character

26 herein authorized to be issued; and new certificates of like character may be issued for any fractional sums less than one hundred dollars which may remain in making such exchange.

3. Upon the surrender of the old and the acceptance of the new bond for two-thirds of the amount due as provided in the last preceding section, there shall be issued to the owner or owners, for the other one-third of the amount due upon the old bond, stock, or certificate of indebtedness so surrendered, a certificate bearing the same date as the new bond, setting forth the amount of the bond which is not funded as provided in the last preceding section, and that payment of said amount with interest thereon at the rate prescribed in the bond surrendered, will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the states of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to the public debt of the state of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment, and that the state of Virginia holds said bonds, so far as unfunded, in trust for the holder or his assignees; and provided further, that until such final settlement with West Virginia, there shall be paid upon what are known as sterling bonds, in the manner now prescribed by law, two-thirds of the interest accruing on the principal of said bonds, after July first, eighteen hundred and seventy-one; and for the interest accrued to said date certificates dated on that day shall be issued, drawing the same rate of interest as the bonds, two-thirds of which shall be paid as provided to be paid on the bonds. The remaining one-third of unpaid interest, both on the bonds and certificates, shall be payable in money, and the principal of said certificates in new sterling bonds of the same character as the old, in accordance with such final settlement as shall be made with West Virginia.

4. The treasurer is hereby authorized and directed to forthwith cause to be prepared, engraved or lithographed, registered bonds and bonds with coupons and certificates of the character mentioned in the second and third sections of this act; and when prepared, shall commence the issuance of the same as herein provided.

The bonds and certificates shall be signed by the treasurer, and countersigned by the second auditor; the coupons shall be signed by the treasurer, or a fac simile of his signature shall be stamped or engraved thereon. Each denomination of bonds herein authorized to be issued, both registered and coupon, shall constitute a series, and the bonds of each series shall be numbered from one upwards, as they are issued; and the coupons in addition to the number of the bond to which they are attached, shall be numbered from one to sixty-seven. Each class of certificates authorized to be issued by this act shall be numbered, respectively, from one upwards, and in addition thereto, each certificate shall contain the number and date of the bond or certificate on account of which it is issued. Each bond, certificate of stock, and interest certificate, to be funded as herein provided, shall first be delivered to the second auditor, who shall calculate and determine the amount for which a bond shall be issued, and the amounts for which certificates shall be issued, under the second and third sections of this act; which calculations shall be endorsed, dated and signed by him on the back of such bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate, and he shall cause a proper registry thereof, together with the date and number of the bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate, to be made and kept in his office. After such endorsement and registration, the second auditor shall deliver the bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate, to the treasurer, who shall thereupon deliver to him a bond or bonds and certificates of the character named in the second and third sections of this act, duly signed and numbered, for the several amounts, respectively, according to said endorsement. The second auditor, after making a proper registry of said bond or bonds, and certificates to be kept in his office, shall deliver the same to the person entitled to them. The treasurer shall, by proper endorsement, written or stamped, upon each bond, certificate of stock, or interest cer-

28 tificate so surendered and delivered to him, cancel the same, and endorse thereon the date of such cancellation, and shall preserve the same in his office until otherwise directed by law. The treasurer shall also have made and preserved in his office a proper registry of every bond and certificate delivered by him to the second auditor, and whenever a coupon bond shall be issued payable to the order of any person or firm, he shall secure and preserve the signature of such person or firm as a part of such registry whenever practicable.

5. Whatever sum may be realized from the claims of this state against Selden, Withers and Company, and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal company, and from the sale or disposition of the stocks and bonds, and debts owned by the state in and against any and all railway and other improvement companies, and all sums which may be realized from the claims of this state against the United States, and from any sales of any real estate now belonging to the commonwealth, shall be paid into the treasury of the state to the credit of the sinking fund hereby authorized and created. In the year eighteen hundred and eighty, and annually thereafter, until all the bonds issued under and by authority of this act shall have been paid, there shall be levied and collected, the same as other taxes, a tax of two cents on the one hundred dollars of the assessed valuation of all the property, personal, real and mixed, in the state, which shall be paid into the treasury of the state to the credit of the sinking fund. The treasurer, the auditor of public accounts, and second auditor are hereby appointed commissioners of the sinking fund, and shall have (a majority acting) the control and management thereof, and shall annually, or oftener, apply whatever sum or sums may be to the credit of the sinking fund, to the purchase and redemption of bonds issued by authority of this act.

6. All necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this act shall be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the certificate of the correctness of the same, signed by the 29 treasurer and second auditor, and approved by the governor.

7. This act shall be in force from and after its passage.

30 EXHIBIT NUMBER 2.

CHAP. 24—An Act to Provide a Plan of Settlement of the Public Debt.

Approved March 28, 1879.

(Acts G. A. of Va. 1878-9, p. 264.)

Whereas it is believed by the general assembly that the rate of interest heretofore agreed to be paid by the state on the public debt is greater than can be borne without destroying the industrial interests of the state; and whereas the council of foreign bondholders of London, England, and the funding association of the United States of America, limited, have, in view of this belief, expressed their willingness to jointly endeavor to obtain the consent of the creditors to an abatement in the rate of interest; and whereas it is highly expedient, in the best interest of the state, to secure an amicable settlement with the creditors by which the credit of the state may be restored and enhanced, and the aggregate amount of interest payable by the state reduced within limits which will not be too onerous to the population; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That to provide for funding the debt of the state, the governor is hereby authorized to create bonds of the state, registered and coupon, dated the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, the principal payable forty years thereafter, bearing interest at the rate of three per centum per annum for ten years, and at the rate of four per centum per annum for twenty years, and at the rate of five per centum per annum for ten years, payable in the cities of Richmond, New York or London, as hereinafter provided, on the first days of July and January of each year, until the principal is redeemed. The state shall have the option of redeeming any or all of said bonds by the payment of principal and accrued interest at any time after the expiration of ten years from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, on public notice to the holders of its purpose to make such redemption. The coupons on said bonds shall 31 be receivable at and after maturity for all taxes, debts, dues and demands due the state, and this shall be expressed on their face. The holder of any registered bond shall be entitled to receive from the treasurer of the state a certificate for any interest thereon, due and unpaid, and such certificate shall be receivable for all taxes, dues and demands due the state, and this shall be expressed on the face of the registered bonds and on the face of such certificate. All obligations created under this act shall be forever exempt from all taxation, direct or indirect, by the state, or by any county or corporation therein, and this shall be expressed on the face of the bonds. The said bonds shall be of the denominations of one hundred dollars, five hundred dollars, and one thousand dollars, at the option of the creditors respectively, and the bonds as well as their coupons shall be payable at Richmond and New York, or if desired, may be made payable in sterling at London, at the fixed rate of exchange of one pound sterling for five dollars. The bonds hereby authorized shall be issued only in exchange for the outstanding debt of the state, as hereinafter provided.

2. For purposes of designation, the outstanding indebtedness of the state is divided into two classes, as follows, to wit:

Class I, which shall be taken to include all tax-receivable coupon bonds, and all registered bonds and fractional certificates which are convertible under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, into such tax-receivable coupon bonds.

Class II, which shall be taken to include all bonds funded under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, as amended by the act approved March seventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-two; and also two-thirds of the face value, with two-thirds of the unpaid accrued interest up to the first of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, on all unfunded bonds, including sterling bonds.

3. The outstanding indebtedness of the state shall be 32 funded in the new bonds, to be issued under this act, as follows: Bonds shall be presented for exchange with all coupons attached maturing after the date of presentation, and shall be exchanged at the face value of said bonds, dollar for dollar, for the new bonds, with all coupons attached maturing after the date of such presentation: Provided that the proportion of Class II, refunded, shall never exceed in amount one-third (⅓) of the total amount refunded, until eighteen million dollars of Class I have been retired. The new bonds to be issued may be coupon or registered, at the option of the holders, and at the like option coupon bonds may at any time be converted into registered bonds.

4. All due and unpaid interest may be funded under the provisions of this act at the rate of fifty cents on the dollar, and shall be fundable at that rate under the third section of this act, and taken, under the provisions of said section, in lieu of bonds of Class II.

5. If on or before the first day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, the council of foreign bondholders and the funding association of the United States of America aforesaid, shall file with the governor their assent to and acceptance of the terms of this act, the same shall be taken to be a contract between the state and the said corporations, and the governor shall forthwith provide for the preparation of the bonds provided for by this act. The said corporations may present for funding, and in the proportions hereinbefore provided, at least eight million of dollars of the outstanding obligations of the state prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty; and during each period of six months, from and after the thirty-first — December, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, they may present an additional amount of at least five millions of dollars, until the whole debt is funded; but any excess over said amounts, which may be presented during any of said periods may be estimated in requirement for the succeeding six months. So long as the said corporations shall present for funding the obligations afore-33 said, in the amounts and in the periods aforesaid, they shall have the exclusive privilege of funding the outstanding debt under the provisions of this act: Provided that the said corporations shall arrange to receive the outstanding bonds at the city of Richmond, when the holders thereof shall so desire. But if the said corporations shall fail to file with the governor their assent and agreement as aforesaid by the first day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, or shall fail to present for funding the outstanding bonds in the proportions and amounts and during the periods hereinbefore specified, then the governor may, in his discretion, make a like contract with responsible parties for the funding of the debt of the state under this act.

6. The rules prescribed under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, in respect to preparing, signing and issuing the new bonds and coupons, regulating the same, and in taking in, cancelling and registering the old bonds, shall be observed by the officers of the treasury in the execution of this act, except so far as the same be modified by the provisions of this act: Provided that all bonds and certificates which may be necessary to be printed, shall be printed from a plate which shall be the property of the commonwealth, and shall remain in the keeping or under the control of the second auditor. Whenever an obligation of the state shall be presented to the second auditor to be funded under this act, he shall note the fact and date on the proper register in his office, shall punch a hole through the name of the second auditor, signed or countersigned thereto, and shall issue his warrant upon the treasurer for the new obligations required. There shall be endorsed upon the said warrant a description of the old obligations, and the calculation of principal and interest for which the new obligations are to be issued. The said old obligations and warrant shall be carried by the second auditor to the treasurer, who shall note the fact and date of funding on the proper register in his office, and if he shall find the warrant correctly drawn, shall sign the proper obligations to be issued, register the same in his office, clip therefrom the past-due coupons and punch the same, and deliver the said obligations to the second auditor, taking his receipt therefor upon his warrant. The second auditor shall countersign the obligations so delivered to him, register the same in his office, and deliver the same to the proper person, taking his receipt therefor. The treasurer shall jacket and file in his office the warrant upon which the new obligations were issued, with the surrendered obligations attached to said warrant, and shall number and date the jacket so as to make it easy for reference. But in cancelling and registering the bonds as above directed, in every bond and coupon surrendered under this act holes shall be punched in one or more places, and in such a manner as to render a new funding of the same impossible, and every bond and coupon so cancelled shall be filed for reference.

34

7. The owners of all classes of bonds mentioned in this act, who shall exchange their securities for the bonds created under this act, and who shall not have yet received certificates representing the remaining one-third of their principal and interest, due and payable by the state of West Virginia, shall receive certificates of a like character to those issued under the act of March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, when they make such exchange; and the state of Virginia will negotiate or aid the creditors holding all of such certificates issued under this act, or previous acts, in negotiating with the state of West Virginia for an amicable settlement of the claims of such creditors against the state of West Virginia. The acceptance of the said certificates for West Virginia's one-third, issued under this act, shall be taken and held as a full and absolute release of the state of Virginia from all liability on account of the said certificates.

8. The general assembly will, by necessary and appropriate legislation, provide for the prompt payment of the interest on the bonds issued under this act.

9. In the year eighteen hundred and eighty-five, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under and by authority of 35 this act are paid, there shall be levied and collected the same as, and together with other taxes, a tax of two cents on the one hundred dollars of the assessed valuation of all the property, personal, real and mixed, in the state, which shall be paid into the treasury of the state to the credit of the sinking fund. The treasurer, the auditor of public accounts, and second auditor are hereby appointed commissioners of the sinking fund, and shall have (a majority acting) the control and management thereof, and shall annually, or oftener, apply whatever sum or sums may be to the credit of the sinking fund to the purchase and redemption of bonds issued under this act. All the certificates of debt which shall be funded, redeemed or purchased under this act shall be cancelled by the second auditor, and delivered by him to the treasurer of the commonwealth at the time of payment therefor, who shall carefully preserve the same in his office. All certificates of debt acquired under the operation of the sinking fund, created by the act of March thirty, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, shall also be cancelled and delivered.

10. Executors, administrators, and others acting as fiduciaries, may invest in the bonds issued under this act, and the same shall be considered a lawful investment.

11. The treasurer shall, upon the first days of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and January, eighteen hundred and eighty, and upon the same days in each year, pay or cause to be paid to the holders thereof the half-yearly interest then due upon each of the bonds of the commonwealth issued under this act.

12. Whenever there shall not be a sufficient amount of money in the treasury of the state to meet the accruing interest on the said bonds promptly, the auditor is hereby authorized and directed, by and with the advice of the governor of Virginia, to raise by temporary loan, to be returned out of the accruing revenues of the state, a sum sufficient to enable him to meet promptly the said interest as 36 it accrues. And in case the auditor shall not be able to raise a sufficient sum for the said purpose by loans, he is hereby authorized and directed to issue non-interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness of this state, to be signed by himself and countersigned by the treasurer, and properly registered in the offices of the auditor and treasurer, for the sum of one dollar and multiples thereof, the same to be printed from plates, which shall be the property of the state, and to sell the same at not less than a minimum price to be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund, which shall not be less than seventy-five cents upon the dollar. The said certificates shall be receivable for all taxes, debts, dues and demands due the state, and this shall be expressed on their face. The amount of such certificates which may be issued at any one time shall be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund, and the proceeds of the sale thereof shall be devoted exclusively to the payment of interest as aforesaid. The auditor shall report regularly to the general assembly the amount and character of certificates issued under this act, and the net proceeds thereof. In case the auditor shall not be able to borrow the sums needed as aforesaid without security, he shall be and is hereby authorized to hypothecate such amounts of the said certificates as may be fixed on by the commissioners of the sinking fund, at a value to be fixed as aforesaid, but in no case to be at a less value than seventy-five cents upon the dollar; and in case of a sale of said certificates, whether they may have been so hypothecated or not, they shall be offered for sale in suitable and proportionate amounts in the different counties, towns and cities of this state, so far as practicable, under regulations to be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund. The said certificates shall be received by the treasurer of the state, and be cancelled on receipt thereof, under the same regulations and prohibitions now existing in relation to coupons for interest on the public debt, except that no tax shall be deducted therefrom, and the fact of their cancellation shall be noted on the said registers.

13. The act approved March fourteenth, eighteen hundred
37 and seventy-eight, and all acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

14. This act shall be in force from its passage.

38 EXHIBIT NUMBER 3.

CHAP. 84.—An act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon.

Approved February 14, 1882.

Preamble.—Whereas to the end which this act comprehends, a full statement of the debt is essential; and whereas the following has been carefully made up from the records of the second auditor's office of the State, it is confidently submitted as presenting a true state of the account between the State and her creditors—the account is as follows:

		Interest.	Principal.
	Principal outstanding at this date:
1831, January 1st.	Sterling debt bearing 5 per cent. interest	$1,973,000 00
	Dollar debt bearing 6 per cent. interest	29,533,582 90
	Debt guaranteed bearing 6 per cent. interest	294,130 00
	Total principal		$31,800,712 90
	Interest:
	Past due and uncalled for at this date	101,023 63
	Maturing at this date, January 1st, 1861	944,156 38
	Total interest	$1,045,183 01
1863. July 1st.	The State of West Virginia was formally admitted into the Union June 20th, 1863. The property and resources of Virginia, upon which the above debt has been founded, were, by this partition of the old State, reduced, one-third of her territory and one-fifth of her population going to form West Virginia. This and the consequences of war to her and her people made a loss of full $500,000,000 of property, and her taxable values were reduced from $723,000,000 to $336,000,000, and her annual revenues from over $4,000,000 to $2,500,000.

1863, July 1st.	Two-thirds of the above debt, principal and interest, to this date is assumed as Virginia's equitable portion, in consideration of the partition of her territory, population, and resources, upon the well established principle that debt in such cases follows territory. Upon that basis, Virginia's portion of the debt of the entire State is—

41 And whereas by this account it appears that Virginia owes her creditors, as of the first — July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, including the bonds held by the Literary fund and arrears of interest thereon cast to such date, twenty-one million, thirty-five thousand, three hundred and seventy seven dollars and fifteen cents; and that she may cause to be issued her own bonds for the same, and provide for the certain payment of interest thereon; that is for her equitable share of the bonds known as consols, and here designated as class A, and whereof there are outstanding fourteen million three hundred and sixty-nine thousand nine hundred and seventy-four dollars and eighty-one cents; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as ten-forties, and here designated as class B, and whereof there are outstanding eight million five hundred and seventeen thousand six hundred dollars; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as peeler, and here designated as class C, and whereof there are outstanding two million three hundred and ninety-four thousand three hundred and five dollars and twelve cents; and for her equitable share of the interest thereon, designated as class D, and whereof there is now in arrears nine hundred and twenty-eight thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven dollars and forty-five cents, and counted to the first of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, makes the amount of such interest then to be in arrears, one million, seventy-two thousand five hundred and forty-five dollars and seventy-five cents; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as unfunded bonds—dollar and sterling—here designated as class E, and whereof there are now outstanding, computed at two-thirds, three million seven hundred and seventy-three thousand four hundred and ninety-three dollars and sixty-eight cents; and for her equitable share of the interest thereon now in arrears, two million six hundred and thirty-six thousand four hundred and forty-four dollars and thirty-four cents, and counted to the first of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, making as of that date (two hundred and twenty-six thousand four hundred and nine dollars and sixty-two cents more) the sum of two million eight hundred and sixty-two thousand eight hundred and fifty-three dollars and ninety-six cents, and here designated as class F; and for her equitable share of the bonds held by the commissioners of the Literary fund, whereof there are one million four hundred and twenty-eight thousand two hundred and forty-five dollars and twenty-five cents; and whereas the rate of interest which any people can safely undertake to pay must be determined by the measure of their productive resources; and whereas these have long been burdened by a rate of taxation which is conceded to be as high as can be endured; and whereas the means of prompt and certain payment should be apparent to the creditor, while the people have assurance for the support of government and the maintenance of their schools, as required by the constitution; and whereas the net revenues of the state, remaining and so derived, after providing for the proper and gradual liquidation of the balance of the 42 moneys heretofore diverted from the public free school fund, after liquidating gradually the arrearages to the Literary fund, and leaving some small margin for the immediate and subsequent exigencies, which are, and are likely to be demanded by the public welfare—notably in respect of the humane institutions now inadequate to the proper accommodation of that unfortunate class of every population—do not warrant the assumption of a larger rate of interest than three per centum upon the full amount of Virginia's equitable share of the debt of the old and entire state, as the same is ascertained and now formally declared by the foregoing account; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the state, be, and they are hereby empowered and directed to create bonds, registered and coupon, to such extent as may be necessary to comply with the provisions of this act.

2. The said bonds shall be dated July first, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and be payable at the office of the treasurer of the state on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and thirty-two; provided that the state may, at any time and from time to time, after July first, nineteen hundred, redeem any part of the same, principal and interest, at par. In case of such redemption before maturity, the bonds to be paid, shall be determined by lot by said board of commissioners, and notice of the bonds so selected to be paid, shall be given in a newspaper published at Richmond, New York, and London, England, when interest from and after ninety days from the date of such publication in London, shall cease upon the bonds so designated to be paid.

3. The form of the bond shall be as follows, to-wit:

The commonwealth of Virginia acknowledges herself indebted to —— —— (in the case of a coupon bond to the bearer, and in the case of a registered bond, inserting the name of the person or corporation) in the sum of —— dollars, which she promises to pay in lawful money of the United States at the office of the treasurer of the state, Richmond, Virginia, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and thirty-two, with the option of payment at par, principal, and interest, before maturity, at any time after July first, nineteen hundred; and interest at the office of the treasurer of the state, in such lawful money, on the first days of January and July, at the rate of three per centum per annum until paid (according to the tenor of the annexed coupons, in the case of coupon bonds).

In testimony whereof, witness the signature of the treasurer and the counter-signature of the second auditor, hereto affixed according to law.

—— ——, Treasurer.
—— ——, Second Auditor.

4. The form of coupon for coupon bonds shall be as follows, to-wit:

43 No. —— (of bond).

The commonwealth of Virginia will pay to bearer —— dollars, in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer, Richmond, Virginia, on the first day of January and July, alternately—the first coupon to be payable January first eighteen hundred and eighty-three.

—— ——, Treasurer.

$——.

Each coupon to be impressed on the back with its number, in the order of maturity, from one forward.

5. The said board of commissioners are authorized to issue such bonds, in denominations of five hundred and one thousand dollars, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, each denomination to be of different tint: Provided that registered bonds may be issued of any denomination, multiple of one hundred; all registered bonds to be of the same tint; and they are authorized and directed to issue such bonds, registered or coupon, in exchange for the outstanding evidences of debt hereinbefore enumerated, including the bonds held by the literary fund, as follows, that is to say:

(a) For her equitable share of class A, at the rate of fifty-three per centum; that is to say, fifty-three dollars of the bonds authorized under this act, (principal and accrued interest, at par, from the preceding period of maturity to the date of exchange,) are to be given for every one hundred dollars, face, principal and accrued interest from the preceding semi-annual period of maturity to the date of exchange of such evidences of debt, and for any interest which may be past due and unpaid upon the same, funded bonds issued under this act may be given dollar for dollar.

(b) For her equitable share of class B, at the rate of sixty per centum, reckoning and accounting for any interest, as provided in the case of class A.

(c) For her equitable share of class C, at the rate of sixty-nine per centum, reckoning any current interest, at the date of exchange, as in the cases of classes A and B, and accounting for the same as provided in class D.

(e) For her equitable share of class E, at the rate of sixty-nine per centum, reckoning any current interest, at the date of exchange, as in the cases of classes A, B, and C, and accounting for the same as provided in class F.

(g) For her equitable share of the bonds of the Literary fund, as in the case of class C; her equitable share of the arrearages of interest—three hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred seventy dollars—to be paid in money.

6. For all balances of such indebtedness, constituting West Virginia's share of the old debt, principal and interest, in the settlement of Virginia's equitable share as aforesaid, the said board of sinking fund commissioners shall issue a certificate, as follows:

44 No. ——.

The commonwealth of Virginia has this day discharged her equitable share of the (registered or coupon, as the case may be) bond for —— dollars, held by ——, dated the —— day of ——, and numbered ——, leaving a balance of —— dollars, with interest from ——, to be accounted for by the state of West Virginia, without recourse upon this commonwealth.

Done at the capitol of the state of Virginia, this ——day of ——, eighteen ——.

—— ——, Second Auditor.
—— ——, Treasurer.

7. The said board of commissioners are empowered to issue for any fractional part of one hundred dollars of the indebtedness funded under this act, the following certificate:

Fractional Certificate.

Register No. —. Transaction No. —.

This certificate entitles the holder hereof to the sum of —— dollars, fundable at its face in the bonds of the commonwealth of Virginia, authorized by an act approved —— day of ——, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, when presented with certificates of like tenor or in conjunction with other evidences of debt fundable under said act in amounts of one hundred dollars and multiples thereof.

Done at the capitol of Virginia, this —— day of ——, eighteen hundred and eighty ——.

—— ——, Second Auditor.
—— ——, Treasurer.

The certificates so issued, shall be registered by the second auditor in a register kept for that specific purpose, giving the date and number of the transaction to which it relates, the amount of the same, and the name of the person or corporation to whom it was issued; and as such certificates are refunded, the same shall be canceled and preserved as herein provided in respect to the evidences of debt refunded.

8. All the bonds and certificates of debt and evidences of past-due and unpaid interest taken in under the provisions of this act, shall be canceled by the treasurer in the presence of the board of commissioners of the sinking fund as the same are required, and by the treasurer the same shall be carefully preserved until such time as the General Assembly may otherwise direct. A schedule of the bonds, certificates and other evidences of debt so canceled, from time to time, shall be certified by said board and filed with the treasurer for preservation.

9. All the coupons and registered bonds and fractional certificates issued under this act, shall be separately registered by the second auditor in books kept for the specific purpose; and in each case giving the date, number and amount of the obligations issued, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued, and the date, number, amount and description of the bond, bonds or indebtedness 45 surrendered.

10. The plates from which the bonds and fractional certificates authorized by this act, are printed, shall be the property of the commonwealth, and shall remain in the keeping of the said board of commissioners of the sinking fund.

11. In the year eighteen hundred and ninety, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under and by authority of this act are paid, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the state each year, two and one-quarter per centum upon the bonds at the time outstanding, which shall be paid into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund; and the commissioners of the said sinking fund shall, annually or oftener, apply the same to the redemption or purchase (at a rate not above par) of the bonds issued under this act, and the bonds so redeemed shall be canceled by the said board, and the same registered by the second auditor in a book to be kept for the purpose, giving the number, the date of issue, the character, the amount, and the owner at the time of purchase of the bonds so redeemed and canceled; and in case no such purchase of bonds can be made, then the amount which can be redeemed shall be called in by lot as provided in section two of this act.

12. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries, may exchange any state bonds held by them as provided, for bonds issued under this act, when so authorized by the court having jurisdiction in the premises, and the same, when so made, shall be considered a lawful investment.

13. The treasurer of the commonwealth is authorized and directed to pay the interest on the bonds issued under this act, as the same shall become due and payable, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

14. All necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this act, shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the warrants of the auditor of public accounts drawn upon the treasurer, on the order of the board of sinking fund commissioners.

15. That from and after the passage of this act, no bonds, certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness, shall be issued for any portion of the debt of this state, nor shall any interest be paid upon any part or portion of said debt, except as hereinbefore provided.

16. This act shall be in force from its passage.

46 EXHIBIT NUMBER 4.

CHAP. 325. An act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled An act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February 14, 1882.

Approved February 20, 1892.

(Acts G. A. of Va. 1891-92, p. 533.)

Whereas by a joint resolution of the general assembly of the state of Virginia, adopted on the third day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety, a commission was appointed on the part of Virginia to receive propositions for funding the debt of the state not funded under the act known as the "Riddleberger bill," approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, from a properly constituted representative of her creditors; and

Whereas said Virginia debt commission has submitted a report to the general assembly, wherein it appears that under a certain agreement, dated May twelfth, eighteen hundred and ninety, lodged with the Central trust company of New York, Frederick P. Olcott, William L. Bull, Henry Budge, Charles D. Dickey, junior, Hugh R. Garden, and John Gill, constituting a committee for certain of the creditors of Virginia, called the "Bondholders' committee," have proposed to said commission to surrender to the state in bulk not less than twenty-three million of dollars of the public debt, unfunded under said act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, in exchange for an issue of new bonds, as hereinafter specified, the same to be apportioned between the several classes of creditors by a tribunal which the said creditors have themselves ap-47 pointed; and that, in pursuance of said proposal an agreement has been entered into unanimously between the said commission and the said bondholders' committee, subject to approval by the general assembly, whereby in exchange for the said unsettled obligations of the state held by the public, which were issued prior to February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two (exclusive of evidences of debt held by the public institutions of the commonwealth pursuant to law and by the United States,) together with the interest thereon to July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, inclusive, aggregating about twenty-eight million of dollars, there shall be issued nineteen million of dollars of new bonds, dated July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and maturing one hundred years from said date, with interest thereon at the rate of two per centum per annum for ten years from said first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and three per centum per annum for ninety years thereafter to the date of maturity, said interest to be payable semi-annually; of which aggregate debt of about twenty-eight million of dollars the said bondholders' committee represent that they now hold and agree to surrender not less than twenty-three million of dollars; and

Whereas it is the desire and intention of the general assembly that a settlement of all the other outstanding obligations of the state (except those issued under the act of February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, the evidences of debt held by the public institutions of the state in pursuance of law and by the United States) as well as those controlled by the bondholders' committee, as aforesaid, shall be made under the provisions of this act; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That 48 the commissioners of the sinking fund, a majority of whom may act, be, and they are hereby, empowered and directed to create "listable" engraved bonds, registered and coupon, to such an extent as may be necessary to issue nineteen million of dollars of bonds in lieu of the twenty-eight million dollars of outstanding obligations, not funded under the act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, hereinbefore recited.

2. The said bonds shall be dated July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and be payable at the office of the treasurer of the state, or at such agency in the city of New York, as may be designated by the state, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and ninety-one, and shall bear interest from date, payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year, at the rate of two per centum per annum for the first ten years and three per centum per annum for the remaining ninety years; the said interest may be payable in Richmond, New York and London, or at either place, as may be designated by the state; provided that the state may at any time, and from time to time, after July first, nineteen hundred and six, redeem at par any part of the principal with accrued interest. In case of such redemption before maturity, the bonds to be paid shall be determined by lot by said commissioners of the sinking fund, and notice of the bonds so selected to be paid shall be given by publication beginning at least ninety days prior to an interest-due date, in a newspaper published in Richmond, Virginia, one in New York city, and one in London, England; and the interest from and after the next succeeding interest-due date shall cease upon the bonds so designated to be paid: provided that no registered bonds shall be so redeemed while there are any coupon bonds outstanding.

3. The form of the bonds shall be substantially as follows, to-wit:

Issued under act of assembly, approved — day of ——, eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

The commonwealth of Virginia acknowledges herself to be 49 indebted to —— —— (in case of a coupon bond to the bearer, an in case of a registered bond inserting the name of a person or corporation, or assigns), in the sum of —— dollars, which she promises to pay in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer of the state, or at such agency in the city of New York as may be designated by the state, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and ninety-one, with the option of payment at par with accrued interest, before maturity at any time after July first, nineteen hundred and six, and interest, at the office of the treasurer of the state, or at the agencies of the state in New York city and London, England, or at either place, as may from time to time be designated by the state, in such lawful money aforesaid, at the rate of two per centum per annum for ten years from the first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and at the rate of three per centum per annum thereafter until paid, payable semi-annually on January first and July first in each year (according to the tenor of the annexed coupon bearing the engraved signature of the treasurer of the commonwealth in case of coupon bonds.) And this obligation is hereby made exempt from any taxation by the said commonwealth of Virginia, or any county or municipal corporation thereof.

In testimony whereof, witness the signature of the treasurer and the countersignature of the second auditor of the commonwealth of Virginia, hereto affixed according to law.

—— ——, Second Auditor.

4. The form of coupon for coupon bonds shall be substantially as follows, to-wit:

Coupon No. —.

On the first day of —— the commonwealth of Virginia will pay to bearer —— dollars in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer of the state, or at the agencies of the state in New York city or London, England, or at either place, as may be designated by the state; the same being six months' interest on bond number —. —— dollars.

—— ——, Treasurer.

Each coupon to be impressed on the back with its number, in order of maturity, from number one consecutively.

5. Said commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized to issue coupon bonds in denominations of five hundred and one thousand dollars each, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: provided that registered bonds may be issued of the denominations of one hundred dollars, five hundred dollars, one thousand dollars, five thousand dollars, ten thousand dollars; and they are authorized and directed to issue said bonds, registered or coupon, in exchange for the said outstanding obligations up to and including July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one (exclusive of evidences of debt held by public institutions of the commonwealth as aforesaid and by the United States) as follows:

A. Said bondholders' committee may at any time on or before the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present to said commissioners for verification bonds and other evidences of debt, and coupons or other evidences of interest thereon, obligations of the state of Virginia, held by said committee, for exchange as aforesaid; and said commissioners shall determine whether the obligations so presented are genuine obligations of the state and whether the coupons or other evidences of interest represent interest accrued on such obligations (exclusive of evidences of debt held by public institutions of the commonwealth as aforesaid and by the United States).

B. Such of the obligations so presented for verification as may be determined by said commissioners to conform to the requirements of paragraph A hereof, shall be sealed in convenient packages as the examination proceeds. Each of the packages shall be num-51 bered, and upon each package shall be endorsed the amount and character of the obligations therein contained. Such endorsement on each package shall be signed by said commissioners or a majority thereof, and the package shall then be delivered to said committee or its agent. Said commissioners shall keep in a book to be provided for the purpose a record of the numbers of all such packages and of the amount and character of the obligations contained in each. Such obligations presented by said bondholders' committee as do not conform to the requirements of paragraph A hereof shall be returned to said committee; but said commissioners shall keep a record thereof in the book aforesaid.

C. After said bondholders' committee shall have presented to said commissioners for verification bonds and other evidences of debt and coupons, or other evidence of interest thereon accrued on or before July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, obligations of the state of Virginia, all conforming to the requirements of paragraph A hereof, as determined by said commissioners, and amounting in the aggregate to not less than twenty-three million of dollars, after deducting one-third of the principal and interest of such obligations as were issued prior to the thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, and also deducting one-third of the principal and interest of such obligations as were issued under the act approved the thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, as do include West Virginia's proportion, said bondholders' committee may at any time on or prior to the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present the same in bulk to said commissioners for surrender and exchange as herein provided. All coupons matured or to mature on coupon bonds after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, or coupons of like class and amount, or the face value thereof in cash, shall be surrendered with such bonds, the said cash to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered. And when the paid bondholders' committee shall have presented for exchange the obligations aforesaid to an amount of twenty-issue to said bondholders' committee a manuscript registered bond of the state of Virginia, substantially of the form of the bond hereinbefore specified, for the aggregate amount to which the said committee may be entitled for the obligations so presented under this act, the said bond to be exchangeable for the engraved bonds aforesaid of character and amount required by said committee, as prescribed in this act, and interest in the meantime on said manuscript bond shall be paid as herein provided for on the engraved bonds.

D. The said new bonds shall be issued to said bondholders' committee by the said commissioners in the following proportion, to-wit: nineteen thousand dollars of the new bonds to be created under this act shall be issued for every twenty-eight thousand of old outstanding obligations (principal and interest to July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one), as aforesaid, surrendered by said bondholders' committee to the said commissioners, after the deductions provided for in paragraph C of this section; and a proportionate amount of said new bonds shall be issued for smaller sums of said outstanding obligations so surrendered: provided that no certificates issued on account of the proportion of West Virginia of the obligations of the state shall be funded under this act. When said bondholders' committee shall have surrendered and exchanged such obligations as aforesaid to the amount of at least twenty-three million dollars, said committee may at any time thereafter up to and including the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present to said commissioners for verification, surrender, and exchange additional obligations, principal and interest, as aforesaid; all coupons matured or to mature on coupon bonds after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, or coupons of like class and amount, or the face value thereof 53 in cash, to be presented with such bonds, the cash, if paid, to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered. After said commissioners shall have determined that said obligations conform to the requirements of paragraph A hereof, said commissioners shall accept the obligations so presented for surrender and exchange by said committee, and shall deliver to said committee in exchange therefor new bonds issued under the provisions of this act in the same proportion as is set out in this paragraph of this section, after making the deductions provided for in paragraph C of this section.

E. If on making the exchange provided for in this act said committee shall be found entitled to a fractional amount or amounts less than one hundred dollars in addition to the new bonds delivered to it, said commissioners of the sinking fund shall issue to the committee a certificate or certificates for such amount or amounts. Such fractional certificates shall be exchangeable for the bonds authorized by this act to be issued in sums of one hundred dollars, or any multiple thereof, and certificates of like character shall be issued for any fractional amount which may remain in making the exchange.

6. For all balances of the indebtedness, constituting West Virginia's share of the old debt, principal and interest, in the settlement of Virginia's equitable share of the bonds authorized to be exchanged under this act, the said share having been heretofore determined by the commonwealth of Virginia, the said commissioners shall issue certificates substantially in the following form, viz:

No. —. The commonwealth of Virginia has this day discharged her equitable share of the (registered or coupon, as the case may be), bond for —— dollars, dated — day of ——, and No. —, leaving a balance of —— dollars, with interest from ——, to be accounted for to the holder of this certificate by the state of West Virginia, without recourse upon this commonwealth.

Done at the capitol of the state of Virginia, this — day 54 of ——, eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

—— ——, Second Auditor.
—— ——, Treasurer.

The certificates so issued under sections five and six of this act shall be recorded by the second auditor in a book kept for that purpose, giving the date and number of the transaction to which it refers, the amount of certificates, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued and delivered; and as such certificates, authorized by paragraph E, section five of this act, are exchanged, the same shall be cancelled and preserved as herein provided in respect to the evidences of debt refunded.

7. The commissioners of the sinking fund are hereby authorized and required to receive on deposit for verification, classification and exchange such of the said obligations of the state as may be presented to said commissioners; provided, that said commissioners shall not receive on deposit for the purposes aforesaid any outstanding obligations of the state which have been once deposited with the bondholders' committee, or may be hereafter deposited with them; the said verification and exchange for the new bonds of the obligations so deposited to be conducted in the same manner as hereinbefore provided with respect to the obligations deposited with the said bondholders' committee, and the said commissioners of the sinking fund shall issue to and distribute amongst said depositing creditors after they have fully complied with the terms of this act, in exchange for the obligations so deposited, bonds authorized by this act as follows, namely: to each of the several classes of said depositing creditors the same proportion, as nearly as may be found in their judgment practicable by the commissioners of the sinking fund, as the same class shall receive under the distribution which shall be made by the commission for the creditors represented by the bondholders' committee: provided that no obligations shall be received for such deposit after the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-55 two, nor shall any coupon bonds be received which do not have attached thereto all the coupons maturing after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one; but for any such coupons as may be missing, coupons of like class and amount, or the face value thereof in cash, may be received; the said cash, if paid, to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered; and each depositor shall, when he receives his distributive share of the said new issue of bonds, pay to the commissioners of the sinking fund three and one-half per centum in cash of the par value of the bonds received by him, or a commission equal in amount to that which may at any time hereafter be fixed by the said committee of bondholders upon any bonds deposited with them, not, however, in any case to exceed three and one-half per centum; and said sinking fund commissioners shall cover the fund thus received into the treasury of the commonwealth.

8. All the coupon and registered bonds issued under this act shall be separately recorded by the second auditor in books provided for the specific purpose, in each case giving the date, number, amount of obligations issued, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued, and the date, number, amount and description of the obligations surrendered.

9. All the bonds and certificates of debt, and evidences of past due and unpaid interest, taken in under the provisions of this act, shall be cancelled by the treasurer in the presence of the commissioners of the sinking fund, or a majority thereof, as the same are acquired, and by him carefully preserved, subject to disposition by the general assembly; a schedule of the bonds, certificates, and other evidences of debt so cancelled shall be certified by said commissioners and filed by the treasurer for preservation.

10. In the year nineteen hundred and ten, and annually thereafter, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the state each year up to and including the year nine-
56 teen hundred and twenty-nine, one-half of one per cent. upon the bonds issued under this act, as well as upon the outstanding bonds issued under act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and in the year nineteen hundred and thirty, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under this act and the said act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, are paid, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the state each year one per cent. upon the outstanding bonds issued under the aforesaid acts, which shall be paid into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund, and the commissioners of the sinking fund shall annually, or oftener, apply the same to the redemption or purchase (at a rate not above par and accrued interest) of the bonds issued under the aforesaid acts, and the bonds so redeemed shall be cancelled by the said commissioners and the same registered by the second auditor in a book to be kept for that purpose, giving the number and date of issue, the character, the amount, and the owner at the time of purchase, of the bonds so redeemed and cancelled; and in case no such purchase of bonds can be made, then the amount which can be redeemed shall be called in by lot, as provided in section two of this act. All bonds of the state issued under the provisions of the act aforesaid, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and now held by said commissioners of the sinking fund, shall, as soon as at least fifteen million of dollars of new bonds shall have been issued and delivered pursuant to the provisions of this act, be cancelled by said commissioners and preserved in the office of the treasurer of the commonwealth.

11. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries may participate in the settlement of the debt herein specified in the manner hereinbefore provided, and such action shall be deemed a lawful investment of their trust fund. Executors; administrators and others acting as fiduciaries may invest in the bonds issued under this act, and the same shall be considered a lawful investment.

57 12. All coupons heretofore tendered for taxes and held by said tax-payers in pursuance of such tender, shall be received in payment of the taxes for which they were tendered, and upon their delivery to the proper collector or the amount thereof in money, the judgments obtained against the said tax-payers for such taxes shall be marked satisfied: Provided the said tax payers shall have paid in money and not in coupons the costs of said judgments. All coupons heretofore tendered for taxes and held by the officers of the commonwealth for verification, in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, shall be received in payment of the taxes for which they were tendered, and the money collected for such taxes returned to the parties from whom it was received: Provided the said tax-payers shall have paid in money, and not in coupons, all costs incurred in legal proceedings to verify said coupons.

13. The treasurer of the commonwealth is authorized and directed to pay the interest on the bonds issued under this act as the same shall become due and payable out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

14. The plates from which the bonds and fractional certificates authorized by this act are printed shall be the property of the commonwealth.

15. All necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this act shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated on the warrants of the auditor of public accounts, drawn upon the treasury on the order of the commissioners of the sinking fund.

16. The act entitled "an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon," approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and the amendments

58 thereto, to-wit: an act entitled "an act to declare the true intent and meaning of, and to amend and re-enact section five of chapter eighty-four of acts eighteen hundred and eighty-one and eighteen hundred eighty-two, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two," approved August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and eighty-four; and the act entitled "an act to amend and re-enact an act approved August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, entitled an act to declare the true intent and meaning of, and to amend and re-enact section five of chapter eighty-four of acts of eighteen hundred and eighty-one and eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two," approved November twenty-ninth, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, are hereby repealed.

17. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized, if it shall seem to them for the best interest of the commonwealth, to make one extension of the time for the funding of the said twenty-eight million of dollars of outstanding evidences of debt for a period not exceeding six months from the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

18. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized to exchange coupon bonds issued under this act into registered bonds in the denominations hereinbefore provided, and to arrange for the transfer of registered bonds. For every bond so issued in exchange a fee of fifty cents shall be charged by, and paid to the second auditor, and shall, upon his order, be covered into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund; and bonds so taken in exchange shall be cancelled in the manner hereinbefore prescribed.

19. This act shall be in force from its passage.

59 EXHIBIT NUMBER 5.

CHAP. 747. A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same.

Approved March 6, 1894.

(Acts G. A. of Va., 1893-4, p. 867.)

Whereas the general assembly of Virginia is required by the constitution of Virginia to provide by law for adjusting with the state of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original state of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia; and

Whereas the general assembly has heretofore passed four several acts in relation to the funding and settlement of her public debt, as follows, to wit:

First. An act entitled an act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt, approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one.

Second. An act entitled an act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt. approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

Third. An act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and

Fourth. An act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt pay-60 ment of the interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two; and

Whereas in each of said acts provision is made for issuing to creditors of the original state of Virginia who should accept the new bonds provided for by said several acts, certificates for such proportion of the obligation surrendered by them as was deemed proper to be borne by the state of West Virginia, to-wit; one third of the amount of said obligations, of which certificates this state holds a large amount, through the agency of the commissioners of its sinking fund and literary fund; and

Whereas the present state of Virginia has settled and adjusted, to the entire satisfaction of her people and the creditors, the liability assumed by her on account of two-thirds of the debt of the original state: now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of Virginia (the house of delegates concurring), That a commission of seven members is hereby created and provided for, of whom the present chairman of the committee on finance and banks of the senate shall be one, and the present chairman of the committee on finance of the house of delegates shall be another; of the other five, two shall be chosen by the senate from among the persons now members of that body; two by the house of delegates from among the persons now members of that body, and one, to be a resident of this state, shall be appointed by the governor. No member of said commission shall cease to be a member thereof by reason of ceasing to be a member of the general assembly.

Said commission shall choose its own chairman and secretary; vacancies therein occurring or existing during recess of the legislature shall be filled by the governor on notification thereof by the chairman; and a majority of said commission shall be competent to act.

Said commission is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate with the state of West Virginia a settlement and adjustment of the proportion of the public debt of the original state of Virginia 61 proper to be borne by West Virginia.

But said commission shall not proceed with said negotiation until assurances satisfactory to the commission shall have been received from the holders of a majority in amount of said certificates, exclusive of those held by the state through the agency of the board of education and sinking fund commissioners, that they desire the said commission to enter into and undertake such negotiation, and will accept the amount so ascertained to be paid by the state of West Virginia in full settlement of the one-third of the debt of the original state of Virginia which has not been assumed by the present state of Virginia. But said commission shall in no event enter into any negotiation hereunder except upon the basis that Virginia is bound only for the two-thirds of the debt of the original state which she has already provided for as her equitable proportion thereof.

All expenses incurred by said commission and said board of arbitrators, including reasonable compensation of the members thereof, shall be paid out of the proceeds of such settlement, or by the holders of said certificates who are the beneficiaries of such settlement, but without subjecting the state to any expense on this account.

And their action shall be subject to the approval or disapproval of the general assembly, and shall not be binding on the state until approved by the general assembly. The governor is requested to communicate this joint resolution to the governor and legislature of West Virginia.

This joint resolution shall be in force from its passage.

62 EXHIBIT NUMBER 6.

CHAP. 825. An act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises.

Approved March 6, 1900.

(Acts G. A. of Va., 1899-1900, p. 902.)

Whereas the general assembly of Virginia has heretofore passed certain acts with respect to the settlement of her public debt as follows, to wit:

First. An act entitled an act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt, approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one.

Second. An act entitled an act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt, approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

Third. An act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and

Fourth. An act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two; and

Whereas in each of said acts provision is made for issuing to creditors of the original state of Virginia who should accept 63 the new bonds provided for by said several acts, certificates for such proportion of the obligation surrendered by them as was deemed proper to be borne by the state of West Virginia, to wit:

one-third of the amount of said obligations, of which certificate this state holds a large amount, through the agency of the commissioners of its sinking fund and literary fund, and

Whereas the general assembly is required by the constitution of Virginia to provide by law for adjusting with the state of West Virginia the proportion of the debt of the original state of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, but no such adjustment has ever been had; and

Whereas it appears that while Virginia has satisfactorily settled the two-thirds of the original debt which she assumed, yet it is possible that complications will arise with respect to said certificates which will render it desirable that she should endeavor to secure an adjustment thereof upon terms which will protect herself, but will work no injustice to West Virginia, and thus finally dispose of the only question remaining unsettled in connection with said debt; now, therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That the commission created and appointed under a joint resolution of this general assembly entitled a joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the state of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original state of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same, approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, be, and said commission hereby is, authorized to receive and take upon deposit the certificates aforesaid or have the same otherwise placed or held on deposit subject to their control upon an agreement and contract on the part of the holders of said certificates that if the said commission will secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates the said holders of said certificates so deposited will accept the amount realized on such settlement from West Virginia 64 on said certificate as a full settlement of all their claims thereunder.

2. If at least two-thirds in amount of the said certificates issued under the act of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, exclusive of those held by the state through the agency of the board of education and the sinking fund commissioners, and at least a majority in amount of all the other certificates aforesaid shall be so deposited or placed subject to the control of the said commission upon the agreement and contract aforesaid, then the said commission shall be authorized and empowered by and with the advice and approval of the attorney-general of Virginia to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the state as may in the judgment of said commission and attorney-general be needful and proper to protect the interest of the state and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid. All the expenses involved in connection with any of the matters aforesaid shall be borne by the certificate holders, as provided in the joint resolution aforesaid, and the state shall not be subjected to any expense on that account.

3. This act shall be in force from its passage.

66 Report of the Commission appointed and acting under the joint resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved March 6th, 1894, and the act of the said General Assembly, approved March 6th, 1900, with respect to certain certificates issued by the State in connection with the debt of the original State of Virginia and known as Virginia Deferred Certificates.

RICHMOND, VA., January 9th, 1906.

To the General Assembly of Virginia:

Your Commission appointed and acting under the joint resolution of the General Assembly entitled "A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the debt or the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found entitled to the same," approved March March 6th, 1894, and an Act of the General Assembly entitled "An Act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises," approved March 6th, 1900, beg leave to make a further report of their proceedings, as follows:

It will be noted that it appears from the first report of your Commission, dated January 28th, 1896, and printed as Senate Document No. 10 in the Senate Journal and Documents of 1896, and as House Document No. 4 in the House Journal and Documents of that session, that the conditions required by said joint resolution having been complied with, your Commission was ready and desirous to open negotiations with West Virginia for a settlement as provided for in said joint resolution, and this fact was communicated to the Governor of West Virginia by the Governor of this State
67 with the request that such negotiations might accordingly be opened, which communication was laid before the Legislature of West Virginia, but that body, by a joint resolution, declined to enter into negotiations on the subject.

By a subsequent report of your Commission to this General Assembly, dated February 7th, 1900, and to be found printed as Senate Document No. 6 in Senate Journal and Documents for the session of 1899–90, it was further shown that the control and disposal of a majority of said certificates had been again tendered your Commission by a Committee, of which John Crosby Brown of New York was chairman, acting under a depositing agreement of July 28th, 1898, and the said Committee offering to accept whatever might be realized from West Virginia on the certificates in full settlement of their claims. A copy of said depositing agreement of July 28th, 1898, under which said Committee was constituted, was filed with said last report, and the same is also now herewith filed, showing who constituted said Depositing Committee and what their powers and functions were, and also that Brown Brothers & Company, Bankers of New York, N. Y., were the depository of the said Committee in whose hands the said certificates had been placed.

Upon the coming in of this last report, the Act of March 6th, 1900, was passed by the General Assembly, by which the powers and duties of your Commission were very materially enlarged, and it was provided that if at least two thirds of the certificates of 1871 outstanding in the hands of the public, and a majority of all the other certificates so outstanding, were deposited and placed subject to the control of your Commission upon the agreement that the creditors would accept whatever might be realized thereon from West Virginia in full settlement of their claims, then your commission was authorized, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of the State, to take such action and institute such 68 proceedings on behalf of the State as might, in the judgment of your Commission and the Attorney General, be needful and proper to protect the interests of the State and bring about and carry into effect a settlement in the premises, but all the expenses in connection with any of the matters involved were to be borne by the certificate holders. A copy of this Act is for convenience of reference herewith filed.

At the time of the passage of this Act the Depositing Committee did not hold the two-thirds in amount of the certificates of 1871, required by the Act as a basis for negotiations or action by your Commission, but having acquired them later, the Committee, on the 18th of September, 1902, submitted to your Commission a proposition in writing, bearing date on that day, by which they tendered and placed subject to the control of your Commission, in accordance with the terms of said Act, $8,565,095.70 of the certificates of 1871, being more than the requisite two-thirds of these certificates outstanding, and $1,782,475.13 of the other certificates outstanding, being a majority thereof, upon the agreement and arrangement on the part of your Commission acting for the State of Virginia that they would enter into negotiations with the State of West Virginia, or the constituted authorities thereof, for the purpose of effecting a settlement with that State with respect to said certificates, and that your commission would, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General, take such action as they might deem needful in the premises, any amount realized on such settlement to be accepted in full of all claims on said certificates as in said Act provided.

This proposition was accompanied by the statement of Brown Bros. & Co., the depository, showing that the certificates referred to were held by them, and it was stated in the proposition that upon its acceptance by your Commission it should constitute a contract between the parties to continue in force for three years, but 69 subject to renewal or extension by the parties, and to such amendment or modification as might be agreed on. It was on the day of its date accepted in writing by the unanimous action of your Commission, and the acceptance thereof duly endorsed thereon, and the same was approved by the Attorney General on September 29th, 1902; and a copy of the same showing its acceptance and the endorsements thereon is herewith filed and is referred to as showing in detail the action taken by your Commission. This agreement constitutes an arrangement with Virginia under said Act of March 6th, 1900, for obtaining a settlement with West Virginia and thus precluded the right which any certificate holder might, under the terms of the depositing agreement, otherwise have had to withdraw his certificate after October 1st, 1902.

On December 3rd, 1902, a plan of settlement as provided in the said depositing agreement of July 28th, 1898, was formulated, approved and recommended by the Depositing Committee and Advisory Board created under said agreement, by which the provisions of the foregoing contract of September 18th, 1902, were adopted as included in their plan of settlement, with the right to the Depositing Committee to make such further contracts with the Virginia Commission as might be deemed needful to bring about a settlement with West Virginia under said joint resolution and Act of the Virginia Assembly.

This plan of settlement provided for a full compliance on the part of the Depositing Committee with the terms of said joint resolution and Act, and clothed the Committee with ample powers to act in the premises, and notice of it was duly published in New York and London, as required in the agreement of July 28th, 1898, so as to afford opportunity to any dissenting depositor of certificates to give notice of his unwillingness to accept the proposed settlement, 70 which notice the agreement provided was to be given within thirty days from the completion of the publication, but no such notice appears to have been given at any time by any depositor. The depositing agreement also provided that in the absence of such notification from a majority of the depositors, the proposed plan should become effective and final, and that the declaration in writing of this fact by the Committee to the depository should be conclusive on this point; and such declaration in writing by the depositing Committee to Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co., the depository, was accordingly so made in writing on December 13th, 1904. A copy of this plan of settlement and the certificates of the publication thereof, together with the said declaration in writing of the Committee, are all herewith filed and are referred to as parts hereof.

On December 14th, 1904, the amount of said certificates deposited with Brown Brothers and Company, as aforesaid, had increased to $11,607,298.64 of which $9,360,062.96 were those of 1871, and your Commission proposing to again attempt to open negotiations for a settlement with the legislature of West Virginia (which was then about to convene) it was thought advisable to enter into a contract by way of amendment to that of September 18th, 1902, by which the complete control of all these certificates should be placed in the hands of your Commission, and such additional agreement, bearing date December 14th, 1904, was accordingly entered into between the said Depositing Committee and your Commission, and approved by the Attorney General; and cotemporaneously therewith by a receipt or certificate bearing date on the same day, the said Brown Brothers and Company acknowledged and certified that they held all the certificates last aforesaid to the amount of $11,607,298.64 on deposit for and subject to the control and disposition of your Commission without reservation or condition of any kind. A copy of this agreement and receipt of December 71 14th, 1904, together with the Attorney General's approval, will be found filed herewith. By a subsequent communication of January 23rd, 1905, from Brown Bros. & Company to your Commission, it was shown that said deposits, so placed under the control of your Commission, had increased to $12,910,555.89, of which $10,639,776.42 were those of 1871, and a copy of this communication will also be found herewith filed.

Desiring, as above stated, to open communication with West Virginia, your Commission, on December 14th, 1904, appointed a subcommittee consisting of Messrs. Randolph Harrison, Chairman, H. D. Flood, H. H. Downing and John B. Moon, who, together with the Attorney General, should be authorized to open negotiations with the proper authorities of West Virginia looking to a settlement of the matters at issue. This sub-committee endeavored to do this by the presentation of a memorial to His Excellency, A. B. White,

Governor of the State of West Virginia, signed by the sub-committee and approved by the Attorney General, bearing date January 25th, 1905, a copy of which is herewith filed. This memorial was presented to the Governor of West Virginia at Charleston, W. Va., by the Attorney General and the Chairman of the sub-committee, and was by him, on the 27th day of January, 1905, transmitted to the Senate of West Virginia by a special message to that body, but without any recommendation on his part, a copy of which message is also herewith filed.

It was arranged, however, by the Senate and House Committees on Finance of the West Virginia Legislature to give to the sub-committee a hearing upon the subject at Charleston on February 1st, 1905, at which hearing the Attorney General of Virginia, the Chairman of the sub-committee and the chairman of your Commission attended, and the memorial of your Commission above referred to was read, and a full presentation was made by Mr. Harrison, Chairman of the sub-committee, of the reasons why West Virginia should, at least, enter into nagotiations in regard to a settlement in an address made by him to the Senate and House Finance 72 Committees aforesaid. It was considered by your Commission that Mr. Harrison's address dealt with the questions involved in so clear and able a manner and showed so conclusively that is was both the right and duty of Virginia to ask for a settlement, that they caused it to be printed, and a copy of it is herewith filed.

The Legislature of West Virginia, however, failed and declined to enter into any negotiations or to empower any committee or other official to do so, but on the contrary passed the following resolutions: "Resolved by the Legislature of West Virginia: That it is the sense of this Legislature that the State of West Virginia does not owe any part of the so called debt of Virginia, and that this Legislature is opposed to any negotiations whatsoever on that subject." Indeed your Commission are advised that resolutions of a similar import have been passed by all, or nearly all, of the Legislatures of West Virginia which have met since your Commission first communicated with them on the subject in 1896, thus showing a persistent and determined refusal on the part of West Virginia to pay any portion of what they are bound for on account of the debt of the original State, or to enter into any accounting or negotiations whatsoever on the subject.

The deferred certificates of 1871 issued by the State of Virginia are in the following form:

"Copy of Certificate under Act of March 30, 1871.

"COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

"No. —.

"TREASURER'S OFFICE, RICHMOND, VA.

"This is to certify that there is due unto —— —— heirs, executors, administrators or assigns $—, being one-third of bond surrendered under the provisions of an Act approved March 30th, 1871, entitled, 'An Act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt,' namely, Bond No. —, with interest, amounting 73 to $—, Payment of said one-third with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the States of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to the public debt of the State of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment, and the State of Virginia holds said bonds so far as unfunded in trust for the holder hereof or his assigns.

"In testimony whereof this certificate has been signed by the Treasurer and countersigned by the Second Auditor, as provided by law.

——— ———,

"Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

"——— ———,

"Second Auditor of Virginia."

So it would appear that if the contention of West Virginia is correct, the responsibility that attaches to the issuing of these certificates must rest with Virginia alone and West Virginia be responsible for nothing in connection with the debt of the original State.

By a recent enactment of the State of South Dakota suit was authorized against any state whose over-due bonds might be donated or deposited in her treasury, and under this law a suit was brought by the South Dakota and judgment given against North Carolina in the Supreme Court of the United States upon some past due bonds of the latter state as see the case of South Dakota vs. North Carolina, 192 U. S. Reports, 286,—and a like statute has lately been enacted by the State of New York authorizing similar suits. Your Commission are informed that such suits have lately been proposed against the State of Virginia under these statutes upon the certificates of 1871 and have only been restrained and prevented by the 74 prospect of some definite action on the part of Virginia.

So your commission were confronted with the alternative of either a suit by Virginia as plaintiff on these certificates with indemnity to her against liability as proposed by the Depositing Committee, or a suit against her without any such indemnity, and your Commission had no doubt as to the safe and proper course to pursue, especially as Virginia herself holds through the agency of her Sinking and Literary funds $2,578,518.68 of the certificates of 1871 and $166,943.33 of the certificates of other classes which would be entitled to their distribution share in whatever may be realized from West Virginia.

The contract of December 14th, 1904, would have expired by limitation on September 18th, 1905, but in order to allow time for the drawing of a final contract, the same was by an agreement endorsed thereon on September 9th, 1905, extended to December 1st, 1905; and on the 24th day of November, 1905, a final contract was drawn up and entered into between your Commission and the Depositing Committee. This last contract was annexed to that of December 14th, 1905, as an extension and enlargement thereof, it having been provided in all of said contracts that they might be extended, modified and changed by the act of the parties.

A copy of said last contract of November 24th, 1905, annexed to that of December 14th, 1904, together with the extensions aforesaid and the approval of the Attorney General thereon endorsed, are herewith filed. It will be seen from said last contract that the reasons are therein set forth which led the Commission to the conclusion that no alternative remained in the premises except a suit against West Virginia; and they accordingly by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General undertook to bring such suit and the Depositing Committee agreed as provided in said Act
75 of March 6th, 1900, to accept the amount recovered in such suit or the adjudication therein or any amount realized by your Commission on a compromise with West Virginia in full of all claims on the certificates deposited.

This contract also further provides that all certificates thereafter deposited with Brown Brothers and Company should be included thereunder, and that your Commission should have complete control of all certificates so deposited; and a further and additional receipt or statement was accordingly given your Commission by Brown Brothers and Company bearing date January 4th, 1906, showing that since their statement and receipt of December 4th, 1904, additional certificates to the amount of $1,566,136.77 of wnich $1,491,231.13 were those of 1871 had been deposited with them and were subject to the control and disposal of your Commission, making total deposits to that date $13,173,435.31, of which $10,851,294.09 were those of 1871. This last statement was verified by the oath of William Gerard Vermilye, Cashier of Brown Brothers and Company, attached thereto; and on January 5th, 1906, your Commission caused all of these certificates to be removed from the custody of Brown Brothers and Company and placed on deposit for your Commission and subject to their order with the Central Trust Company of New York, N. Y., whose acknowledgment of the receipt thereof stated that the certificates were held on deposit for and subject to the order, control and disposal of your Commission, and the keys to the boxes containing said certificates were delivered to the Secretary of your Commission—Copies of this last named statement of Brown Brothers and Company, with the affidavit of the said Vermilye attached, and of the receipt and acknowledgment of the Central Trust Company are herewith returned.

Your Commission caused these certificates to be removed from Brown Brothers and Company, not from any want of confidence in them, because your Commission have every reason to believe 76 them to be entirely responsible, but because it was deemed best to place the certificates in the hands of some custodian who never had any connection with the Depositing Committee, and who would be responsible to your Commission alone in connection therewith.

To recapitulate, your Commission will say that the whole amount of the deferred certificates outstanding is $18,227,153.60, as shown in the statement of the Second Auditor, John G. Dew, dated September 17, 1902, and herewith returned, which statement shows also the different classes of certificates.

Of the certificates of 1871, there are in all $15,281,970.47, of which $2,578,518.68, are held by the State through the Sinking and Literary funds, leaving outstanding in the hands of the public $12,703,451.79; and of this last amount there have been deposited with your Commission $10,851,294.09, as above stated.

Of the other certificates there are in all $2,845,183.13, of which the Literary Fund holds $166,943.33, leaving in the hands of the public $2,778,239.80, and of this last amount there have been deposited with your Commission $2,322,141.32 as above stated.

It thus appears that your Commission hold more than five-sixths of all the certificates of 1871 outstanding, and about six-sevenths of all the others outstanding.

It will be noted that since the first agreement of Sept. 18, 1902, was entered into the certificates deposited with Brown Brothers and Company have increased from $10,347,570.83 to $13,173,435.41, which are now in the hands of your Commission; and there is reason to believe that this amount will be still further increased upon the institution of the proposed suits.

78 This agreement between John Crosby Brown, George Coppell, J. Kennedy Tod and Clarence Cary, herein styled "The Committee," parties of the first part, and such holders of the certificates herein mentioned as deposit hereunder, parties of the second part.

Whereas, the present State of Virginia enacted laws providing for issuing certificates for one-third of the debt of the original State, and more than $12,000,000 of such certificates recite:

"That payment will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the States of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to the public debt of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment."

And Whereas, it is believed that West Virginia's proportion of said debt, if ascertained as provided by the Ordinance under which Virginia was divided, is less than the amount of the certificates which have been issued by Virginia; and it is considered that, under such circumstances, neither State should, or will, incur any obligations respecting said debt unless its legislature has an undoubted guarantee that substantially all of the certificates will be promptly surrendered in exchange for whatever amount West Virginia agrees to pay and the creditors of West Virginia may agree to accept.

Witnesseth:

1st. The following gentlemen shall constitute an Advisory Board in this behalf, to wit: Thomas F. Bayard, W. Pinkney Whyte, Edward J. Phelps and George G. Williams.

The function of said Board is to examine such plan of settlement as may be proposed by the Committee, representing the holders of the certificates, and submitted to them in accordance with this agreement, and to state their recommendation thereof of the contrary.

79 Said board may add to their number, and any vacancy may be filled by the remaining members.

2d. The function of the Committee is:

(a.) To bring about the deposit, under this agreement, as far as may be practicable, of said certificates, or of the trust receipts heretofore issued to represent them.

(b.) To formulate a plan of settlement, and after it has been recommended by the Advisory Board, cause the same to be published and submitted to depositing creditors for their acceptance as herein provided.

(c.) To act as agent of the depositing creditors in carrying out the purposes of this agreement.

(d.) The Committee shall appoint one or more depositories to receive said certificates or trust receipts, and issue therefor its proper receipt.

Subject to the restrictions herein, the Committee shall have power to perform any act to accomplish a settlement, and this includes power to make arrangements with either Virginia or West Virginia to insure the prompt surrender of all or any of the certificates in exchange for such amount as West Virginia may pay and her creditors agree to accept, and also includes power to execute, in behalf of the depositing creditors, any release or acquittance which will exclude any demand on Virginia beyond the amount she may receive from West Virginia; provided that no settlement shall be concluded until it has been recommended by the Advisory Board, and has also been submitted to creditors and accepted as follows, to wit:

(1.) As soon as a plan of settlement has been recommended by the Advisory Board, the Committee shall, before proposing it to the State, advertise for at least twice a week for three weeks in 80 two of the newspapers published in New York City and London, that a plan of settlement has been formulated, and notifying parties in interest where said plan may be obtained in said cities without cost.

(2.) If within thirty days after the first publication of said advertisement holders of a majority of the face value of the deposited certificates notify the Committee, in writing, either directly or through any depository, of their unwillingness to accept the proposed settlement, then said settlement shall not be consummated. If the Committee is not so notified within said thirty days, then it shall be assumed that the proposed plan, being satisfactory to a majority, is accepted by all the depositing creditors, and it shall be offered to said States or either of them to be carried into effect by appropriate legislation.

3d. After a plan of settlement has become effective (of which fact the declaration in writing of the Committee to the several depositories shall be conclusive), each depository shall, in the manner directed by the Committee, surrender to either State, as may be necessary, any or all of the certificates deposited with it, and receive in exchange therefor the amount or kinds of securities called for by the plan of settlement.

The amount so received in settlement shall be immediately delivered to depositing creditors, in accordance with the terms of settlement.

The Committee may arrange for the purchase and sale of such fractional interests as may be necessary to equalize distribution.

4th. Each depositor shall, when he receives his new bonds in settlement, pay to the depository, for account of the Committee, such a commission as the Committee may assess for the charges
81 and expenses of settlement, including the compensation of the Committee, Counsel and Advisory Board, but such assessment shall in no event exceed five per cent. in cash on the par of any certificate deposited under this agreement.

If the Committee decide at any time that a settlement satisfactory to holders cannot be promptly effected, they may publish a notice requiring holders to pay so much of twenty cents per $100 of certificates as may be necessary to reimburse the expenses actually incurred by the Committee. Any certificate, assessment on which is not paid within six months after such notice has been published twice a week for three consecutive weeks in two of the newspapers in New York and London, may be sold by the Depository and the proceeds, after paying its assessment, held for the holder of its corresponding receipt.

Any certificate may be withdrawn from deposit at any time after October 1, 1902, upon payment of its pro rata of expenses, not to exceed twenty cents per $100 of certificates, unless a settlement has been previously arranged, or unless an arrangement has been made with Virginia for obtaining a settlement with West Virginia.

5th. The Committee may add to their number, and any vacancy may be filled by the remaining members. By unanimous consent of the members of the Committee any member may act by proxy.

In testimony whereof, the Committee have hereto set their hands this 28th. day of July, 1898.

82 An act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia properly to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises.

Approved March 6th, 1900.

Whereas the General Assembly of Virginia has heretofore passed certain acts with respect to the settlement of her public debt as follows—to wit:

First. An act entitled an act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt, approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one.

Second. An act entitled an act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt, approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

Third. An act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and

Fourth. An act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two; and

Whereas in each of said acts provision is made for issuing to creditors of the original State of Virginia who should accept 83 the new bonds provided for by said several acts, certificates for such proportion of the obligation- surrendered by them as was deemed proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia—to wit: one-third of the amount of said obligations, of which certificates this State holds a large amount, through the agency of the commissioners of its sinking fund and literary fund; and

Whereas the General Assembly is required by the constitution of Virginia to provide by law for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the debt of the original State of Virginia properly to be borne by West Virginia, but no such adjustment has ever been had; and

Whereas it appears that while Virginia has satisfactorily settled the two-thirds of the original debt which she assumed, yet it is possible that complications will arise with respect to said certificates which will render it desirable that she should endeavor to secure an adjustment thereof upon terms which will protect herself, but will work no injustice to West Virginia, and thus finally dispose of the only question remaining unsettled in connection with said debt; now, therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia That the commission created and appointed under a joint resolution of this General Assembly entitled a joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia properly to be borne by West Virginia, for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same, approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, be, and said commission hereby, is authorized to receive and take upon deposit the certificates aforesaid or have the same otherwise placed or held on deposit subject to their control upon an agreement and contract on the part of the holders of said certificates

84 that if the said commission will secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates the said holders of said certificates so deposited will accept the amount realized on such settlement from West Virginia on said certificates as a full settlement of all their claims thereunder.

2. If at least two-thirds in amount of the said certificates issued under the act of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, exclusive of those held by the state through the agency of the board of education and the sinking fund commissioners, and at least a majority in amount of all the other certificates aforesaid shall be so deposited or placed subject to the control of the said commission upon the agreement and contract aforesaid, then the said commission shall be authorized and empowered by and with the advice and approval of the attorney-general of Virginia to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the state as may in the judgment of said commission and attorney-general be needful and proper to protect the interests of the state and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid. All the expenses involved in connection with any of the matters aforesaid shall be borne by the certificate holders, as provided in the joint resolution aforesaid, and the state shall not be subjected to any expense on that account.

3. This act shall be in force from its passage.

85 Proposal.

To the Virginia Commission as constituted under a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia approved March 6, 1894, and the act of the said General Assembly approved March 6, 1900:

Whereas your Commission was constituted as set forth in said joint resolution and act of Assembly for the purpose of negotiating and bringing about a settlement with the State of West Virginia with respect to the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia and in connection with which the present State of Virginia has issued certain certificates under four acts of its General Assembly, approved, respectively March 30th, 1871, March 28th, 1879, February 14th, 1882 and February 20th, 1892.

And whereas your commission was, under the said act of March 6, 1900, further authorized to receive and take upon deposit the certificates aforesaid, or to have the same otherwise placed or held on deposit subject to your control, upon the agreement and contract on the part of the holders of said certificates that if your commission would secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates, the said holders of said certificates, so deposited, would accept the amount realized on such settlement from West Virginia as a full settlement of all their claims thereunder; and said act further provided that if at least two-thirds of the amount of the said certificates issued under said act of 1871, (exclusive of those held by the State through the agency of the Board of Education and the sinking fund commissioners) and at least a majority in amount of all the other certificates should be so deposited or placed subject to the control of your commission upon the agreement and 86 contract aforesaid, then your commission should be authorized, by and with the approval of the Attorney-General of Virginia, to take action in the premises as might be needful to protect the interest of the State and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid.

And whereas by a certain agreement of July 28th, 1898, a committee on behalf of the holders of the said certificates was constituted to bring about the deposit, as far as practicable, of said certificates in such depository as the committee should appoint with powers in the committee to act as agent of the certificate holders so depositing in bringing about a settlement of their claims upon such plan, as might be recommended by the Advisory Board named in said agreement and as should become effective thereunder; it being further stated in said agreement that all the said certificates so deposited would be promptly surrendered in exchange for whatever amount West Virginia might agree to pay and the creditors of West Virginia might agree to accept as aforesaid.

And whereas more than two-thirds in amount of all the said certificates of 1871, outstanding as aforesaid, to wit, $8,565,095.70 and a majority of all the other certificates aforesaid, to wit, $1,782,475.13, have been duly deposited with said committee and are in custody of Brown Brothers & Company, Bankers of New York City, N. Y., the depository named by said Committee, and are held subject to the control of the said committee under the said agreement, so that the same can be duly placed and held subject to the control of your commission in accordance with the said agreement and in pursuance of such plan of settlement as is now proposed or as may hereafter become effective.

In view of the premises the undersigned, the committee aforesaid, do now hereby tender and place subject to the control of your commission all the aforesaid certificates, so held on deposit, upon the agreement and arrangement on the part of your commission, 87 acting for the State of Virginia under the said joint resolution and act of Assembly aforesaid, that your commission will enter into negotiations with the State of West Virginia or the constituted authorities thereof for the purpose of effecting a settlement with West Virginia with respect — the said certificates in accordance with the said agreement of July 28th, 1898, and in accordance with such plan of settlement as is now proposed or as may hereafter become effective; and that your commission will by and with the advice and approval of the said Attorney-General take such action as they may deem needful in the premises; and in event such a settlement is so made, then it is hereby agreed that the amount realized thereon shall be accepted in full satisfaction of all the claims of the certificate holders thereunder and the undersigned Committee will surrender to your commission, in exchange for such amount the certificates aforesaid so deposited.

If this proposal be accepted by your commission, the same shall constitute an arrangement and contract with the State of Virginia for obtaining a settlement with West Virginia and the same shall continue binding upon the undersigned committee and upon the holders of said certificates so deposited for the period of three years next ensuing from the date hereof for the purpose of allowing time for a settlement aforesaid; and the same shall be subject to renewal and extension for such further time as may be agreed upon and to such modification and amendment as may be agreed upon, and shall apply to and include any and all such certificates as aforesaid as may hereafter be deposited with and held by the said Committee under said agreement of July 28th, 1898.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN CROSBY BROWN, Chairman.

ROBT. L. HARRISON, Secretary.

Richmond, Va., September 18th, 1902.

88 The undersigned, Brown Brothers & Company, Bankers, of New York City, N. 89 Plan for the Settlement of the West Virginia Debt.

Under an agreement of July, 1898, a Committee was constituted for the purpose of assembling the Virginia deferred certificates, with certain powers and functions as in the agreement specified, and by the same agreement an Advisory Board was constituted whose functions were also specified in the agreement.

In pursuance of this agreement, a certain plan of settlement was, on the 21st day of June, 1899, formulated and recommended by the Committee and Advisory Board, which among other things, contained the following provision:

"The Committee may surrender to either State (Virginia or West Virginia) any of the deposited certificates and receive in full satisfaction therefor their pro rata of such an amount in State Bonds, or cash as may be agreed upon between the Committee and the representatives of Virginia or West Virginia, as the maximum amount which West Virginia will assume an account of her proportion of the debt of the original State."

Since the date last named the General Assembly of Virginia, on the 6th day of March, 1900, passed an Act authorizing a commission which had been appointed and constituted on her behalf in the premises, by and with the advice and approval of her Attorney General, to take such action and institute such proceedings as might, in the judgment of the Commission and Attorney-General, be needful and proper to bring about and carry into effect a settlement of said certificates; but it was further provided in this Act that such action should be taken only in the event that at least two-thirds of all the certificates of 1871 (exclusive of those held by the State) and a majority of all the other certificates, should be deposited with or placed subject to the control of the Commission upon an agreement on the part of the holders of such certificates that if the Commission would secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates, they would accept the amount realized from West Virginia on such settlement in full of all their claims thereunder.

90 On the 18th of September, 1902, the Committee held on deposit $8,565,095.70 of the certificates of 1871, being more than two-thirds thereof, (*) as above stated, and $1,782,457.13 of all the other certificates, being a majority thereof; and the Committee accordingly on that day entered into a contract with the Virginia Commission, by which it was stipulated that the said certificates should, for the period of three years, be held subject to the control of the Commission upon the agreement and arrangement on the part of the Commission that they would enter into negotiations with the state of West Virginia for the purpose of effecting a settlement with respect to said certificates, and would by and with the advice and approval of said Attorney-General, take such action as they might deem needful in the premises; the amount realized on such settlement to be accepted in full of said certificates as above stated, which contract was duly approved by the Attorney-General of Virginia on September 29th, 1902.

In view of this Act of the Virginia Assembly, and of the recent action taken thereunder, it is deemed desirable to make the plan of settlement heretofore recommended more definite with respect to the matters now involved; and to this end the following is hereby formulated, approved and recommended by the Committee and the Advisory Board by way of supplement and addition to the original plan:

I. The above named Committee shall pledge or deposit the certifiates now or hereafter received under the agreement of July 28, 1898, with the Virginia Commission, in conformity with the Act of March 6, 1900, for the purpose of taking such action and instituting such proceedings, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney-General of Virginia as may be deemed needful to bring about and carry into effect a settlement as in said Act provided; such pledge or deposit to be for such length of time as may be agreed on; and the said agreement of September 18, 1902 shall continue in force for the period therein specified; and the Committee may enter into such further agreements with the said Commission as may be deemed needful to bring about a settlement in the premises.

II. In the event that no settlement shall be effected by the 91 Virginia Commission either under the agreement of September 18, 1902, within the period therein specified, or under any other agreement which may be entered into between the Committee and the said Commission within such time as may be limited therein, the Committee may, after any and all such agreements with the said Commission shall have expired, take such other and further proceedings and make such other and further agreements and settlement in the premises as the Committee may deem judicious.

III. The Committee shall be authorized to make such disposition by pledge, sale or otherwise, of the certificates, now or hereafter deposited, under the agreement of July 28, 1898, as may be necessary to carry into effect any proceedings taken and any agreements or settlements made by them as above stated, with or through the said Commission or otherwise, or for the payment of expenses now or hereafter to be incurred, whether a settlement is effected or not, not to exceed, however, the limit fixed by said agreement, and may give such release and acquittance as may be necessary to that end.

IV. The amount realized on or the proceeds of any such settlement, after deducting proper charges under the agreement of July 28, 1898, shall be apportioned and distributed among the different certificate holders in such manner and according to such percentages as may be ascertained and established for the different classes of certificates by a tribunal to be constituted as follows as follows; one member thereof to be appointed by the Committee, one member by the Advisory Board, and the third by the two so appointed; and if it be impracticable in the judgment of such tribunal to distribute in kind any bonds or securities which may be received in any such settlement, then the same may be sold and converted into money for the purposes of such distribution. If a vacancy occur in such tribunal the same shall be filled by the remaining members.

99 EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA, January 27, 1905.

To the Honorable President and Members of the State Senate:

GENTLEMEN: The accompanying papers after oral statements had been made to me by a Committee representing the State of Virginia, consisting of Hon. Randolph Harrison, Chairman, Col. Joseph Button, Secretary, and Hon. William A. Anderson, Attorney General of that State, were duly presented to me for transmission to the Legislature of West Virginia.

The papers consist of an address or statement of the Committee, representing the Commission appointed by the State of Virginia "to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia," and of a copy of the Act of March 6th, 1900, of the State of Virginia, enlarging the powers and duties of said Commission.

I deem it my duty to transmit these papers for your information.

Respectfully yours, ALBERT B. WHITE, Governor.

The papers accompanying the communication of the Governor are as follows:

To His Excellency A. B. White, Governor of the State of West Virginia:

SIR: Under and by virtue of a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, approved March 6th, 1894, a commission consisting of Hons. Taylor Berry, H. T. Wickham, H. D. Flood, John B. Moon, Randolph Harrison, H. H. Downing and William F. Rhea was continued for the purpose of opening 100 negotiations with the State of West Virginia looking to the adjustment of the proportion of the debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and by a communication bearing date on the 7th day of January, 1895, from the Hon. Chas. T. O'Ferral, then Governor of Virginia, the Honorable William A. MacCorkle, then Governor of West Virginia, was informed of this fact.

Since the date last named the Honorable Taylor Berry has departed this life, and Honorable J. Thompson Brown has been made a member of the Commission in his stead. And by an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved March 6th, 1900, the powers and functions of the Commission have been materially changed and enlarged, as will be seen by an inspection of said act, a copy of which is herewith submitted.

It will be observed that under the provisions of this act the Commission acting by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, is authorized to make a final settlement and adjustment with West Virginia with respect to the debt of the original State, provided at least two-thirds in amount of the securities known as Virginia Deferred Certificates issued under the Virginia Act of 1871, and a majority of all the other certificates issued by Virginia with reference to said settlement, exclusive of those held by the Literary Fund and Sinking Fund of Virginia, were deposited with or placed subject to the control of the Commission.

On the 14th day of December, 1904, there were so placed on deposit in the name of the Commission, and subject to the control and disposal, $12,910,555.89 of such certificates, embracing much more than two-thirds of those of 1871, as aforesaid, and a very large majority of all the others, so that the Commission is now authorized, and empowered by and with the advice and approval of the 101 Attorney General, to make a settlement and adjustment with West Virginia as provided in said act of March 6th, 1900. The evidence of the deposit of the said certificates with the Commission as above stated is of course subject to inspection by Your Excellency and the proper authorities of West Virginia on request.

Looking to opening negotiations with West Virginia, the commission at a meeting thereof, held in Richmond, Virginia, December 14th, 1904, authorized the appointment of a sub-committee, consisting of the undersigned Randolph Harrison, Chairman, H. D. Flood, H. H. Downing and John B. Moon, who together with the Attorney General of Virginia should invite the attention of Your Excellency to the unsettled matters between the two States and endeavor to negotiate a settlement of the same on some equitable basis to be agreed upon by the authorities of the two States.

The undersigned, the sub-committee so constituted, acting by and with the advice of the undersigned Attorney General of Virginia, therefore beg leave to call to the attention of Your Excellency the unsettled matters between the two States above referred to, growing out of the debt of the original State, and so respectfully request that they may be laid before the legislature of your State, now in session for their consideration; and that some action may be taken by the Legislature of your State for the purpose of entering into negotiations with the undersigned for a settlement between the two States of the matters aforesaid on some equitable basis either by the appointment of a committee to conduct such negotiations on behalf of your State, or by such other action as the legislature of your State may deem appropriate.

And the undersigned further beg in this connection to call attention to the following facts:

1. That when the State of West Virginia was formed, the original State of Virginia was deprived of more than one-third of 102 its white population and about one-third of its territory, embracing that portion of its territory which by reason of its mineral wealth has since proven to be the most valuable and productive part of the original State.

2. The ordinance of the convention which met at Wheeling in 1861, in providing for the formation of the State of West Virginia, further provided that: "The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties within said new State during the same period." The obligation to assume an equitable proportion of the said debt was again recognized in the first constitution of West Virginia, which was ratified by a vote of her people in 1863, and in which article eight, section eight provided as follows: "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, 1961, shall be assumed by this state; and the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a Sinking Fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years." The Constitution of West Virginia of 1872, contains these provisions, article ten, section four: "No debt shall be contracted by this State except to meet casual deficits in the revenue to redeem a previous liability of the State," etc., etc., and section five specifies that "The power of taxation of the Legislature shall extend to provisions for the payment of the State debt and interest thereon," etc.

3. The public debt of the original State of Virginia, at the time of the dismemberment, amounted to something more than 103 $30,000,000 no part of which has ever been borne by West Virginia, nor has any settlement or adjustment been made by West Virginia, either with the present State of West Virginia, or with the creditors of the original State, to ascertain what her liability might be with respect to said debt, but the whole of it has been left for adjustment to the people of the present State of Virginia.

4. It has been understood that West Virginia was not willing to negotiate directly with the creditors of the original State, and for that reason, and also in order to comply with the requirements of said act of March 6th, 1900, the deposit of said certificates of December 14th, 1904, was made with the Virginia Commission; so that the Commission with the Attorney General of Virginia are now authorized both on behalf of the State of Virginia, and also on behalf of a large majority of all certificate holders interested, to make a final settlement and adjustment of the matters above referred to, and thus finally conclude and dispose of questions which have been long left unsettled to the detriment, it is believed, of both States.

The undersigned only seek to present these matters to your Excellency and through you to the Legislature of your State, because they believe it to be their duty to their own State to do so; and while no accounting or adjustment in the premises has ever been had by West Virginia, either with Virginia or the creditors of the original State, yet inasmuch as the matters involved are now presented by the undersigned, with new and enlarged powers on their part to make and carry into effect a complete and final settlemnet between the States, it is hoped that the suggestions herein containd will receive favorable consideration and action on the part of your Excellency and the Legislature of your State.

Respectfully submitted.

104 ADDRESS

On Behalf of the Virginia Debt Commission

BEFORE

THE JOINT COMMITTEES ON FINANCE OF THE WEST VIRGINIA LEGISLATURE.

In Relation to West Virginia's Contributive Share of the Debt of Virginia.

By RANDOLPH HARRISON.

Charleston, West Virginia, February 1, 1905.

Mr. Chairman, and Gentlemen of the Finance Committees of the two Houses of the Legislature of West Virginia:

We had the honor a few days ago to present to His Excellency, the governor of West Virginia, a communication in behalf of the state of Virginia in relation to the unsettled matters between the two states, growing out of the debt created before the dismemberment of Virginia. We were officially advised that that communication had been transmitted to the legislature, and by it referred to the appropriate committees for further consideration.

We appear before you tonight in response to an invitation from the two finance committees of this body for the purpose of more fully stating the reasons which impel Virginia to invite your attention to this subject.

It gives us pleasure to avail ourselves of this opportunity to make known to you the object of our mission here.

In considering the question as to West Virginia's obligation to bear a just proportion of the public debt of Virginia, it will be necessary for us to review the origin of that debt, the manner in which and the purposes for which it was created, and West Virginia's relation to the subject.

Beginning with the year 1825 Virginia entered upon an extensive system of internal improvements. She had in mind the development of her western territory. Her statesmen had known for many years prior to that time that the territory now composing 105 the state of West Virginia contained immense resources of wealth, but there had been no definite ascertainment of that fact. They realized that it was essential, in order to ameliorate the condition of her people, who resided in that territory, and in the interest of all the people of Virginia, to develop that section, and establish communication between it and the Virginia seaboard. It was for this purpose that Virginia assumed the burden of a public debt. The development of this system of public improvements was progressive. During the first twenty-five years the debt had grown to about ten millions of dollars; between 1850 and 1861 it was increased by twenty millions of dollars. It is a matter of interest in passing to refer to the fact that the members of the Virginia legislature representing the counties that now compose this State unanimously voted to increase the debt. It is a notable fact that on several occasions it would not have been increased but for the united support of the delegates representing this section of the state, for the eastern and tidewater counties generally opposed the system of internal improvements which Virginia had undertaken. I do not mention this in any critical spirit; it was natural that the residents of this part of the state should want to develop their territory, and I am sure that any one similarly situated at that time would have been governed by the same considerations. The great argument advanced for the increase of the public debt was that, by the development of this section of the state by the construction of turnpikes, canals, bridges, railroads, etc., the wealth of Virginia would be so materially increased that she could bear the burden of the debt without feeling it. And so it came to pass that on the 1st of January, 1861, the public debt of Virginia amounted to about thirty millions of dollars, every dollar of which had been expended in works of internal improvements, the primary object of which was the development of this section of Virginia's territory.

On the 17th of April, 1861, the state of Virginia passed the ordinance of secession, withdrawing from the Union. Shortly thereafter, in the month of May, a number of citizens residing in 106 the town of Clarksburg, met together and called a convention to meet in Wheeling on the 11th of June following. That convention assembled in Wheeling, and organized what was known as the "Restored Government of Virginia." They ignored the government at Richmond, denounced it as revolutionary, and declared that it did not represent the state of Virginia. On June the 20th this convention elected Francis H. Pierpont governor of Virginia, and called a legislature together at Wheeling on July the 1st, 1861, which it declared to be the only true and lawful legislature of the state. This legislature, on July the 9th, elected two United States senators, and provision was made for the election of three congressmen. Both Houses of Congress admitted these members as from the State of Virginia.

A second convention assembled at Wheeling on the 20th of August, 1861. The "Restored Government of Virginia," having been previously organized, this convention, claiming to represent the state of Virginia, met for the purpose of "creating a new state," and on the 20th of August, 1861, it adopted an ordinance declaring it to be the sense of that convention that a new state should be formed "out of a portion of the territory of Virginia," and to embrace the counties specified in the ordinance.

This ordinance contained the following provision as the condition upon which the new state should be created:

"The new state shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all state expenditures within the limits thereof and a just proportion of the expenses of the state government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducing therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties within said new state during the same period."

This was the first step towards the formation of the state of West Virginia, and in taking this step it was expressly stipulated 107 that the old state would consent to her dismemberment only on condition that the State should assume a just proportion of her public debt.

This convention authorized delegates to be elected to another convention to assemble in Wheeling on the 26th day of November, 1961, for the purpose of forming a constitution for the new state in accordance with the terms of the ordinance of August the 20th. Accordingly a third convention, claiming to represent Virginia, assembled in Wheeling on November 26th, 1861, and prepared a constitution for the State of West Virginia, the eighth section of the eight article thereof providing as follows:

"An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accrued interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

This provision was adopted in pursuance of the binding ordinance of the organic convention of August the 20th, 1861; it not only pledged the new State to bear a just proportion of the public debt of Virginia, but required her Legislature to ascertain the same and provide for its payment. Does not that seem fair to you? It seems so to me. West Virginia had helped to create the debt, and reaped a share of its benefit. Do you not think in fairness and justice she ought to bear a just proportion of it, as she agreed to do?

On the 3rd of May, 1862, this constitution was submitted to the people of the counties composing the new State of West Virginia for ratification, and it was duly reported as ratified by a majority of the voters at the polls.

108 On the 13th of May 1862 the legislature of the "Restored Government of Virginia" passed an act giving Virginia's consent to the formation of the new state, "under the provisions set forth in the constitution for the state of West Virginia." By that act Virginia expressly stipulated that her consent was given "under the terms stated in the constitution of the state of West Virginia," and this constitution, as we have seen, expressly provided that the new state would bear "its just proportion of the debt of the old state."

The "Restored Government of Virginia" instructed her representatives and senators in Congress to use their influence in furtherance of the passage of an act to create the state of West Virginia.

On the 31st day of December 1862 the act was passed creating the state of West Virginia. The debates in Congress show that West Virginia would not have been admitted as a state but for her promise to bear a just proportion of the debt of the old state. A brief extract from the debates, when the bill providing for the admission of West Virginia was under consideration, will serve my purpose tonight:

Mr. OLIN: "I desire to ask what will become of the bonds and other obligations which Virginia has issued or incurred by the recognition of a new state?"

Mr. HUTCHINS: "I will answer my friend from New York. Here is the provision of the Constitution of West Virginia in reference to that matter: 'An equitable portion of the debt of Virginia prior to January the first, 1861, shall be assumed by this state, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable.'"

Mr. CRITTENDEN: "* * * There is another question; the state of Virginia owes a large debt. How is this debt to be divided?"

Mr. BLAIR: "The constitution framed by the convention of the people of the proposed new state binds the new state to pay its just proportion of the debt owed by Virginia prior to the ordinance of secession."

Mr. CRITTENDEN: "I only knew that in this bill there was 109 no provision made for a division of the said debt. The gentleman tells us there is provision made for it in the constitution, and I am satisfied with that. As it has been attended to, I have no more to say about it." (Extract from Congressional Globe, 37th Congress, quoted by Hon. J. M. Mason in pamphlet published by him on the subject of the Virginia debt.)

No one can doubt, therefore, that West Virginia owes her existence to her promise to bear a just proportion of the debt of the old state.

The act admitting West Virginia into the Union was signed, as I have stated, on the 31st day of December, 1862, and on June 20, 1863, in pursuance of the proclamation of the president, she took her place in the family of states.

I have given this sketch of the origin of the state of West Virginia in order to show that she is solemnly pledged to bear a just proportion of the debt of Virginia.

The constitution of West Virginia adopted in 1872 contains the following provisions relating to the public debt.

Article X, Sec. 4, provides that no debt shall be contracted except * * * to redeem a previous liability of the state; and sec. 5 provides that the power of taxation shall extend to provisions for the payment of the state debt and interest thereon. There was no public debt for West Virginia to provide for except her obligation to bear her just proportion of the debt of the state of Virginia.

The legislature of the "Restored Government of Virginia" on the 4th of February, 1863 passed an act transferring to the state of West Virginia all the property of the state of Virginia in the territory of the proposed new state, but on condition that West Virginia "should account for it in the settlement to be had with Virginia."

It is hardly necessary for me at this time to refer to the value of the property so transferred. Suffice it to say that by that act several millions of dollars worth of property was transferred to West Virginia; but the transfer was made on condition that West 110 Virginia should account for it in the settlement to be had with Virginia.

The stock owned by Virginia in banks alone situated within the territory of West Virginia amounted to several hundred thousand dollars, and in respect to this stock West Virginia, in her Constitution of 1863, authorized the legislature to dispose of the same, but expressly provided that the proceeds of such sale should be applied to the liquidation of the public debt; thereby again recognizing in her fundamental law her obligation to share with Virginia the burden of her public debt.

So, gentlemen, I think you must agree with me that West Virginia's obligation to pay a just proportion of the debt of Virginia is the foundation of her political existence. It is an essential part of the very Constitution under which Congress admitted her into the Union. West Virginia has not always been unmindful of her obligation and duty in this respect. After the war an effort was made by the two states to ascertain by negotiation the fair proportion of the old debt which each should bear. In February 1870 Virginia sent delegates to Wheeling, West Virginia, then the capital of this state, for the purpose of inviting the governor and legislature of West Virginia to unite with her in making a statement and settlement of this account. But the governor of West Virginia did not think the time opportune to deal with the subject because the suit between the two states involving the two counties of Jefferson and Berkeley had not then been decided. Soon thereafter the governor of West Virginia sent commissioners to Virginia with authority to state the account, but at that time Governor Walker of Virginia did not feel that he had authority to appoint commissioners, because the legislature of Virginia had in the meantime passed an act to submit the question to arbitration, and so nothing came of this effort to settle the controversy.

I am aware of the fact that at that time some feeling existed on the part of the commissioners of West Virginia as to the man-
111 ner in which they had been received by the authorities in Virginia; but it is, of course, difficult to determine at this distance the cause for any misunderstanding between those commissioners and Governor Walker. The records only show that the Governor of Virginia felt constrained to decline to appoint commissioners for the reason stated, and renewed his invitation to the State of West Virginia to submit the question to arbitration.

Again in recognition of West Virginia's obligation to Virginia in this matter, the Governor of West Virginia had this to say in a letter dated May 16, 1881:

"The people of this State are willing and anxious to adjust with the mother State the amount of their liability on account of the public debt. The liability can be readily ascertained when the mother state is willing to state the account with us. The convention of the State of Virginia held in Wheeling on the 20th of August, 1861, in giving its consent to the formation of this state out of the territory of the mother state, provided by Section IX of the ordinance passed that day as follows:

"The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the debt of Virginia prior to January 1, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all state expenditures within the limits thereof and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the state government since any part of said debt was contracted and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury from the counties included within the new state during the same period."

"The validity of this ordinance and the convention which passed the same has received the sanction of every department of the national government.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in a suit in that court instituted by the state of Virginia against West Virginia to 112 recover jurisdiction over the counties of Jefferson and Berkley, now a part of this state, adjudged said ordinance valid and binding. This state was admitted in pursuance of this ordinance. We admit it is binding authority, and hold ourselves ready at all times to settle with our mother state on that basis. Our obligation is to the mother state, and not to creditors of that state." (Extract from letter published by Hon. J. M. Mason in a pamphlet by him on the subject of the Virginia debt.

So, gentlemen, you perceive that the public authorities of West Virginia in the past fully acknowledged the binding obligation resting on your state to bear a just proportion of the debt. That obligation is none the less binding now than it was then.

Nothing having resulted from the efforts of the two states to ascertain and adjust their respective liabilities, Virginia felt obliged to make some arrangement for the funding of her debt. The war had intervened and left her prostrate and impoverished, but still she recognized her duty to make a fair adjustment with her creditors who had purchased her bonds when her credit was higher than that of any other state, and to that end, on the 30th of March, 1871, her Legislature enacted what is known as the Funding Bill.

By the terms of this act Virginia assumed responsibility for two-thirds of the Debt. The act provided that a new bond should be issued for two-thirds of each old bond, and that a certificate should be given to represent the other one-third, to bear interest at six per cent., and await payment until Virginia and West Virginia had come to a settlement; and Virginia agreed to hold the old bond, so far as unfunded, in trust for the holder of said certificate.

The debt of Virginia at that time, with interest added, amounted to about forty-five millions of dollars, of which Virginia assumed as her just proportion, two-thirds, or about thirty millions of dollars. The form of the certificate issued, as provided by the Funding Bill, was as follows:

Copy of Certificate under Act of March 30, 1871.

113 "COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

No. ——. $——.

TREASURER'S OFFICE, RICHMOND, VA.

"This is to certify that there is due unto —— —— heirs, executors, administrators or assigns $—, being one-third of bond surrendered under the provisions of an act approved March 30th, 1871, entitled 'An Act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt,' namely, Bond No. —, with interest amounting to $—. Payment of said one-third with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the state of Va. and W. Va. in regard to the public debt of the state of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment, and the State of Va. holds said bond so far as unfunded in trust for the holder hereof or his assigns.

"In testimony whereof this certificate has been signed by the Treasurer and countersigned by the Second Auditor, as provided by law.

"——— ———,
Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

"——— ———,
"Second Auditor of Virginia."

Under the foregoing act about fifteen million dollars of these certificates were issued, and the old bonds were delivered up and are now held by Va., so far as unfunded, in trust to secure the payment of said certificates. Those certificates do not in terms release Va. from liability for their payment; they clearly import that there would be a settlement between Va. and W. Va., and that they would be paid when such settlement was had. Va. undoubtedly intended that when a settlement was had the certificate holders must accept W. Va.'s share in full payment of the unsettled one-third of the debt; but under the form of the certificate in might be contended that Va. was liable for the difference between the face of the certificates and the amount ascertained to be due by W. Va. Hence you will observe that it is of the greatest importance to Virginia to bring about, if possible, a settlement of this controversy, not only because it 114 is a duty she owes the creditor, but especially for her own protection.

In 1879 the legislature of Virginia passed another act for the funding of her debt by which provision was made the issuance of new bonds to take the place of those outstanding. With the bonds so issued certificates were issued for the unsettled one-third of the debt similar in form to the certificates of 1871, with this important difference, namely, that it was expressly stipulated in the certificate that its acceptance should be a full and absolute release of Virginia from all liability on account of said certificates. While the certificates issued under the act of 1879 imposed no liability, therefore, on Virginia they nevertheless provided that Virginia would aid the creditors holding such certificates, or certificates issued under previous acts, in negotiating with West Virginia for a friendly settlement of the claims of such creditors against the State of West Virginia.

In 1882 a third act for the funding of Virginia's debt was passed and under that act the certificates issued to represent the unpaid one-third of the debt expressly provided that they should be accepted without recourse on Virginia for their payment. These certificates, therefore, like those issued under the act of 1879, impose no liability on Virginia.

By act approved on the 20th of February 1892 Virginia made a full and final settlement with her creditors and the certificates issued under this act, like those issued under acts of 1879 and 1882, expressly provided that they should be accepted without recourse on Virginia and hence they impose no liability on Virginia.

In as much as the unsettled one-third of the debt of the original state of Virginia is represented by the foregoing four classes of certificates, it becomes important to know the amount of those certificates outstanding.

The office of the second auditor of Virginia shows as fol-
115 lows in respect to these certificates:

Under the act of March 30, 1871, there were issued of these certificates	$15,281,970.47
Of these certificates Virginia holds in her sinking fund and in her literary fund	2,578,518.68
Leaving outstanding in the hands of the public of the certificates of March 30, 1871	$12,703,451.79

The foregoing certificates do not in terms release Virginia from liability for their payment.

Under the act of March 28, 1879, there were issued, and are outstanding in the hands of the public, certificates amounting to	$564,258.87
Under the act of February 14, 1882, there were issued of these certificates	1,775,603.48
Of these certificates Virginia holds in her sinking fund	166,943.33
Leaving outstanding in the hands of the public	$1,609,660.15
Under the act of February 20, 1892, there were issued certificates outstanding in the hands of the public	$605,320.78

The three last mentioned classes of certificates were issued and accepted without recourse on Virginia.

The total issue of certificates, therefore, representing the unpaid one-third of the debt of the original state of Virginia is	$18,227,153.60
Of that amount Virginia holds in her sinking fund and in her literary fund	2,745,465.01
Leaving outstanding in the hands of the public of all classes of certificates	$15,481,691.59

A debt or claim of that magnitude cannot be disposed of by ignoring it, or attempting to waive it aside. The only way to dispose finally of it is to settle it.

Realizing the importance to her own interests of bringing about a friendly settlement of the matter, and in fulfillment of her promise to the creditors to aid in bringing it about Virginia, by 116 resolution of March 6, 1894, appointed commissioner- for the purpose of negotiating with West Va. for an adjustment of the proportion of the debt proper to be borne by her.

In January 1895 Governor O'Ferrell of Virginia communicated a copy of that resolution to Governor McKorkle of W. Va. No response was ever made by W. Va., but we learned through the press that your legislature declined to negotiate with Va. on the basis stated in the resolution creating her commission. We think the purpose and intent of that resolution was misunderstood, but at all events, nothing was done.

Subsequently, by an act of the General Assembly of Va., approved March 6, 1900, the powers of this commission were materially enlarged and the commission was authorized under the terms stated in the act to conclude a settlement with W. Va. or to take such action to that end as might be approved by the attorney general of Va. Under the provisions of this act the commission, acting by and with the advice and approval of the attorney general of Va., is fully empowered to make final settlement with W. Va., provided at least two-thirds of the certificates of 1871 and a majority of all the other certificates outstanding in the hands of the public were deposited with or placed subject to the control of the commission. The requirements of that act have been complied with in a manner which far exceeded our most sanguine expectations, for there have been deposited, subject to the control of the commission, more than five-sixths of the entire issue of the certificates. This unexpected and desirable result has been brought about through the instrumentality of Brown Brothers & Co., bankers of New York, the agents of the certificate holders' committee. The standing of this house is doubtless known to you, or certainly to many of you; it does not engage in "frenzied finance," but on the contrary it is known as one of the most reliable and responsible firms in the financial world.

Through the agency of Brown Bros. Co. more than five-sixths of all the certificates outstanding in the hands of the public have been assembled and are held on deposit subject to the control of 117 the Virginia commission under an agreement with the owners of those certificates to accept whatever may be received from West Virginia in full discharge of the unsettled one-third of the debt of Virginia.

Of the certificates of 1871 outstanding in the hands of the public (amounting to $12,703,451.79) Brown Bros. & Company now hold $10,639,776.42.

Of the certificates of 1879 outstanding in the hands of the public (amounting to $564,258.87) Brown Bros. & Company now hold $440,642.61.

Of the certificates of February 14, 1882, outstanding in the hands of the public (amounting to $1,608,660.15) Brown Bros. & Company now hold $1,285,680.55.

Of the certificates of February 20, 1892, outstanding in the hands of the public (amounting to $605,320.78) Brown Bros. & Company now hold $544,456.31.

The aggregate amount of all certificates held by Brown Bros. & Company is, therefore, $12,910,555.89.

The Virginia commission has full power and authority to deliver up those certificates as an entirety to be cancelled upon payment by West Virginia of whatever may be ascertained to be her just proportion of the debt of Virginia—be it much or little. We stand ready, of course, to exhibit the evidence of the deposit of those certificates with us to the proper authorities of West Virginia.

The contract under which these certificates are deposited subject to the control of the Virginia Commission, will expire in September 1905 unless, in the meantime, negotiations for a settlement, or some action looking to that end, have been undertaken.

At a meeting of the Virginia commission held in Richmond on December 14, 1904, a sub-committee was appointed who, together with the attorney general of Virginia, were requested to communicate these facts to the governor and legislature of West Virginia, 118 and invite their co-operation in a friendly adjustment and settlement of the account between the two states. Our visit here is in discharge of the duty assigned us. Do not imagine that Virginia has the slightest intention of meddling with the affairs of West Virginia, or of volunteering advice. She has ventured to bring the subject to your attention in compliance with her undertaking to the creditors, and especially because her own interests are involved. Virginia felt that she would be derelict in her duty to herself and in her duty to your state if she failed to bring to your notice the exceptional opportunity now presented to dispose finally of this vexatious question.

Is these any reason why West Virginia should not join Virginia in stating this account? I am sure, gentlemen, you can not dissent from the proposition that your state is liable for some part of the debt, whatever the amount may be. As far as it is possible for a state to be committed by the solemn provisions of its organic law and by the repeated declarations of its public authorities, West Virginia is bound—bound in equity and good conscience—to bear whatever may be ascertained to be her fair proportion of the debt of Virginia. No account has ever been stated between the two states. How, then, can West Virginia declare that she owes no part of this debt until the account is stated? She is solemnly pledged to state this account. Ought she not to redeem this pledge? No state can refuse to do what is fair and right in respect to her public obligations and not suffer for it. We do not ask that West Virginia shall commit herself as liable in any specific amount. We make no claim against her for any definite sum. We do not know what a statement of the account will show; if it shows that West Virginia is not liable for any amount, that will end the matter. We only ask that your state will, through the proper authorities, unite with Virginia in stating the account between the two states in order that the question of her 119 liability, if any, may be authoritatively ascertained. The work of your commission will, of course, be subject to such action as West Virginia might deem proper in the premises.

Would any one of you, if a man thought he had an honest claim against you, be afraid to meet him and consider it with him? Then why should you hesitate to commit your state to the same course in this respect which you as an individual would not hesitate to take?

West Virginia has always taken the position that her li-bility on account of this debt was to Virginia and not to the creditors, and that her liability must be ascertained on the basis of the Wheeling ordinance. This ordinance not only committed West Virginia to bear her just proportion of the debt of Virginia, but states how the account shall be stated in order to ascertain the amount of the debt for which West Virginia is liable. We are ready to unite with you in stating the account on the basis of the Wheeling ordinance, or West Virginia may choose any other just and equitable basis, if she prefers, on which the account shall be stated, and we will abide by her choice. We have no interest whatever in this matter except to discharge our duty to our state by bringing about, if possible, a fair and final settlement of this controversy. Unless the two states can dispose of it we may confidently expect it to be referred to the courts for settlement, and in that event the decision of the court has already been plainly foreshadowed. In the case of Hartman v. Greenhow (decided October term, 1880), 102 U. S., page 672, the Supreme Court reviewed the legislation of Virginia in relation to her public debt, and in referring to West Virginia's liability for a portion of it the court, through Justice Field, had this to say:

"It appears from the statutes to which we are referred—and we know the fact as a matter of public history—that prior to the late civil war Virginia had become largely indebted for moneys borrowed to construct public works in the state. The moneys were obtained upon her bonds, which were issued to an amount 120 exceeding $30,000,000. Being the obligation of a state of large wealth, which never allowed its fidelity to its promises to be questioned anywhere, the bonds found a ready sale in the markets of the country. Until the civil war the interest on them was regularly and promptly paid. Afterwards the payments ceased, and until 1871, with the exception of a few small sums remitted in coin during the war to London for foreign bondholders, or paid in Virginia in Confederate money, and a small amount paid in 1866 and 1867, no part of the interest or principal was paid. During the war a portion of her territory was separated from her, and by its people a new state, named West Virginia, was formed, and by the Congress of the United States was admitted into the Union. Nearly one-third of her territory and people were thus taken from her jurisdiction. But, as the whole state had created the indebtedness for which the bonds were issued, and participated in the benefits obtained by the moneys raised, it was but just that a portion of the indebtedness should be assumed by that part which was taken from her and made a new state. Writers on public law speak of the principle as well established that where a state is divided into two or more states, in the adjustment of liabilities between each other, the debts of the parent state should be ratably apportioned among them. On this subject Kent says: "If a state should be divided in respect to territory, its rights and obligations are not impaired; and if they have not been apportioned by special agreement, their rights are to be enjoyed and their obligations fulfilled by all the parts in common." (I Com., 26.) And Halleck, speaking of a state divided into two or more distinct and independent sovereignties, says: In that case the obligations which have accrued to the whole before the division are, unless they have been the subject of a special agreement, ratably binding upon the different parts. This principle is established by the concurrent opinions of text writers, the decisions of the courts, and the practice of nations." (Internat. L., ch. 3, sec. 27.)

"In conformity with the doctrine thus stated by Halleck, both states—Virginia and West Virginia—have recognized in their constitutions their respective liability for an equitable proportion of the old debt of the state, and have provided that measures should be taken for its settlement * * *

"The Constitution of West Virginia, which went into effect in 1863, declared that "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January 1861," should "be assumed" by the state, and that the legislature should "ascertain the same as soon as practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years." (Art 8, sec. 8.)"

Virginia lost by the formation of the state of West Virginia one-third of her territory and more than one-third of her white population. To that extent she was deprived of possessions which belonged to her when the debt was contracted. Suppose fifty of the remaining counties of Virginia should decide to organize themselves into a new state to be called "Eastern Virginia;" would you say it was fair and right for them to do so and take the public property within their borders, and leave the remaining counties constituting the state of Virginia to bear the burden of a debt created for the benefit 121 of the whole? The Supreme Court of the United States has, as we have just seen, answered that question in the negative, and I am sure your sense of justice would impel you also to answer

"No." In that event you could not justify West Virginia in declining to bear a just proportion of the debt of the mother state.

Another decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has an important bearing on the liability of the two states on account of this debt. I refer to the recent decision of South Dakota against North Carolina (decided February 1, 1904), 192 U. S., page 286. North Carolina had issued certain bonds which were outstanding in the hands of purchasers. She declined to make provision for their payment, feeling that she was justified in that course. In order to test the liability of North Carolina a holder of a large amount of those bonds donated ten of them of the face value of $10,000.00 principal to the state of South Dakota, with the understanding that South Dakota, would institute suit against North Carolina to enforce payment. An individual cannot sue a state, but the right of one state to sue another is expressly preserved by the Constitution of the United States. South Dakota accepted the gift and instituted suit in the Supreme Court of the United States against North Carolina, and the court gave judgment against North Carolina for the amount of the bonds with accrued interest.

If when the contract under which we hold control of the certificates expires nothing has been done looking to a settlement, and those certificates should be released and restored to the owners, it may prove to be the opening of a veritable Pandora's box. Under the authority of the South Dakota–North Carolina case, the attempt might be made to enforce collection of this debt by donating some of the certificates of the issue of 1871 to a state on condition that a suit should be instituted against Virginia and West Virginia to compel the statement of the account between them, and the payment of the liability apportioned to each one. We are reliably 122 informed that the governor of one of the states has already been approached with an offer to donate to his state $100,000.00 of those certificates on condition that he would cause such a suit to be instituted. He declined, but some other governor might not be influenced by as delicate sense of propriety.

We feel that these considerations should appeal strongly to you to unite with Virginia in the effort to make a friendly settlement of this matter. Surely the two states can make a far better settlement than the courts can make for them. If we do not take the matter in our own hands the only alternative is a settlement by compulsion. Resolutions that we do not owe anything will not avail. The holders of a debt amounting to about fifty millions of dollars will not be satisfied with your statement or with ours that we do not owe it. Unless your state will join Virginia in the effort to dispose finally of this question, you may rest assured that, like Cæsar's ghost, it will meet you at Philippi. The unsettled one-third of this debt now amounts to about fifty millions of dollars. No one can say what the extent of West Virginia's liability will be if the controversy is settled in court, but I will venture the assertion that in a friendly adjustment, it is entirely probable that we can effect a settlement within one-tenth of that sum. In this connection I cannot forbear a reference to what Virginia has done towards bearing the burden of this debt. The records of the office of the second auditor of Virginia show the following amounts paid by Virginia on account of the public debt of the old state since January 1, 1861:

123	Amount of interest paid from January 1, 1861, to January, 1905.....		$34,551,642 85
	Bonds now held in sinking fund..	$1,111,500 00
	Bonds paid off and cancelled.....	8,863,994 49
			9,975,441 49
	Total of interest and bonds paid off.....		$45,527,134 34
	New bonds of Virginia issued for portion of debt funded and assumed by her.....		26,850,820 00
	Total sum of principal and interest paid off and assumed and now carried by Virginia on account of the old debt.....		$72,377,954 34

From the foregoing you will observe that the public debt of Virginia is now $26,850,820.00, and on this sum she pays an annual interest charge of $877,862.27. (Report of the second auditor of Virginia for 1904 in relation to the public debt.)

Do you not think that Virginia has borne here share of this common burden, especially in view of the trials and adversity through which she has passed? During four long years she withstood the shock of battle, and came out of that trying ordeal crushed, impoverished and dismembered. Then followed the night of reconstruction, when for five years she endured the bitterness and humiliation of military rule. But so soon as she regained control of her own affairs she met her creditors and, in spite of her poverty, endeavored to do her duty by them.

In adjusting her liability with her creditors and providing for its payment she has done all that she could do, and no more could be expected of her. The trials and sacrifices through which she has passed have left no trace of bitterness—least of all does she cherish any resentment against her youngest daughter. On the contrary, she rejoices in the wealth and power with which a benignant Providence has blessed you. She only appeals to you not to let pass the present golden opportunity to finally dispose of the only remaining question in connection with her public debt. She earnestly hopes that her suggestion will commend itself to your good judgment, and that your legislature will authorize the appointment of commissioners, with power to co-operate with us in stating the account between the two states. If, however, your action shall be unfavorable, Virginia will feel that she has done her duty, and that responsibility for the consequences will not lie at her door.

In taking leave of you, gentlemen, I cannot refrain, on behalf of myself and associates, including the attorney general, an eminent citizen of my state, from expressing to you our sincere appreciation of the cordial reception accorded us here not only by His Excellency, your governor, but by your committees to-night. I can assure you that whatever may be the result of our mission, we will recall with pleasure the considerate attention you have shown us.

125 Memorandum of agreement, made this 14th. day of December, 1904, between the Depositing Committee of the securities known as the Virginia Deferred Certificates as constituted under the contract of July 28th, 1898, and of which John Crosby Brown is Chairman, and Robert L. Harrison, Secretary, acting under the plan of settlement approved on December 3rd. 1902, by the Advisory Board referred to in the said contract, hereinafter referred to as the Depositing Committee, party of the first part, and the Commission constituted on behalf of the State of Virginia for the purpose of bringing about a settlement with the State of West Virginia with respect to said certificates as constituted and acting under the joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, approved March 6, 1894, and the act of said General Assembly, approved March 6, 1900 and of which John B. Moon is Chairman, and Joseph Button is Secretary hereinafter referred to as the Virginia Commission, party of the second part:

Whereas, by an agreement entered into between the above parties on the 18th day of September, 1902, certain of the certificates aforesaid amounting in the aggregate to $10,347,570.85 were tendered by the Depositing Committee Aforesaid to the said Virginia Commission, and were placed subject to the control of the said Commission upon the agreement and arrangement on the part of the said Commission acting for the State of Virginia under the said joint resolution and Act of Assembly aforesaid, that the said Commission should enter into negotiations with the State of West Virginia or the constituted authorities thereof for the purpose of effecting with West Virginia a settlement with respect to the said certificates, in accordance with the said contract of July 28th. 1898, and in accordance with such plan of settlement as was then proposed or might thereafter become effective, and that the said Commission would, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, take such action as they might deem needful in the premises; and that in the event such a settlement was so made, then it
